Sprinklers protect Anderson from fire

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Administrators and office workers are conducting business as usual in Anderson Hall after a fire Friday that caused an estimated $1 million to $1.5 million in damages.

The fire began when lightning struck the roof of the south tower at about 3:45 a.m.

Larry Reese, fire chief of the Manhattan Fire Department, said the building's sprinkler system caused extensive water damage to the east side of the second floor.

Even so, it saved the building from destruction.

"The fire chief told me that without the sprinkler system, the building would've gone up in smoke," Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said.

Craig Goodman, senior in art, was in the Fairchild Hall computer lab when the lights went out Friday morning.

"I went to the top of Fairchild to look at the rest of the campus," Goodman said. "We saw a bright light and heard a fizzle."

Once the fire was out, firefighters began the work of covering office furniture with plastic and cleaning up the damaged areas.

Rawson said all three floors at the south end of the building suffered water damage. This area includes the Controller's Office and Wefald's office.

Six weeks ago, the state Department of Administration purchased an insurance policy for all state buildings.

Because the damage estimates fall below the policy's $2-million deductible, Rawson said the University will handle and finance the repairs.

Rawson said in September the University will ask the Kansas Board of Regents for an emergency supplemental appropriation for fiscal year 1994.

It could be April or May before the University finds out if the appropriation will be approved, Rawson said.

In the meantime, special maintenance projects on campus such as re-roofing Ahearn Field House will be placed on hold until the appropriation is decided on, he said.

The south side of Anderson Hall will remain closed for four to six weeks, Rawson said.

"Aside from that, we hope it'll be business as usual," he said.

Cover-up

Manhattan firefighters and K-State facilities workers cover the south tower of Anderson Hall with a tarp after it was struck by lightning Friday morning. Lightning struck the tower at about 3:45 a.m., causing a fire. In addition to fire damage, some of the building was damaged by rain and water from the building's sprinkler system.

Repairs, clean-up needed after rain

KRISTI STAPLETON

Heavy summer rains caused a total of $100,000 in damages to some campus buildings.

It will cost the University more than $70,000 to fix the steam tunnels, which are extremely susceptible to water under the campus, Randy Slover, head of campus facilities, said.

Pipe insulation and telephone lines were damaged severely, he said.

Water seeped into the telephone jacks, which affected the telecommunication systems in Kedzie, Nichols and Fairchild halls, Slover said.

Slover said most buildings had water seeping under doors, into window wells and through gratings.

Gene Wiley, maintenance department head of the residence halls, said this is normal for the excessive amount of rain the Manhattan area has received in such a short period of time.

"Most of the low buildings have their drains back up, and there is always slight mold and mildew problems," he said.

With students moving into the residence halls, all rain damage has been cleaned up, Wiley said.

The only project that remains to be completed is repairing the peeling paint in Smurthwaite and Edwards halls, he said.

"The residents know that we will be coming into the halls to patch the spots where paint has peeled off," Wiley said.

"There was a lot of run-off from the tennis courts north of Edwards, and all that water ended up in their basement and study rooms," he said. "This caused large amounts of mildew in the carpet, chairs, on pipes."

Although most of the standing water from lower floors and basements has been cleaned up using wet/dry vacuums, a few buildings suffered extensive damage.

McCain Auditorium was the campus building with the most standing water in its basement, Slover said.

"We opened the door to the lowest storage room in the basement and saw six feet of water," he said. "It was a mess. There were items floating everywhere."

Parts of McCain have been flooded more often than any other area on campus, Slover said. The radio center has been flooded at least three times in the past two months, he said.

Justin Hall also suffered water damage. Storage areas in the basement had standing water, but not many items were damaged.

Water collected on Kedzie Hall's roof, which leaked into the political science department's office and the main office of Student Publications Inc.

As the rain became heavier, tornadic winds blew parts of the roof off, which caused ceiling tiles to crack. Water then flooded both of the offices.

Strong winds blew sections of the roof of Ahearn Field House off. Rain came through and drenched parts of the floor.

Seaton, Durland, Eisenhower, Holtz and Thompson halls all had slight water problems, ranging from water seeping under doors into the lower floors to clogged window wells. All buildings developed mold and mildew problems.

Not even President Jon Wefald could escape the torrential rains. The water seeped through the foundation of his home into the basement and damaged the carpet.

Editor strives to work for readers, not against

JULIE LONG

Welcome to the first issue of the K-State Collegian for the fall 1993 semester. It is an unwritten rule that as editor, I must write the traditional welcome-back-to-school column. Well, here goes.

I often heard complaints about the Collegian from my friends, classmates and even my co-workers that there is nothing they want to read in the paper. Last semester I bugged my editor to let me find out what you, the students, wanted to read. He agreed, and I began to work on a way to do this. We began to survey students.

We set up tables around campus to try to talk to as many students as possible in a short amount of time. These surveys were not professionally done, so I can't tell you the margin of error and tabulated percentages of each answer to each question. That wasn't my goal. It was to get the Collegian staff out of Kedzie Hall and to listen to you, the students. I wanted them to hear what you thought of the Collegian and what changes you wanted to see.

I have listed the Top 10 topics you said you would like to see more of in the Collegian. This semester we have worked to change our content to include more of what you want to read. Many of these stories will have the "Seeking the Students" logo that you see in the graphic.

Many students told us the Collegian was the only newspaper they read, and they missed a lot of world and national news because we didn't have many stories on world events. We have redesigned page 2 to include world, national and regional briefs. These will be shorter stories, but they will highlight the important events and issues happening outside K-State.

We are working also to adjust our news coverage to include the issues you told us you were most interested in reading.

Our entertainment page has been enlarged and rearranged. (I never realized how important it was to have the crossword in a place where you can fold it easily.) We have also renamed the page. Instead of "Essentials" we are calling it "Class Diversions." Somehow, it just seemed to be a more realistic name.

Also, we have added a few things to this page. Too often in the past, A&E stories were cut because of space. As managing editor, I was the one who often had to cut these stories, so I decided I needed to find a way to fix that. Now there is a daily arts-and-entertainment story on the diversions page.

We have also added daily horoscopes. These are written by members of the Collegian staff. We have tried to make them a little more suited to college students. They will also try to keep the horoscopes on the zany side.

I want you to remember the Collegian is your newspaper. Student Publications Inc., of which the Collegian is a part, is an independent corporation. The Collegian is student-run. This means all content decisions rest in the hands of the student editors. We decide what stories will appear in the newspaper.

The editor in chief answers to the Board of Student Publications and not to the University president. I guess what I am trying to say is you will see things in the Collegian that may make some people over in Anderson Hall groan, but because of the way we are set up, they cannot censor us, although they may want to some times. (Just kidding, Jon.)

To help you in your reading of the Collegian and your dealings with our staff, we have included two pages of graphics and information. This can be found on Pages 13 and 14.

If you have any questions, office hours for each editor are listed, or give us a call at 532-6556.

I hope you enjoy the Collegian.

Listed below are the top 10 issues students said they were most concerned about when they were surveyed during the spring 1993 semester.

LONE GUNMAN KILLS 10

■ GERMISTON, South Africa (AP) — A man with an AK-47 assault rifle opened fire at a factory outside Johannesburg on Sunday, killing at least 10 people and wounding 21, police said.

The motive for the killings was not known. Police Capt. Wikus Weber said officers scoured the area around the Scaw Metals factory for the killer.

Ephraim Masuku, who was visiting his father at the factory, said the victims were members of a church group having a meeting outside a food stand where factory workers spend their lunch breaks.

Bloody bodies lay strewn across the cement ground outside the huge factory building. Most of the victims were sitting outside the food stand on the factory grounds.

ATTACK KILLS FIVE

■ ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Former Prime Minister Kasdi Merbah, who once headed Algeria's powerful political police, and four others were killed in an ambush while driving in a resort town east of the capital, police said Sunday.

Merbah, his son, brother, chauffeur and bodyguard were attacked Saturday night in Alger-Plage, where Merbah has a vacation residence, the state-run radio said. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The attack comes amid a guerrilla war being waged by Islamic extremists seeking to topple the military-backed leaders of the North African nation.

NEBRASKAN CITY FLOODED

■ ANSELMO, Neb. (AP) — Heavy rain on the already saturated Sandhills region caused street and basement flooding Sunday in the center of Nebraska.

"The town hasn't had a flood like this in 50 years," Gary Heilbrun, assistant volunteer fire chief, said. "Some old-timers talk about running canoes down Main Street. But I've been here since 1978, and it's never been like this."

On the northern Plains, thunderstorms dumped as much as 7 inches of rain on northeastern Montana, flooding some roads.

U.S. SOLDIERS WOUNDED

■ WASHINGTON (AP) — Six U.S. soldiers were slightly wounded Sunday when an explosion damaged their truck as it traveled in a convoy of other military vehicles in Somalia, officials said.

Maj. Dave Stockwell, a spokesman for the United Nations operation in Somalia, said the soldiers suffered only superficial wounds.

There were some "bumped knees and elbows, no broken bones, some ringing in the ears, but no broken eardrums," he said, adding that the soldiers had been treated at the American hospital at the U.S. Embassy and released.

LA TRIES TO EASE TENSIONS

■ LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police have asked school administrators to be their eyes and ears as they prepare for possible trouble during the trial of two black men accused of beating a white trucker during last year's riots after the Rodney King trial.

"I personally feel that the Denny trial has every bit the same potential, and perhaps even a greater potential for civil unrest, as the trial of the four officers in the Rodney King case," Lewis said.

"We need to depend upon you to listen to the response by students, especially in the high schools, and let us know what you hear," he said.

School administrators responded positively.

"These are important meetings," Superintendent Sid Thompson said. "This helps us find the safest ways to bring young people in and out of school."

Opening statements in the trial were last week, and testimony is to begin Monday.

Damian Williams, 20, and Henry Watson, 28, are accused of attempted murder and other crimes in assaults on Denny and seven other people.

MARKETING THE MORBID

■ LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles County Coroner's Office has its own little shop of horrors where it markets the morbid — from personalized toe tags to skeleton tote bags.

The gift shop called Skeletons in the Closet also sells T-shirts, coffee mugs and other morgue souvenirs. Proceeds go to a program aimed at scaring youths away from drinking and driving.

"Bodies and death are our business. We're just trying to take advantage of it," said Marilyn Lewis, the coroner's new marketing program coordinator.

The $4 personalized toe tags, used to identify cadavers, are the real things, she said.

The marketing push has raised $15,000 over the past year for a program that brings convicted 16- to 21-year-old drunken drivers to the morgue for a firsthand look at the deadly effects of roadway intoxication.

2-YEAR-OLD CORPSE FOUND

■ MAPLE HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — A woman found dead last week in the house she shared with her son died of natural causes two years ago, the coroner's office ruled.

Deputy Coroner Robert C. Challener said Saturday there was no evidence of foul play in the death of 83-year-old Lillian Loser.

Loser's son, Herbert Loser, 58, was arrested Friday on a misdemeanor charge of failure to report a corpse. Loser indicated his only income was his mother's Social Security checks, Mayor Santo Incorvaia said.

Loser told neighbors his mother was alive, but they became concerned after not seeing her and notified authorities.

When social workers would call, Loser would carry on pretend conversations with his mother, "And then he'd send the people away, saying she didn't want to see anybody," police officer Douglas Stolarski said.

On Friday, social workers obtained a search warrant, and police wearing oxygen masks entered the house.

Lightning strikes historic ornament

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The lightning that struck Anderson Hall early Friday morning twisted and bent the copper spire on the south tower as if it had been a tinfoil Christmas star.

The ornament, decorated with a crown and four stars that point in each direction, is a replica of the original spires that have adorned Anderson Hall since its completion in 1884, said John Kent, shop manager for the Department of Facilities.

The original spires, made of galvanized metal, deteriorated over the years and were reproduced using copper, Kent said.

Because Anderson Hall is listed in the National Register of Historic Places, the damaged spire must either be repaired or replaced to maintain its original design, Kent said. He said the spire will be replaced as soon as possible.

Skyler Harper, associate University architect, said he didn't know if the spires had any symbolic meaning, but were probably designed to complement ornate carvings.

Kent said the replica was built by facilities staff members in the campus metal shop.

"They did a good job on it," Harper said.

"They were really proud of it."

Archives reveal past fires on campus

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Aug. 3, 1934. Denison Hall, then a chemistry building, was destroyed by a fire of unknown origin. The loss was estimated at $112,000. The structure was replaced by Willard Hall, which was completed in 1939 at a cost of more than $700,000.

Feb. 19, 1946. The Veterinary Hospital was damaged by a fire of unknown origin. The Kansas Legislature appropriated $100,000 to repair the damage.

Aug. 28, 1955. A stone animal husbandry barn was destroyed by a fire of unknown origin. The Kansas Legislature appropriated $100,000 to repair the damage.

Aug. 25, 1957. The east wing of Waters Hall was destroyed by a fire of unknown origin. The loss was estimated at $1.5 million.

Jan. 15, 1965. Memorial Auditorium was destroyed by fire. It had been built in 1904 at a cost of $40,000.

Dec. 13, 1968. Nichols Gymnasium was destroyed by a fire that state fire marshal Arthur Ramey said was caused by arson. The Kansas Legislature appropriated $1.5 million in 1983 to begin the reconstruction. Another appropriation of $5.8 million in 1984 allowed for the project's completion. Nichols Hall, home to the computer science and speech departments, was rededicated on Nov. 16, 1985.

HEY LADIES!
Did you know that K-State has a Women's Rugby team?

Team achievements since it's start in 1989:

*2 consecutive undefeated seasons,1991-92
*Attended National Rugby Tournament in May 1993
*Boasts 4 members to the Eagles (the USA National Women's Rugby team)
*Holds 6 first place and 2 second place trophies from tournaments since 1989.

Did you also know that most of the lady ruggers have had no rugby experience before coming to Manhattan?

If you love competition, social activities, meeting people, and traveling, you should attend the K-State Women's Rugby meeting on August 24 at 7:00pm in the K-State Union, room 205. (previous members will be meeting at 6:30). Or if you can not make this meeting, please call 539-5562.

EDITORIAL

Gun smarts, not gun control, is the issue

The recent shooting death of James Jordan, father of Chicago Bulls basketball star Michael Jordan, has hit a sensitive point in the American psyche.

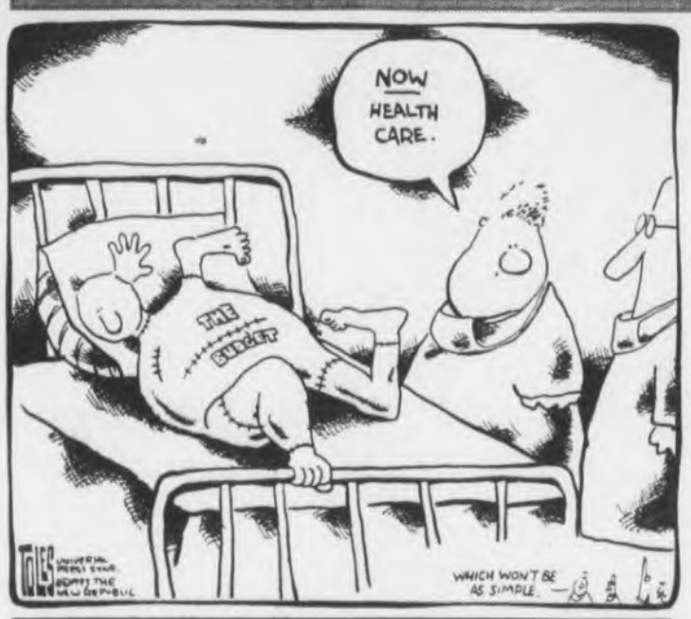
Instead of an unfamiliar name and face getting gunned down, it's as though our next-door neighbor was killed. One would only see this much furor over a death if it were a president or sports star.

A national epidemic has hit home. Another person shot to death in a society that seemingly places little value on a human life. It's time to treat the problem as a disease — preventing it before it spreads any further.

Outlawing guns is not the answer. Restrictions are needed, however, for nowhere does anyone need a fully automatic assault rifle for home defense. But more than this, teaching our children to respect life and understand guns is the first proper step.

Now we see Dr. George Tiller, a Wichita abortion doctor, wounded by Rachelle Shannon. Now we see Masakazu Kuriyama, a Japanese exchange student, shot twice in the back of the head in Concord, Calif. The list goes on and on.

America prides itself on being the most advanced society in the world. We guarantee unparalleled freedoms. But now the world scoffs at our violence as we haggle over gun laws and more people die each day.



The cards are on the table, and the stakes are rising.

It's time for definitive actions, such as tighter restrictions on gun sales and stricter education on what it means to kill and the consequences.

Guns don't kill people. People kill people. Until this is understood, the problems will only get worse, not better.

This page is for the students to speak their minds.

Picture, if you will, all the editors of the Collegian gathered in a large circle, trying to come up with a list of goals for this semester's paper. There's the usual fare: improve writing, more graphics and pictures, better coverage of events, etc.

As we go around the circle, we finally arrive to my spot, where I gaze pensively up into the air.

"I'd have to say that my primary goal is to piss off as many people as possible." My editor nearly spits our her pop, the rest of the group chuckling at my obviously sarcastic answer.

JARED SAVAGE

"No, seriously folks. I mean, what is the primary mission of the opinion page?" Someone suggested that the best opinion page is one that, after you read it, you hurl it to the floor in anger and stomp on it repeatedly until it reverts back to wood pulp.

Receiving the majority of angry calls in the newsroom and wading through the piles of disagreeing letters wouldn't appeal to most people.

What is our primary mission? All too often, opinion pages exist merely to provoke emotional responses out of the public readership with little thought given to possible consequences.

They are branded either liberal or conservative, pro-choice or pro-life, pro-Clinton or pro-whoever.

With this in mind, I set out this semester to try and cover as broad a spectrum of opinions as possible. I began with the foregone conclusion that K-State is a place of educated people who will at least listen to an opinion before they condemn it. Further, if people will hear no other opinions but their own, I would hope that they support their conclusions in a logical and definitive manner. I am excited at the diversity of columnists we have this semester.

For the conservatives, we have John Hart returning. To balance this out, Brad Seabourn will be banging away from the other side of the Opinion Wall.

And for everyone else in the middle, well, rest assured the other columnists will do their best to fill in here.

We're doing things differently this semester. We are asking non-Collegian types to apply to our editorial board and add to the multitude of ideas.

Every editor of the paper has his or her picture and a job description displayed prominently on page 15. Page 14 also gives some graphic information about the page.

Hence, if you have any questions or concerns, you know where we are and what we look like. Come talk to us anytime.

We also need and want letters. Though it may not seem like it, we do try to get as many in as possible. Sometimes, a number of people respond to the same issue. When this happens, we pick the best of the letters and print as many of them as space allows for.

NEIL ANDERSON

I guarantee that if you read this page, you'll get angry more than once. By the same token, you'll also read things that fit your own philosophy. But please remember that this is an opinion page, not the quagmire of Satan.

If it weren't for the diversity of opinions, even the ones you don't agree with, the world would be a very boring place indeed.

So let us all work together to make the world a less boring place. Send in all your letters and your guest columns. Call us up and speak your mind if you don't have the time to write us. We may not get it all printed this semester, but rest assured that it will at least be seriously considered.

THE VALUE OF LIFE

BY ALLOWING GIDEON TO LIVE, THE STATE IS EFFECTIVELY TREASURING GIDEON'S LIFE, A LIFE THAT DEVALUES ALL LIFE.

The missing person's flier of Stephanie Schmidt, a fellow graduate from Blue Valley North High School in Overland Park, stared back at me as I drove through the Lawrence I-70 toll booth in early July.

Two weeks later, the flier remained in the window of the toll-booth, but Gideon's face was scratched out. He had turned himself in shortly after viewing a segment about the case on "America's Most Wanted."

Every day since Schmidt was reported missing on July 1, thousands of people in our community and myself scanned the newspapers wondering were she could be, always hoping she was safe.

A few days later, hope died. Authorities discovered Schmidt's body on July 27 in a field near Pittsburg, Kan.

After complaining of a sore throat, Stephanie left a Frontenac, Kan., bar with a fellow restaurant employee, Donald Ray Gideon — a trip she never would have made had Kansas law allowed the records of previous sex offenders to be made public.

Probably within the next hour, Schmidt died after being sexually assaulted and strangled. In that final hour of her young life, perhaps seconds turned into hours, and the hour passed like days. I can only pray that wasn't the case.

What makes Schmidt's death even more tragic is that she was murdered by a repeat violent sex offender.

In a 1982 case, Gideon, then 21, was sentenced to serve 20 years for rape and aggravated sodomy. He was released last November after serving only 10 years. Kansas law mandated his release because he had served half of his maximum sentence. Those persons close to the case felt uneasy about Gideon's release.

JOHN HART

Gary L. Baldwin, Parsons police chief and investigative detective in the 1982 case said, "What I remember most about him was that he was cold. He had no remorse . . . I've probably seen 10,000 cases since, but his case really left an impression on me."

We must no longer tolerate a criminal justice system in Kansas that caters to sex offenders while allowing the public to live in fear. It's time our laws gave us the option to put rapists in prison and throw away the key. The Pollyannish dream of reforming sex offenders has failed tragically too many times.

Schmidt's murder also demonstrates the need to renew the death penalty in Kansas, not necessarily (but hopefully) to deter crime, but to administer justice.

Sure, Gideon will likely receive the toughest sentence in Kansas, the 'Hard 40' or 40 years before becoming eligible for parole. Yet even in that case, the criminal is far better off than the victim.

What does it say for the value of Stephanie's life when the man who tortured, raped and killed her is provided with clean clothes, three square meals a day and cable TV? Gideon will enjoy all of those things while, in the words of Stephanie's father, "my daughter is in a ditch."

By allowing Gideon to live, the state is effectively treasuring Gideon's life, a life that devalues all life. As a result, the state is also guilty of degrading the value of life. The execution of Gideon, then, would actually preserve the value of not only Schmidt's life, but all human life.

Until the state takes decisive action to remove rapists and murderers from society, another Kansan will meet the same preventable fate as Stephanie Schmidt. Maybe it will be your neighbor, your best friend, your child or your spouse.

Maybe it will be you. There is no question that Schmidt's life was taken in vain. Yet we should take action to not let it end in vain.

Truck Stop Love refines its sound

Local band signs seven-album deal; first release due soon

DAVID FRESE
Collegian

Rock journalism is a slippery thing at best.

Those who practice it are the worst kind of scum and bottom feeders who, under the guise of Looking for The Truth, are simply out for a way to get free albums and reserved seats at general-admission concerts.

One is reminded of this as one receives a self-titled, six-song recording from local band Truck Stop Love, due in stores Sept. 14.

Things are coming together for this band. The contract Truck Stop Love signed with Scotti Brothers has a seven-album option. If the album does well, and it should at least do respectably, I hope there will be more to come.

This album is a nifty thing. With intelligible vocals, guitar solos with direction and solid playing, these fellas sound like a real band, whatever that is. Producer Joe Chiccarelli has taken Truck Stop's underlying good qualities and brought them to the surface.

Songs such as "River Mountain Love" and "Townie," whereas previously just sounds to thrash, bob and sway to at live shows, are actually very cool mixes here.

There are places on the recording I am concerned about, however.

At times the band seems to be building all this energy, and then they back off and go into this laid-back punk sound. For instance: "Elena Perez." The verses blast ahead at 90 sounding like the best of the Replacements, and then the chorus lets off the throttle and sounds like a hangover.

And "Amphetamine," the middle of a rock trilogy, has been separated from its bookends and put on the recording. The song sounds superb, but I miss "The Way" and "Fried."

The best song on the recording is clearly the new song, "Stagnation." Everything comes together here: lyrics, vocals, playing, all of it. Sounds like a single to me.

Although I think this recording is great because of its quality and the novelty of it being from a local band, the most important part of the album is the obvious potential for growth Truck Stop Love shows here. If you've seen them play, or if you've heard the band's songs on DB92 or K-Rock, you will be impressed as well.

MEGANNE MOORE

Students away from Manhattan this summer missed more than the flood.

They also missed the formation of Sufferbus, one of the few leading local bands to hit the scene in a long time.

Sufferbus, an up-beat and alternative Manhattan band, opened for Beyond Zebra Saturday night at Dowbow's Bar.

The band formed this summer when former members of the Moving Van Goghs, Brian Harris, bassist, and Mitchell Leggs, guitarist, merged with Ken Pingleton, former percussionist for the now-defunct Barnburners.

"We're Sufferbus, and we're scared," Leggs told the audience at the start of the band's one-hour set.

Understandable.

In their second live performance in a mere four-month existence, the band decided to plunge into music for an alternate ride in sound sampling.

The songs "Fever Flower" and "Lizard Girl from Mars" proved to the audience that no rehashed Van Goghs material will manifest.

Unlike larger bands, Sufferbus has fewer instruments and voices hurdling over each other. The result is a clear and concise sound.

The psychedelic guitars and enticing vocals by Leggs and Harris take Sufferbus to a funkadelic world of its own.

Harris said part of the new name was taken from the Masters of Reality album, "Sunrise on the Sufferbus." He said he proposed the idea to Leggs who thought the name fit well with the various tribulations they had been through with the Van Goghs' break-up.

Symbolic of past trials, Sufferbus dedicated a few minutes of "Who Are You" by The Who to Leggs' twin brother, Michael, also formerly of the Van Goghs.

As for future plans, Sufferbus recently recorded a demo of original material at Redhouse Recording studio in Lawrence.

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Mitchell Leggs, formerly of the Moving Van Goghs, returns to the live music scene with bassist and former Van Gogh-mate, Brian Harris, and former Barnburner drummer, Kenny Pingleton, to form Sufferbus, one of Manhattan's new bands.

Abortion doctor killed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOBILE, Ala. — A doctor who performed abortions was shot to death when he confronted a man breaking into his car. Police said they didn't know if the killing was a robbery or related to his work.

Dr. George Wayne Patterson was killed Saturday night when he returned to his 1993 Cadillac Eldorado in the city's nightclub district. No one was arrested.

"We're not sure it was a robbery or what it was at this time," Allan Carpenter, a police investigator, said Sunday.

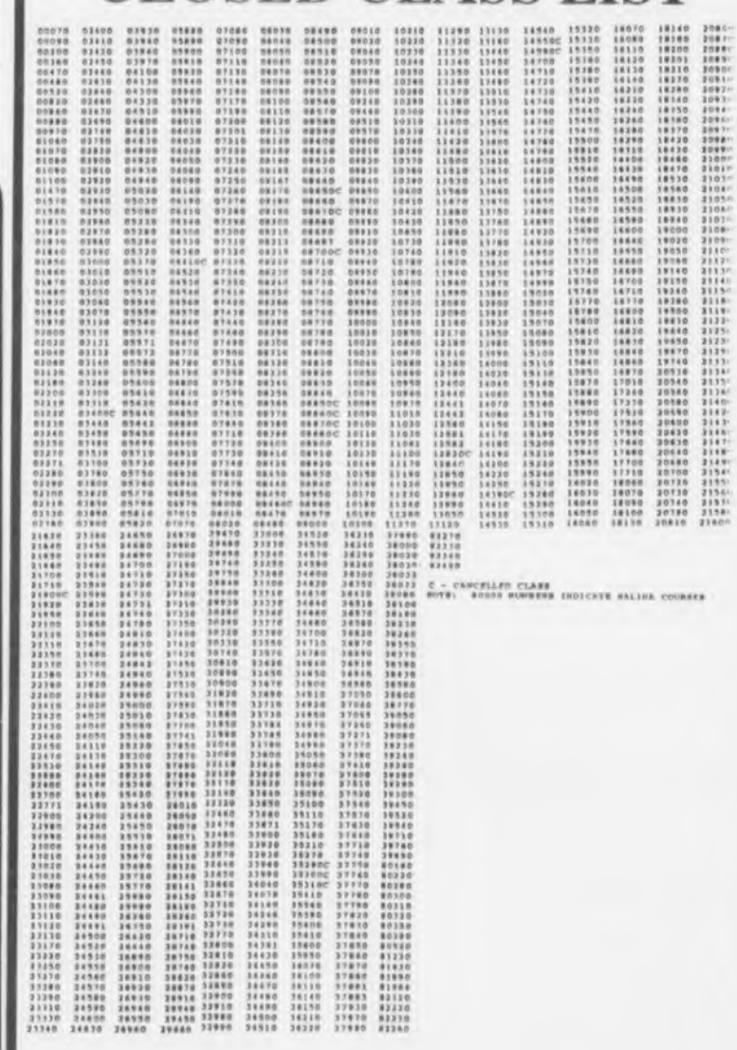
The shooting happened in an area where "quite a few robberies" have occurred, Carpenter said. He said Police Chief Harold Johnson planned to discuss the investigation further at a news conference Monday.

Patterson, 44, had worked at Family Planning of Fort Walton Beach, Fla., and at a Mobile clinic.

The Pensacola (Fla.) News Journal also reported that Patterson owned the Women's Medical Services Clinic in Pensacola, where Dr. David Gunn was killed last March. Anti-abortion activist Michael F. Griffin faces trial Sept. 20 for Gunn's murder.

Saturday's shooting was witnessed by a local businessman, Tom Mason, who told the Mobile Register that two shots were fired. Then, he said, the gunman opened the door of the Cadillac and took something from inside.

Carpenter said he didn't know what was taken. The slain doctor had some cash on him when police arrived, he said.



Hugh Jacobs, executive director of the Medical Society of Mobile County, said Patterson was a member in good standing.

FOOTBALL

Will Cats' offense improve? May-be

Smargiasso's absence from team puts pressure on younger players to lead K-State into season

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Usually, when Chad May is in a huddle, it is with a football team. Lately, it has been sports reporters that huddle with the 6-foot-2 quarterback — a quarterback that hasn't played Division-I football in two seasons.

May was expected to battle Jason Smargiasso for the starting job when practice began. That was the scenario until Smargiasso declined to come back for his senior year.

May said he figured Smargiasso would return despite hearing rumors about the senior quarterback.

"I told everybody all along that he'd be here," said May, who completed 97 of 233 passes for 1,066 yards, four touchdowns and nine interceptions two years ago for the Titans. "It's a little burden off my back, but I still have to go out there and compete."

Even without Smargiasso, May was going to guide the starting offense, said Snyder.

"Coming out of the spring, Chad May was our No. 1 quarterback," Snyder said. "We indicated, at that time, the end of spring practice, that Chad May would come in as our No. 1 quarterback.

"Chad May made a commitment to this program, to this team and to stay here during the summer and throw every day, which he did. Half of the competition has eliminated itself. Chad May is our No. 1 quarterback and will remain our No. 1 quarterback."

Co-captain and senior Andre Coleman said even though he and Smargiasso were good friends, he still wasn't sure about the unexpected departure but had confidence in May.

"I don't know if he's (Smargiasso) having personal problems or what," said Coleman, who caught 25 passes for 336 yards a year ago. "Jason and I are real good friends and both from Pennsylvania. In fact, he's a big reason why I'm here at Kansas State University.

"But the show must go on, and we're going to win with or without him. Chad is an excellent quarterback. He was the number-one quarterback at the end of the spring, so we're comfortable with that."

Quarterback coach Del Miller said he is glad May is on the team.

"I'm more than pleased with Chad on the team," Miller said. "He is a tough kid. I wished we could have had him play last year."

Tomorrow — the Wildcats' secondary and Jaime Mendez

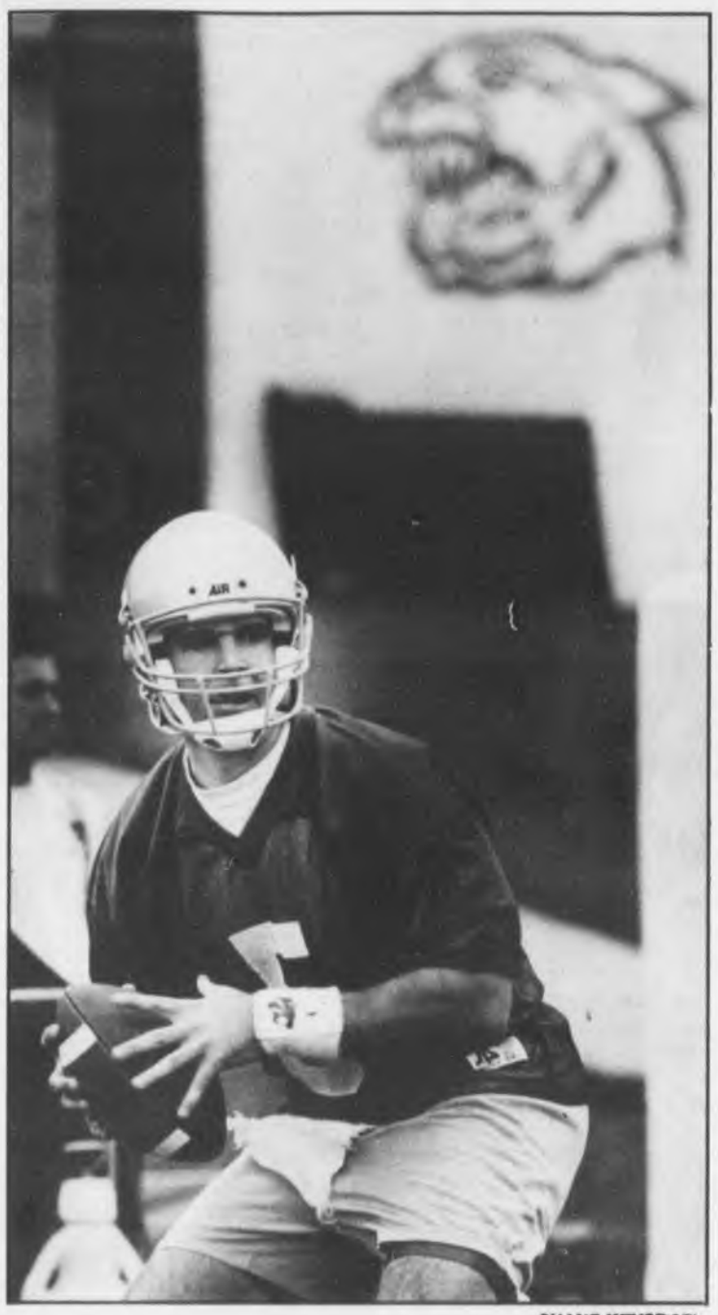
Four inexperienced quarterbacks will fight for the second-string position. Snyder said it is important to find a back-up for May as soon as possible.

"There is a lot of pressure on the younger guys in order to bring, front and center, a No. 2 quarterback. As we enter practice, Brian Kavanagh will be our No. 2 quarterback."

Kavanagh is a red-shirted freshman who completed 18 of 32 passes for 169 yards, including a 33-yard touchdown pass in the spring game. Kavanagh said he has to be ready when he has his chance to play.



"I have to prepare myself for every game," he said. "Chad can go down in any play. I hope he stays healthy all season, but strange things can happen. I can be thrown in at any second, so I have to be ready to play."

Kavanagh said he has several goals he wants to accomplish this season.

"I want to concentrate on reading defenses and getting the audibles down," he said. "As long as I get that down, I should be okay. Then, I have to prepare for each team every week."

The other three quarterbacks, who have never played a down of college football, are sophomores Craig Mancin and Joseph Glass and freshman Pete Jelovic. Miller said Mancin should be ready to play after back surgery.

Jelovic earned honorable-mention all-America honors from USA Today when the Cleveland, Ohio, native took his high school team to back-to-back state titles and a 24-1 record as a starter. As a senior, he completed 60 percent of his passes — 175 of 290 — for more than 2,500 yards and 29 touchdown passes.

SEASON OUTLOOK

Snyder: consistency key in climbing Big Eight ladder

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Football coach Bill Snyder knows that in order to achieve a spot in the upper echelon of the Big Eight Conference, the Wildcats must first reach a level of consistency.

The Cats finished the 1991 campaign 7-4 — the school's best mark in 37 years. But last season, they stumbled to 5-6, lacking offensive continuity despite winning all five games at home.

"I think we recognized that offensively there were a number of things that we had difficulty with," said Snyder, who has coached the Cats to an 18-26 record in four years. "And it wasn't always a particular position. Either offensive line, receiver, running back, quarterback, tight end, whatever the case may be, everybody took their turn.

"To not have progressed from 7-4 to whatever is beyond that certainly left me unsatisfied," he said. "But I'm not alone, and this program is not my program. It's not for me — it's for the players and others, and our players are disappointed, and I think that is important."

Even though frustration flourished during the 1992-93 season, the Cats managed to win five games for the third consecutive season — a mark that has only been accomplished twice in the past 80 years.

Not many teams in the country made the progression that K-State made in the past four years. Before Snyder's arrival, the Cats endured a 1-36-1 stretch, then yielded a 1-10 record in the transition in 1989.

In 1990, K-State became one of a mere four teams in the nation to boost its total wins by four games with a 5-6 stint. With 15 returning starters, coupled with a favorable seven-game home schedule, Snyder said the program might be able to maintain a level of consistency that will lead to bigger and better things for the upcoming season.

"Our direction has always been to get to a level where we may be right now and retain some consistency at that level," said Snyder, who earned Big Eight Coach of the Year honors in 1990 and 1991.

"Once we can achieve the consistency at that level, then we have a chance to compete for a conference championship or a bowl game or whatever," he said.

Snyder and the K-State administration took another step in providing that consistency when the two came to terms on a 10-year contract in May.

"This program needs continuity," he said. "That (the contract) was my contribution — that was what I felt I could do to land some stability in the program."

The program also received a new $3.3-million press box and $2.2-million indoor practice facility.

"The attitude (of the players) is great, and the spirit is very, very good," Snyder said after four practices with the team. "At no time since I've been here has it been any better than what it is right now. The effort on the field is excellent, and when you consider as hot as it's been, they are here with a purpose."

Andre Coleman, senior co-captain, said with all the favorable variables on K-State's side this year, the team has a chance to duplicate, and maybe improve on, that memorable 7-4 season in 1991.

"We're bigger, we're stronger, and we've got seven home games, so if there is ever going to be a year where the Cats are going to go to a bowl game or turn the corner, this is the year," Coleman said.

"I mean, we had a 7-4 year, and that was all right, but we're looking beyond that. If there was going to be a year that we were going to do that, this would be the year."

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington's Don James, one of the nation's most successful college football coaches, resigned Sunday after the Huskies received a two-year postseason ban from the Pacific-10 Conference for violating NCAA rules.

He quit hours after the sanctions were announced. The Huskies also were forced to give up scholarships and $1.4 million in TV revenue.

Washington's Athletic Director Barbara Hedges said she telephoned James, who stayed at home with his team and did not go to the San Francisco area for the Pac-10 announcement, to tell him the 30-member league council had increased the Huskies' bowl ban from one to two years.

A four-member compliance committee had recommended one year. Hedges said James told her then that he was going to resign.

James, 60, has won more Pac-10 games than any coach in the league's history. He led the Huskies to a 12-0 record and a share of the national championship in 1991.

He is the most successful coach in Washington history with a 153-57-2 record in 18 seasons, leading the school to 13 bowls in the past 14 years.

The Huskies, who have appeared in three straight Rose Bowls, will not be able to go to Pasadena, Calif., this season because of the Pac-10 penalties announced outside San Francisco. Washington won't be eligible for the conference title following the 1993 and 1994 seasons.

The Pac-10 also limited Washington's football scholarships and recruiting visits and prohibited the university from sharing in 1993 TV rights fees. The team can appear on television but will lose revenue.

Washington is the second major football program to be placed on probation in the past week. Auburn was hit with a two-year probation and a one-year television ban by the NCAA last Wednesday.

Four Washington boosters will be ordered to disassociate themselves from the Huskies, and three players, including senior tailback Beno Bryant, will lose their eligibility.

These are the most severe penalties the Pac-10 has handed out against a member school.

Among the violations found by the Pac-10 were improper loans to athletes, free meals provided to recruits and improper employment of athletes by boosters. The conference also cited a lack of institutional control over funds provided to students hosting recruits.

However, Pac-10 representatives refused to characterize Washington as "an outlaw" program.

Common battle for No. 1 slot erased

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Almost like an old Western movie, this town wasn't big enough for the both of them.

Only in this case, the K-State football program wasn't big enough for two quarterbacks.

Ever since coach Bill Snyder's arrival in 1989, there has always been a heated battle for the top spot. The list begins with Gary Swim versus Carl Straw in '89, followed by such shoot-outs as Straw against Paul Watson, Watson versus Jason Smargiasso, and Smargiasso versus Matt Garber over the next three seasons.

BRIAN ANDERSON

The scene was set for another confrontation this season. Down one dusty road was Smargiasso, a man who had some problems directing the offense last year.

At the other end of the road was the new man in town, a blond-haired Californian named Chad May, who took over the offense when Smargiasso was hurt in the spring.

The two men were to meet Aug. 12 for the starting job. May was the only one who showed. Smargiasso never returned.

Since then, May has handled himself well when he faced his first duty as the No. 1 thrower — talking to the sports reporters. He gives the right answers to the questions the print and electronic media ask from him.

Smargiasso was just the opposite when meeting with the media. He was the last player to come in, always taking his time, and if he had to, tried to avoid the reporters at all costs.

This is the kind of "laziness" that probably upset reporters from larger papers, forced them to talk with him so they could meet their deadline. Of course, if I were him, I would have tried to avoid the press too, especially after stinking up the game week after week.

May said Smargiasso might have been trying to turn over a new leaf.

"It was all getting better (for Smargiasso)," said May on Aug. 11. "He was changing his attitude. He told all the newspapers he was a new guy, and it seemed like he'd really changed on the field.

"One of the reasons I thought he'd be back is because he was trying to change himself. Then you hear this."

May said he was glad Smargiasso didn't show up.

"It was kind of selfish for him not to show up," May said. "If he wasn't going to be here and give us his best, we don't need someone like that around."

May said he doesn't like to be compared to former K-State quarterbacks.

"I don't like to fit into other people's shoes," he said. "I just want to get the offense to where it was two years ago. I'm not saying that I don't want to be like Paul Watson, but they had a record-breaking season that year, and I want to get back to that level again."

Two years ago, Watson led the K-State offense when they totaled 4,231 yards in offense — a school record. With Smargiasso controlling the last year, the offense dropped to 2,685 yards — a difference of 1,636 yards.

Coach Bill Snyder said May is similar to former quarterback Carl Straw.

"Chad's pretty stoic," Snyder said. "He reminds me of Straw, who was a great, young guy and a Max Urick speaks to members of the press and fellow staff in a press conference in Bramlage Coliseum. Urick was named new Director of Athletics at K-State June 28.

New Athletic Director offers unique relief . . .

Tickets given to victims

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Max Urick, K-State's new athletic director as of June 28, found it hard not to notice the devastation absorbed by the residents of Manhattan during the floods of 1993.

He wanted to help the victims, but wanted to do it in a different way.

Instead of donating money or material items, Urick and the department opted to offer tickets to Kansas State football games for all of the people that were affected by the flooding.

"It was really hard for us not to be aware and sensitive to what was going on with the flood victims since we had members of our department involved and living in some of those areas," said Urick, who came to K-State after 19 years at Iowa State University. "Seeing how the people around here reacted to it, I was moved by that.

"I wanted to do something to help the flood victims that was unique, not the standard, 'here's cash or material things,' because I knew from being around them that the stress and emotional fatigue in dealing with this is ongoing. We are in a semi-entertainment business, so that was what we had going."

According to Urick, K-State would match each $160 season family ticket purchased, and for non-conference games, they would donate a number of tickets for the Red Cross to distribute each contest. The Red Cross has a list of people in need and that apply to these conditions.

"There really is no money making in this, that was the farthest from our intentions."
MAX URICK
K-State Athletic Director

Urick indicated that some schools in Iowa were doing a similar relief option, but they were soliciting corporations to buy the tickets at a somewhat cheaper price and then distribute them to flood victims.

"Frankly, we chose not to do that because we felt the corporations were involved with other projects," he said.

"There really is no money making in this, that was the farthest from our intentions," Urick said. "Humanistic principles dictated what we do on this, and minimize our expense as well."

And while Urick said the department's intentions we purely humanistic, some people viewed the operation as a monetary tool.

"Some thought that it was some sort of a gimmick to help us make money, which is farthest from the truth," Urick said. "People can come about this any way they want to, so that tells me a little bit about their agenda than it does about the project. I just want people to understand that the basis was not business principles, but humanistic principles.

"Now, if you wanted to criticize it from the other viewpoint, sure it would be a lousy money-making project because it's a money loser. We knew financially we'd be a loser, but the good it would do for the family outweighed, by far, those things."

FOLLOWING THE URICK TRAIL

Max Urick spent the last 19 years at Iowa State before being appointed K-State athletic director on June 28. Before Iowa State, Urick spent 13 seasons as a collegiate football coach at such schools as the United States Military Academy, Duke and Ohio State.

Recruits to see action on court

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball program is gearing up for a season Coach Patti Hagemeyer said may boast one of her best recruiting classes ever.

Kate DeClerk, middle blocker, Yolanda Young, outside hitter, and GiGi Ghattas, middle blocker, are this year's three freshman recruits.

"This freshman class is very comparable with my other recruiting class," Hagemeyer said. "Before practice had started, I was impressed with their physical talents.

"Now that I have had a chance to evaluate them for a week, they have the ability to demand a good performance from everybody on the floor," she said. "They will contribute and make a big impact."

DeClerk was recruited by K-State, Texas A&M, Idaho, North Carolina State and Syracuse. While in her senior season at Windom Area, Minn., High School, she tallied 308 kills with 54 aces and was selected to the Minnesota all-state team.

"Kate has been trained as a middle blocker, and I'm impressed with her desire," Hagemeyer said.

Young, an all-conference performer from Omaha, Neb., was part of a recruiting battle between K-State and Nebraska.

"It had come down to Nebraska and ourselves," Hagemeyer said. "I guess we kind of stole her away."

Hagemeyer said all three freshmen will probably be seeing action this season as the Wildcats look to improve their 7-22 performance from last season.

With five sophomore starters returning, the Cats will still be a young team. Hagemeyer said with a young team, fundamentals are even more important.

"We spent eight days trying to be fundamentally sound," she said. "Things just sometimes break down when you put six young players on the court and expect things to look the way they should."

Hagemeyer said the loss of honorable mention all-Big Eight player Kathy Saxton shouldn't pose a problem for this season's squad.

"I really don't think we have to replace her," Hagemeyer said. "She was an excellent player last season, and her situation was with a large group of young players that had not played college volleyball before.

"I think that she handled the situation very well, but our game right now is just different than when she was with us."

The Cats face a challenge in Big Eight competition this season as both Colorado and Nebraska are ranked in the top 10.

"It is exciting to be part of a nationally known league as the Big Eight," Hagemeyer said. "When I took the job two years ago I knew it would be a difficult process, but we were in some close matches last season. It came down to critical points, and we couldn't do the right thing.

"I expect to challenge and upset some people this season, although I wouldn't call it an upset," she said. "I would call it challenge and win."

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

K.C. upends Yanks 7-0

NEW YORK (AP) — Chris Haney pitched a four-hitter for his first shutout of the season, and the Kansas City Royals averted a three-game sweep by beating the New York Yankees 7-0 Sunday.

Mike Macfarlane's career-high 18th home run in the second inning gave Haney all the support he needed.

The Royals scored three times in the fifth, highlighted by Brian McRae's mad dash home, and added three more in the sixth, two on Greg Gagne's triple.

George Brett and Jose Lind each had three of Kansas City's 12 hits.

Haney (9-5) worked around a season-high five walks and struck out five. He pitched his first complete game in 18 starts this year, and the third shutout in 47 career starts with Kansas City and Montreal.

The Yankees, who have not been alone in the first place this year, began the day tied with Toronto at the top of the AL East. New York finished 6-3 on its homestand, and now play 16 of the next 22 games on the road.

Melido Perez (6-12) retired the first three batters, but Macfarlane opened the second with a long drive to left field. He passed his career best of 17 homers last season.

With two outs in the fifth, Lind, Felix Jose and McRae hit consecutive singles for a run. Brett followed with an RBI single, and McRae also scored on the play when he kept running on left fielder Randy Velarde's overthrow to the plate and slid in head-first.

Gagne tripled over Velarde and scored on Lind's single for a 7-0 lead in the sixth.

Notes: Scott Kamieniecki, the winning pitcher for the Yankees on Saturday, slightly strained his right hamstring while running in the outfield before the game. He will be evaluated later this week to determine whether he can start Thursday in Cleveland. . . . Royals outfielder Kevin McReynolds again did not play. He has been out since Thursday with a sore neck.

tough, young guy. Nothing fazed him. His attitude was the same day in and day out.

"I think Chad's the same kind of guy. I think he'll be undaunted by this."

May will have to work hard for the next 13 weeks if the Cats are to regain the level achieved a couple of seasons ago.

Already, players have said that May has the right stuff to make K-State winners.

"I look for leadership and poise, and Chad May has displayed those qualities," junior running back J.J. Smith said.

So whether May is ready for the battles in the competitive Big Eight race or not, he's the man.

Student drowns

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

A 22-year-old K-State student drowned on the southwest side of Tuttle Creek Reservoir Aug. 4.

Debra J. Morales, freshman in pre-med, and her boyfriend, Edwin Gonzalez, 25, Fort Riley, had taken one of several canoes belonging to Stoneybrook area residents. The boats were being used to get to the flooded area.

Capt. Steve French, Riley County Police Department, said high winds and water caused problems in controlling the boat, and they decided to swim ashore.

"They thought they were close to the shore but misjudged the water," French said.

Gonzalez was wearing a life jacket, but Morales was not. An autopsy performed on the body showed no evidence of foul play.

Legal action was being considered against Gonzalez for unauthorized use of the boat, but no charges have been filed.

"The case was forwarded to the county attorney's office," French said. "The owner of the boat doesn't want to file charges, and it seems that the case is closed."

Morales was born on September 21, 1970, at Corpus Christi, Texas, the daughter of Martin Adams Jr. and Susie Hernandez. She grew up in Corpus Christi and attended the local schools.

She had been a resident of the Manhattan and Junction City areas since 1988.

"She was studying to be a pediatrician because she loved kids and wanted to help kids. She was really working hard, by herself, to make a life for her kids and herself," Hernandez said.

Accident proves fatal

CORI CORNELISON

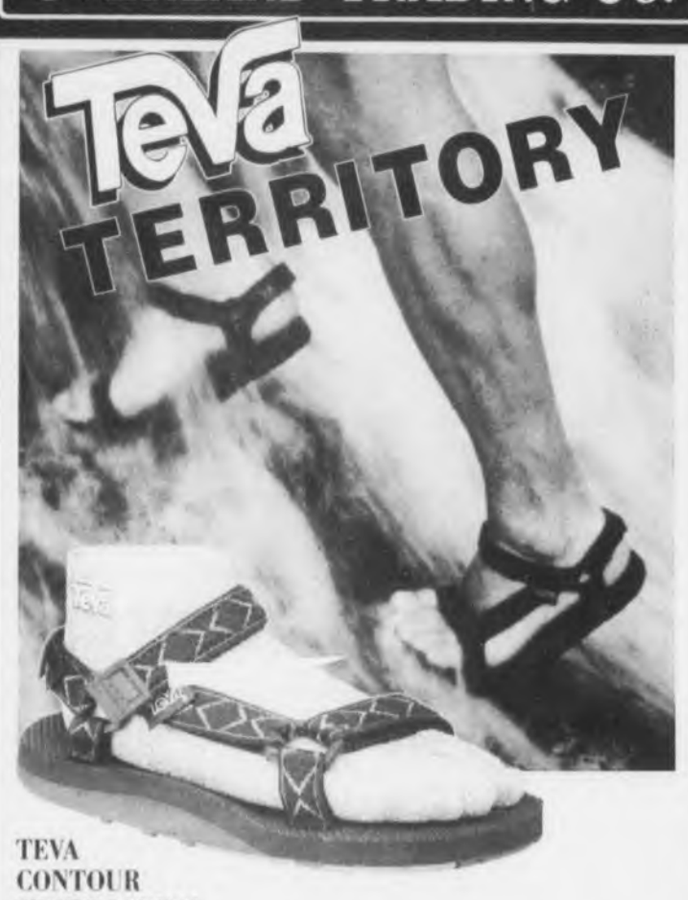
A K-State senior in marine and wildlife biology died Aug. 3 in an automobile accident five miles north of Burlingame.

William Jeffrey Martin, 21, was driving a farm truck home when a van, driven by Michael Leuzsler, struck him broadside. Martin died at the scene of the accident, and Leuzsler was last listed as being in critical condition.

Martin was active as vice president, gear officer and jump master of the KSU Parachute Club, of which he had been a member for three years.

"Out of everyone in the club, he was the one person in the club that everyone liked and looked up to," said Tim Argo, president of the parachute club and close friend of Martin.

Devin Cecil, friend and club member, said besides being an active member, Martin also enjoyed hunting and fishing.



"He was a great guy — there wasn't anything that anyone said that was bad about him. Everyone loved him," Cecil said.

A memorial fund has been set up by the parachute club to the U.S. National Parachute Team and the Airport Access Defense Fund.

HAROLD RING
Collegian

Non-traditional students at K-State–Salina can earn a degree while working full-time because of a new evening curriculum.

Industrial Engineering Technology is the first in what may become a series of evening degree programs.

Loren Riblett, assistant dean at K-State–Salina, said the program was developed for students who work full-time.

The program is open to anyone interested in attending evening classes.

The associate's degree should take the average student 5-1/2 to six years to complete, he said.

"It might take a little longer to earn the degree, but the schedule is more convenient for some students," Riblett said.

The program is designed to teach students the skills required to work in small Kansas industries. Graduates are needed to fill positions in quality control, production planning and plant safety, he said.

Riblett said the program stresses adaptability in the work place.

"Being in the work force is a continual learning experience," he said.

The curriculum includes mathematics, applied science, humanities and communication.

The engineering program at K-State–Salina is similar to K-State's but emphasizes more hands-on training, Riblett said.

The K-State–Salina College of Technology became part of K-State on May 2, 1991, when Gov. Joan Finney signed a bill merging the Kansas College of Technology with K-State.

2 fired for taking food stamps

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Two more state employees face firing for allegedly taking food stamps meant for flood victims.

Division of Family Services Director Carmen Schulze said the employees, whom she did not identified, would be fired today.

That makes six state workers dismissed based on allegations of emergency food stamp fraud. So far, only one faces criminal charges.

All six employees worked at the Division of Family Services, which handled distribution of the emergency food vouchers, Schulze said.

Investigators say at least 25 state employees took the food stamps. They stress that not all the employees lied to get the vouchers.

In all, more than 7,200 people in Kansas City got about $2.5 million in emergency food stamps. Prosecutors say at least $1.5 million worth of the stamps were obtained fraudulently.

Nearly 500 people took advantage of an amnesty period earlier this month and returned $250,000 in the vouchers or promised to pay for them.

On Thursday, State Auditor Margaret Kelly said she had warned the Missouri Department Social Services, which oversees the Division of Family Services, that state employees had been improperly taking advantage of welfare benefits, including regularly issued food stamps.

She said in a 1992 report that at least 600 state employees owed almost $500,000 for such benefits for which they were not eligible.

Schulze said the report was inaccurate.

Watch for KSU Professionals coming Thursday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The hourly minimum wage, which has stood at $4.25 since 1990, should be raised and indexed to automatically reflect cost of living increases, Labor Secretary Robert Reich said Sunday.

Reich, appearing on CBS' "Face the Nation" said workers receiving the minimum wage today earn less than they did in the 1970s and 1980s, based on inflation.

"So it seemed to me appropriate that we at least begin to consider raising the minimum wage and indexing it for inflation, putting a cost of living adjustment on it."

Moments earlier on the same program, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said linking minimum wage hikes to cost of living increases "would be a big, big mistake and I don't even think it would pass" Congress.

Republicans and other opponents of raising the minimum wage say it would result in businesses hiring fewer young and untrained workers, the group most in need of minimum wage jobs.

Dole said the Democrats "don't seem to like people out there creating jobs, people with 19 or fewer employees, small business. They're protecting their labor base but they don't care a whit about small business."

The Wall Street Journal reported on Aug. 12 that Reich had sent a confidential memo to President Clinton recommending that the minimum wage go up to at least $4.50, with automatic future adjustments to reflect inflation.

Reich, according to the memo, said such steps were "a minimum prerequisite to reaching the goal of lifting families of four with fulltime workers out of poverty."

Reich would not comment on the contents of the memo, but said he "didn't make any kind of recommendation" to the president.

ABORTION BATTLE HEATS UP

■ The battle over abortion rights has hit home in Kansas yet again. George Tiller, a doctor who performs abortions in Wichita was shot in both arms last Thursday evening. Tiller's clinic was one of three which was targeted by Operation Rescue during the "Summer of Mercy" in 1991.

■ See related story, page 5

■ Since the shooting, the abortion rights activists seemed divided. Some endorsed the shooting, while others denounced it. As the debate went on, another abortion doctor was shot and killed.

Woman thought accused doctor-shooter a "hero"

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Letters sent by a woman accused of wounding an abortion doctor to a man accused of killing another doctor praised him as a hero of our time in the fight against abortion.

Rachelle Renae Shannon, 37, of Grants Pass, Ore., was arrested Thursday at the Oklahoma City airport just hours after Dr. George Tiller was shot and wounded in both arms in Wichita. She was charged with attempted murder and was being held without bail. A court appearance was scheduled Monday.

The Pensacola News Journal obtained copies of 25 letters she sent to Michael F. Griffin, the pro-lifer accused of fatally shooting Dr. David Gunn outside a Pensacola clinic on March 10. Griffin faces trial Sept. 20.

Those and other letters indicated she had become disillusioned with nonviolent abortion protests, upset that some pro-life activists had condemned Gunn's shooting March 10.

"It's sad to see so many pro-life Christians acting as though Michael Griffin had shot Mother Teresa," she wrote to abortion protest leader John Burt. "He shot a mass murderer like Hitler or Saddam Hussein.

"Someone made my day (right on Easter) by telling me another killing center got sent back to where it came from (burned up) in Missoula, Mont.," said an April 17 letter to Griffin.

"I think it would be a good time to picket with a sign that says 'Execute Murderers-Abortionists,'" she wrote in a letter dated April 10.

Shannon's husband, David, said he knew his wife and Griffin had been in touch but knew nothing more. He said he never expected her to turn violent, never heard her mention Tiller's name, nor did he know she had a gun.

He said he did not participate in his wife's pro-life activities, saying, "She's pretty independent-minded, but she'd always let me know where she was going."

In Wichita, Tiller, target of six weeks of protests in 1991 by Operation Rescue, went back to work Friday morning at the Women's Health Care Services clinic.

On Saturday morning, fewer than two dozen pro-life activists responded to a call to picket outside Tiller's clinic. About the same number of pro-choice advocates counter-demonstrated and the two sides jostled and exchanged words.

Lea Mayberry, a local National Organization for Women member, said she was not surprised to hear of the shooting.

"They have already shown violence in other respects," Mayberry said. "The pro-choice organization is now more resolved and more determined to keep our rights."

Letters Shannon sent in April and May gushed over Griffin.

"I know you did the right thing," she wrote. "It was not murder. You shot a murderer. It was more like anti-murder."

"Wow Michael, you are the awesomest, greatest hero of our time," another letter said. "I pray God will raise up more like you."

In her letter to Burt, who organized the demonstration that was going on when Gunn was killed, she attacked him for condemning the shooting and asked that he remove her name from his mailing list. Shannon contributed about $160 to a fund for Griffin's defense.

"I do condone his actions and believe them to be very just and righteous. In fact, I'm praying God will push some more of us 'off the deep end.'"

Shannon, a homemaker with two teen-age children, has been involved in the pro-life movement for about seven years, said Myrna Shaneyfelt, chairwoman of Josephine County Right to Life in Grants Pass.

She has edited an pro-life newsletter, the Brockhoeft Report, her husband said.

Staff writer Kim Hefling contributed to this story.

Activists resort to CIA tactics

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, Kan. — The people who rummage through garbage cans, run traces on license plates and track down old high school yearbooks for photographs don't work for the CIA.

But activists on both sides of the abortion issue have resorted to these measures and more to gather information about their enemies.

Abortion-rights advocates say they use such measures to protect their doctors and patients from the intimidation of abortion opponents. Abortion foes do it to try to prevent abortions and publicly expose doctors who perform abortions.

"We have quite a spy network. I am amazed," said Raymond Sharon, a leader of Godarchy Productions, Wichita's most active and vocal anti-abortion group.

"The CIA has nothing over on us. You cannot believe the network we have."

But Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston said the latest campaign directed at a doctor who performs abortions may be criminal.

"I consider that to be threatening or menacing," Foulston said.

"I certainly support the right of all those individuals to peacefully protest. But when individuals consider committing criminal acts or threaten or harass other people, it's beyond free speech and into criminal action."

Anti-abortion activists last week began an all-out campaign to publicly expose another doctor who has worked part-time at the Wichita Family Planning clinic for three months. He often wore a mask going to and from the clinic to avoid being identified.

"We exposed him. We've got pictures of him all over town. Then we said we would have further contact this week... We would be happy if he would just promise never to do this again," Sharon said.

Godarchy members said they discovered the doctor's identity, and some have threatened to embarrass his full-time employer if he did not stop abortions.

If the doctor doesn't see things Godarchy's way this week, Sharon said more steps will be taken to make his life miserable.The group sent the doctor a letter earlier this month warning him to stop performing abortions. The letter said if he did not stop, he would not be able to endure the local and national exposure that awaits him.

Priest advocating killing got threats

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MAGNOLIA SPRINGS, Ala. (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest who espoused the killing of abortion doctors as "justifiable homicide," then recanted under pressure of church superiors, said his comment brought him death threats.

Sorting threatening letters he received last week, the Father David Trosch of Magnolia Springs, said he has stopped answering his telephone, but he's pleased overall with the publicity.

Father Trosch had two folders on the table, one labeled "for," the other labeled "threats."

Archbishop Oscar Lipscomb of Mobile disciplined Father Trosch two days later. Father Trosch said he's no longer permitted to discuss justifiable homicide.

Readers Guide TO THE Opinion Page

The EDITORIAL section contains one or more editorials compiled by the Collegian Editorial Board. The board meets to debate national and local issues. While one person writes the editorial, it represents a majority of the board. This is not to say that everyone on the board agrees with the consensus.

The READERS WRITE section is your forum. Write a letter to the editor when you agree or disagree with an editorial or column. Let us know when you think our coverage was poor, reprimand us when we make a mistake or praise us when we do well.

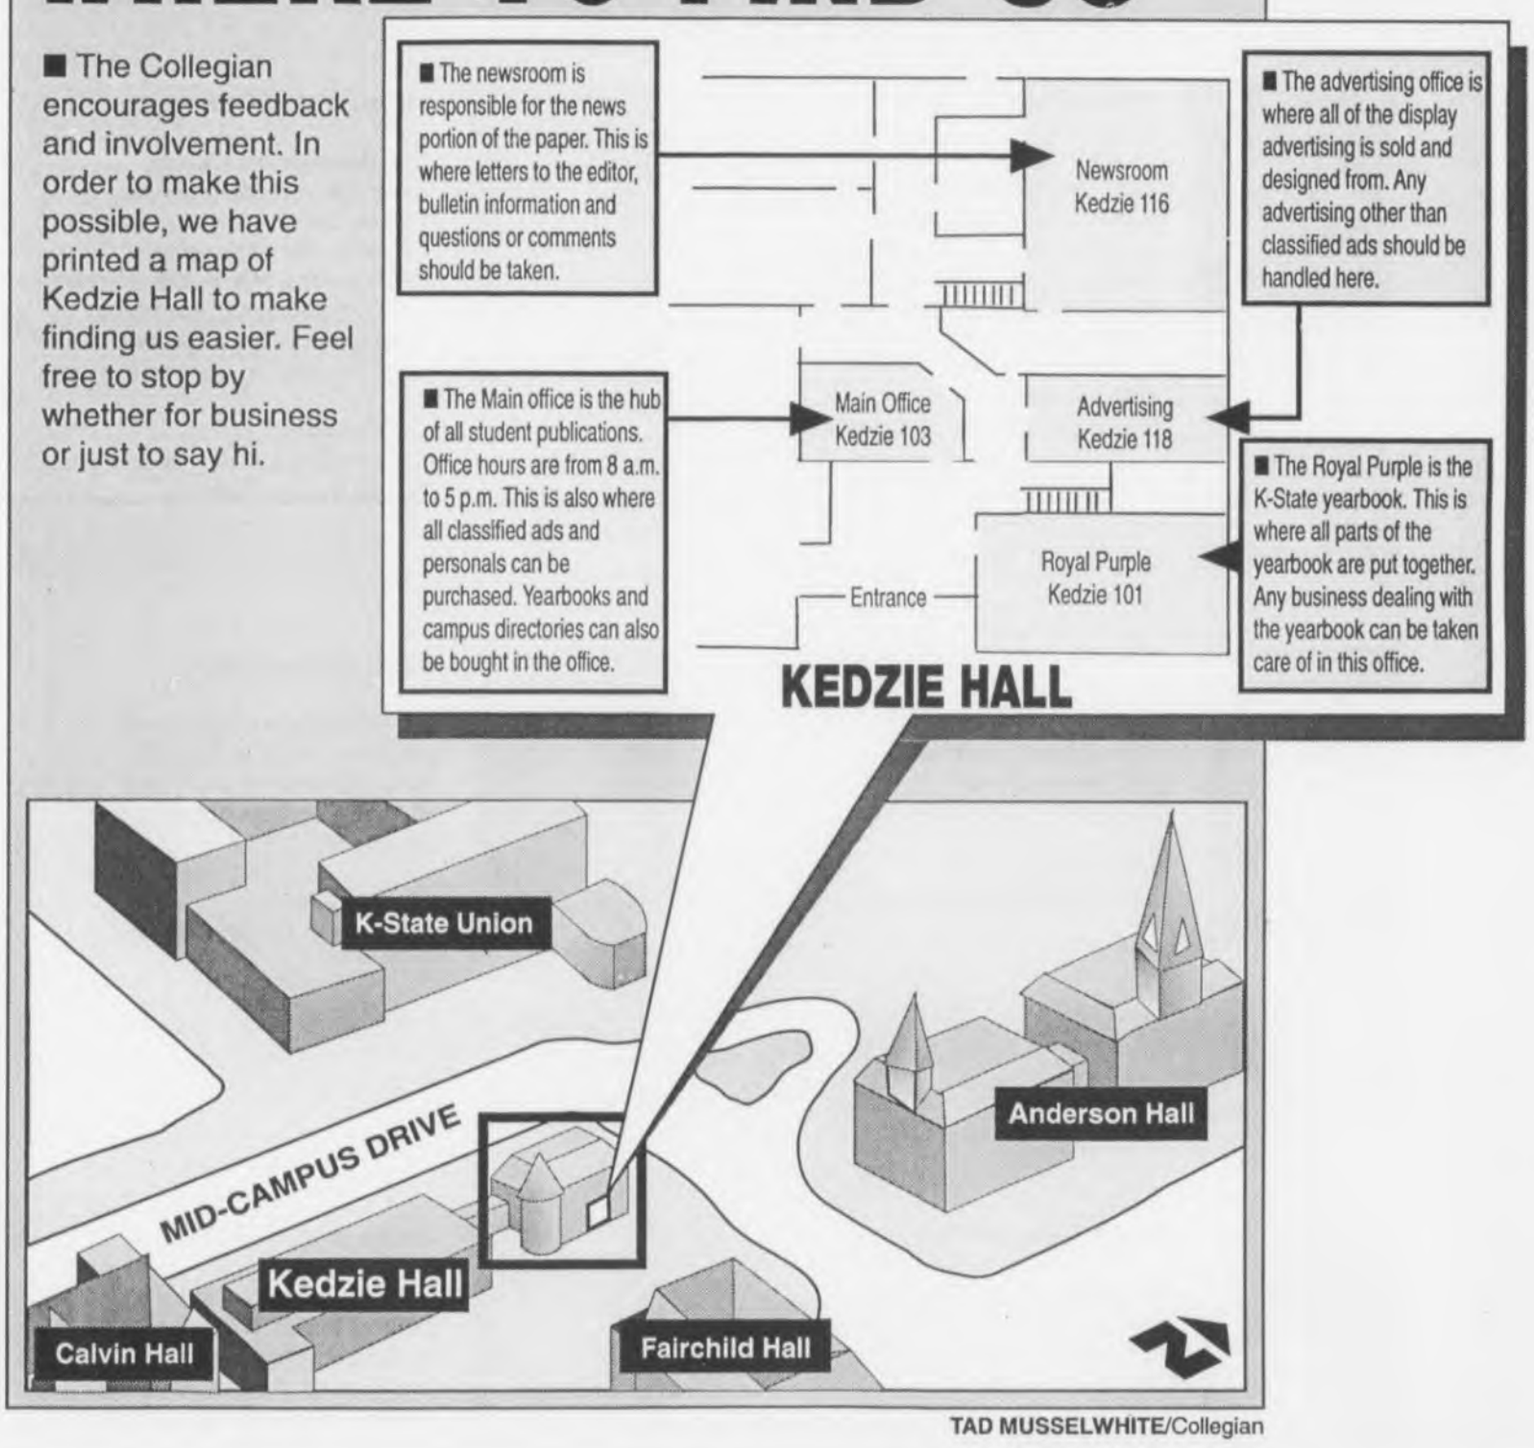
WHERE TO FIND US



■ The Collegian encourages feedback and involvement. In order to make this possible, we have printed a map of Kedzie Hall to make finding us easier. Feel free to stop by whether for business or just to say hi.

■ The newsroom is responsible for the news portion of the paper. This is where letters to the editor, bulletin information and questions or comments should be taken.

■ The Main office is the hub of all student publications. Office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. This is also where all classified ads and personals can be purchased. Yearbooks and campus directories can also be bought in the office.

■ The advertising office is where all of the display advertising is sold and designed from. Any advertising other than classified ads should be handled here.

Nicaraguan government attacked

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Heavily armed Sandinista supporters seized Nicaragua's vice president and more than 30 other opposition leaders on Friday and said they would not be freed until former Contra rebels release dozens of hostages seized in the north.

A man who identified himself as Commander Cuarenta, or Commander Forty, went on Sandinista Radio Ya late Friday and declared the hostage taking as gunshots were heard in the background.

The man, who shouted and sounded incoherent at times, said the gunmen would not harm the leaders of the National Opposition Union, seized at their headquarters near Managua's city center.

But he demanded that rearmed Contra rebels, who took at least 38 government officials, lawmakers and military officers captive in northern Nicaragua on Thursday and Friday, free all their hostages before the UNO leaders would be let go.

The man called for Roman Catholic Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, a frequent negotiator in such crises, to seek the release of the Contras' hostages.

Police began moving into the Managua neighborhood where the UNO hostages were taken. The hostages included Vice President Virgilio Godoy and Alfredo Cesar, a UNO deputy and former president of the National Assembly.

UNO, a broad-based coalition of business and civic groups, was the driving force behind President Violeta Chamorro's 1990 upset victory over the leftist Sandinistas who had ruled Nicaragua for more than a decade amid civil war against the rightist Contras.

UNO later broke ranks with Chamorro because she included the Sandinistas in the government in a bid to bring harmony to the war-torn country.

The war between the U.S.-backed Contras and the Sandinista government in the 1980s ended in 1990 when Chamorro, a moderate, defeated the Sandinistas at the polls.

But both Contras and demobilized Sandinistas have rearmed in recent months and staged attacks on the government, angered by government failure to provide land and money to former fighters.

Despite the occasional sounds of gunfire, hostages who went on Radio Ya declared the 34 captives were not being abused.

Hostage Reynaldo Hernandez was put on the air by the kidnappers to urge authorities not to take any imprudent steps.

"Stay calm. These men are armed. There must be a peaceful solution. I don't see any way out for Nicaragua but through dialogue," Hernandez said.

The hostage said the kidnappers had put him on the phone with an order for police to stay at least 250 yards from UNO headquarters.

Hernandez said the men stormed the headquarters armed with grenades and rifles at about 7:30 p.m. and had planted explosives around it.

In northern Nicaragua, Contra rebels apparently seized five more military officers late Friday, bringing to 38 the number of hostages they have taken during a peace mission that backfired.

Those held by the Contras in the north were lawmakers, officers and others on a peace mission to offer the rebels amnesty.

Government troops converged on the area.

Radio Ya broke into regular programming to announce that the rebels seized five more military officers in a Special Disarmament Brigade late Friday.

Japanese student killed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — Police officers spent the weekend riding commuter trains and passing out fliers, in an effort to find someone to help them solve a Japanese exchange student's murder.

Masakazu Kuriyama was shot twice in the back of the head outside a Bay Area Rapid Transit station Thursday night. He died in a hospital Saturday with his parents by his side.

"We have some new leads and we're following those as well as some old ones," Joseph Kreins, police officer said Sunday.

He declined to elaborate, but said officers spent the past three days riding BART trains, trying to locate witnesses.

Police believe the shooting was a robbery gone wrong, but are not ruling out the possibility of a hate crime, Kreins said. Kuriyama had his Sony Walkman, $140 in cash and his credit cards.

His death is the latest in a string of attacks against Japanese visitors that have shocked and angered their countrymen at home.

Two Japanese students were beaten and robbed in San Francisco in early August.

Last October a Baton Rouge, La., man was acquitted of manslaughter after he fatally shot a Japanese teen-ager who had gotten lost looking for a Halloween party.

Japanese media, which had reacted with uncharacteristic anger to the Louisiana slaying, made Kuriyama's death their major story Sunday.

Television news stations led with on-the-scene reports from Concord, and although Kuriyama's death came too late to be reported in Sunday's newspapers the shooting was prominently reported in Saturday papers.

Mother Teresa hospitalized in India

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW DELHI, India — Nobel Laureate Mother Teresa was admitted to the intensive care unit of a New Delhi hospital Friday after she developed fever and a lung infection, her physicians said.

The Roman Catholic nun was admitted to the All India Institute of Medical Sciences after she came to New Delhi to receive an award.

"Her condition is stable, she is sleeping right now," said Asish Roy, an attending physician. "All her vital organs are functioning normally, but she is in the intensive care unit."

Mother Teresa, who will turn 83 on Aug. 27, was taken to the hospital after she complained of restlessness during the day, and doctors advised that she be admitted immediately.

"She has a high fever and a lung infection," Roy said. "She is under constant observation by medical experts."

Despite her frail health, Mother Teresa has traveled frequently in her campaign to help the poor. For more than four decades, she has comforted destitute people, sheltered infants abandoned in trash heaps and cared for lepers.

Her efforts earned her a Nobel Peace Prize in 1979.

In May, she broke three ribs when she fell near Rome.

She created a global network of homes for the poor, from the hovels of Calcutta to the ghettos of New York and the slums of Albania, her ancestral land.

Architecture merges 2 departments

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Two departments in the College of Architecture and Design are becoming one in an effort to become more efficient.

An annual Role and Aspiration process, done by all regents institutions, led to the merging of the departments of Landscape Architecture and Regional and Community Planning, said Lane Marshall, dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

"I set up committees in both departments so it was carefully planned and thought out," Marshall said. "We did a thorough curriculum examination to find ways to be more efficient without sacrificing quality."

Tony Barnes, professor of landscape architecture and member of the faculty for 21 years, will direct the department for two years.

After that time, the department will search nationally for a full-time director, Marshall said.

Barnes said the departments have looked at the consolidation for a year and a half.

"It was part of our long range plan to look at this as being more efficient," Barnes said. "Further investigation was the appropriate way to go."

Al Keithley has been selected as associate head and director of the master's program in regional and community planning, and Stephanie Rolley will serve as associate head and director of the master's program in landscape architecture, Marshall said.

He also said Dennis L. Law, former head of landscape architecture, resigned to return to full-time teaching.

When Law took the agreement, he said he would be there for only five years, Barnes said.

"Dennis Law decided a year before the merger to step down, and he found it was a perfect time to do so," Marshall said.

"He was an outstanding department head."

Law will be on sabbatical this fall in Costa Rica and will return this spring.

Marshall said by merging the two departments, the students will be better served.

"I'm very pleased with the high level of collaboration by the faculty," he said.

School districts allowed to raise budgets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — When the 1992 Kansas Legislature turned the state's system for funding public education upside down, it included a new wrinkle allowing local school districts to exceed the base budget per pupil set by the state.

It is called the Local Option Budget, and it permits the 304 school districts to spend more money than the basic amount of $3,600 per student, if they consider it necessary to maintain the quality of local elementary- and secondary-education programs.

Kansans who pay attention to school finance and their hometown school systems now know LOB is not just a baseball statistic showing how many runners a team left on base.

The law allowed all local school boards to raise their budgets for the 1992-93 school year as much as 25 percent above the $3,600 base, or up to $4,500. All they had to do was adopt a resolution, and the LOB was legal for the first year of the law.

However, for 1993-94, the LOB resolutions were made subject to protest petitions.

That meant patrons of a school district could, by collecting the signatures of 5 percent of the voters in the district, force an election to require public approval of the increased spending.

Boards could seek authority to increase their budgets by up to 25 percent for a four-year period, or try for anything less than those maximums.

A compilation of LOB elections held this year by Jim Hays, research director of the Kansas Association of School Boards, shows that patrons have blocked spending increases in nine districts — while approving them or letting them take effect without a protest in 147 districts.

Only 23 districts were forced to have elections, and the nine were denied implementation of the LOB increase by the voters, which is less than 1 percent of the state's school districts.

"I am surprised there were that few protest petitions," Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, said. "If you look at the statistics, I would have to say the law is working.

"In those communities where there have been elections, it's stimulated discussion, and that was something we desperately needed to get the public involved. That has been a good result."

Dale Dennis, deputy state education commissioner for school finance, said the ease with which districts took the LOB didn't surprise him.

"There has been substantial property tax reduction and more community involvement than ever before," he said.

Islanders eager for Clinton's vacation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EDGARTOWN, Mass. — Martha's Vineyard was supposed to be an island unfazed by people of power, privilege or prominence. A place where Jackie Onassis can shop for groceries undisturbed, sans sunglasses.

Forget all that talk about staid, understated Martha's Vineyard.

This island has been salivating over every detail of President Bill Clinton's vacation. Itching for invitations to invitation-only dinners with the nation's top tourist. Buying up Clinton T-shirts in bulk.

"They are blase," longtime islander Harvey Ewing said of his fellow Vineyarders, as they're called. "But they are excited, too."

Innkeeper Carl Buder seconded that.

"We've had a lot of folks who are the power elite lurking about here for years, but there's something about the president of the United States that makes everyone stand up and notice," he said. "That's something that goes beyond just celebrity."

Gawkers hang out on roadsides, hoping to catch a glimpse of the beige van that is serving as the presidential limousine. Hundreds lurk along the golf links where Clinton is rumored to be teeing up.

And then there are the parties. Well, they're another matter.

Most year-round residents don't even hope for an invitation to one of the exclusive soirees where Clinton has been holding court.

"It is out of their realm," Ewing said. "The parties are put on by what we call 'summer people,' ... by people of prominence."

That would be the subculture of media and power elite who descend seasonally — everyone from humorist Art Buchwald and Washington Post Chairwoman Katharine Graham to author William Styron and former ambassador Henry Grunwald.

The movers and shakers — at least those lucky enough to make the final cut on the guest lists — have been hobnobbing nightly with Clinton in the opening phase of his 11-day vacation.

"There's a lot of jockeying among the rich and famous as to who's been invited and who hasn't and who do you talk to to get an invitation," Peggy Eastland, political writer for the Cape Cod Times, said. "It is unusual to see this kind of hoopla."

Just about every night brings a new challenge.

Thursday was the big Clinton birthday bash at the home of presidential adviser Vernon Jordan. Biggest name on the guest list — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. She caused a minor stir by leaving the island earlier Thursday but was back in time for the inaugural event of the Clinton vacation.

Friday night was the exclusive dinner thrown by Graham. Her spokeswoman refused to release the guest list, but big names that leaked out included Pulitzer Prize-winning author David McCollough, singer Carly Simon and former Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger.

Saturday night, the party moved to the home of Lucy and Sheldon Hackney — she a longtime friend of Hillary Clinton, he the incoming chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

After a one-night respite from the party circuit on Sunday, Clinton was headed back to Graham's for another soiree on Monday and rumored to be visiting Onassis — perhaps on her yacht — on Tuesday.

Styron, one sought-after dinner guest, admitted he was skipping some events and predicted even the most party-hearty would start to poop out soon.

"I think he'll spend the rest of the week relaxing," Styron said of Clinton. "He's wonderfully relaxed, and he's having a great time."

For those who haven't had luck snagging a dinner invitation or even catching up with Clinton on a street corner, all is not lost. There are other means of communication.

A local radio station is running taped messages from townspeople. And cable television is scrolling through written messages from all comers.

Given Clinton's penchant for channel-surfing, that just may hold the best promise for a response.

"You want to come fishing with me and my father on Thursday?" wrote one hopeful islander.

Professor's attempt at crossing channel fails

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

Bad weather and bad luck hindered a K-State professor's attempt to swim the English Channel.

Ed Acevedo, assistant professor of kinesiology, attempted the 20.6-mile swim on July 9 but had to quit because of inclement weather.

Wind gusts producing waves of 8 to 10 feet were the primary reasons for Acevedo's failure. He was to return at the end of July for another try, but again weather hampered his efforts.

"The weather was real brutal," Acevedo said. "The wind was a significant factor in causing me not to finish. The waves were coming from every direction."

At one point during his aborted swim, a wave came over Acevedo and caused him to swallow salt water while he was drinking glucose.

"On my third feeding, a big wave caused by the wind and a passing boat came up, and I swallowed some water. It made me sick, and I threw up. I just couldn't continue," he said.

Two swimmers were attempting the swim at the same time as Acevedo, and they also failed.

Acevedo said he will try to swim the English Channel again next summer.

"I am going to swim later, about the last week in July," he said.

"The weather was real brutal."
ED ACEVEDO

Accompanying him in the boat were his wife, Tracy, Matt Hayman, graduate student in kinesiology, and Janet Haskins, 1993 K-State graduate. Hayman and Haskins worked with Acevedo for 10 months compiling data for the swim.

While on the boat, they monitored Acevedo's progress, fed him and gave him support.

"Tracy was responsible for the feedings, while Janet and I counted the stroke rate and watched out for anything that would be adverse to the swim. Unfortunately, Janet got seasick, so she was unable to contribute much to the swim," Hayman said.

Acevedo said the main reason he wanted to swim the English Channel was to uncover new information in the exercise science field.

"This was a case study to show what exercise science has to offer people. Also, I wanted to see how much fat I needed to gain to handle the 58-degree water, how fast I needed to swim the water, and how much glucose I needed to take in. Basically, I wanted to find out how the body adapts to cold water," he said.

The English Channel Swimming Association is an organization that sanctions the boats used to take the swimmers out into the water and oversees attempts to swim the channel. It sends out a handbook once a year publicizing those who tried to swim — and whether they failed or succeeded.

Acevedo said he is going to alter the training routine for his next swim by not peaking as early. Peaking is building up the maximum amount of distance swam.

For this swim, Acevedo said he tried to peak in February so he could gain confidence. This year he said he will try to peak in July.

The 118-year-old waterway begins at Dover, England, and ends in Cape Griznez, France. Approximately 4,300 people have attempted the swim, with just 425 succeeding. Three swimmers have died trying to complete the swim.

Though he did not successfully complete the swim, Acevedo said he is certain he can finish it, if changes are made in his training.

"I know I can do this — 100 percent sure."

▶REAGAN PROTESTOR GOES ON HUNGER STRIKE

LAS VEGAS — A protester who shattered a crystal statue near former President Reagan during a Las Vegas convention has gone on a hunger strike in jail to protest the imprisonment of an Indian elder.

Rick Springer has been on a water-only diet since Aug. 9 when he was apprehended by the Secret Service in Las Vegas, said Cindy Burkhardt of the Nevada Desert Experience, which has staged numerous anti-nuclear weapons protests at the Nevada Test Site.

"I saw him yesterday, and he was still fasting. He's getting pretty thin," she said.

The 41-year-old Springer, also a nuclear testing opponent, was arrested in April 1992 after he smashed a 30-pound crystal eagle and sent shards flying toward Reagan as he spoke during a broadcasters convention. The group had presented the statue to Reagan, who escaped unharmed.

Springer pleaded guilty to a single count of interfering with the Secret Service and is serving a four-month sentence at the North Las Vegas Jail.

He said he began his hunger strike to protest the imprisonment of Western Shoshone elder Clifford Dann, who's serving a nine-month sentence in a federal prison in Southern California.

Dann was charged with endangering federal officers in connection with a protest earlier this year over a Bureau of Land Management roundup of Shoshone livestock.

An arrest warrant was issued June 7 when Springer failed to report for imprisonment at the local jail, where he's being held on a contract between the city and federal authorities. He was picked up after he gave an interview to a local TV station.

▶GIVE ME A HOME WHERE THE BUFFALO DON'T ROAM

LANCASTER, Pa. — Two bison fled a stockyard for the suburbs, dodging traffic, romping across a golf course and terrifying residents before police shot one that endangered people. The second was captured Saturday.

"I was just walking the dog," Jill Baumgartner said. "I went up to a stranger's door and said, 'Excuse me, can I come in because there's a (buffalo) there.'"

The 700-pound yearlings, a male and a female, were being moved Friday when they got away, William G. McCoy, president of Lancaster Stockyards, said.

They jumped a fence and the chase was on. The buffalo roamed through traffic on several streets, across front lawns and over a golf course.

Manheim Township police shot and killed the female Friday night after it ran into a busy freight yard, and officers feared someone might be hurt.

They caught up with the male Saturday morning near the home of Sue Smith.

"I was out feeding the birds and looked up and there was this black thing walking up with horns," she said.

Police called in Ron Lowe, a 43-year-old deer rancher who has subdued other large animals. He shot it with a tranquilizer gun, hogtied it and dragged it to a truck, which returned it to the stockyard.

"Not the biggest one I ever took down, but the meanest," Lowe said.

Street closings, sandbagging and evacuations may be finished, but the effects of the flood of 1993 are far from over.

"We know we have experienced the 100-year flood plus some," said Jim Pearson, Manhattan city manager.

"Optimistically, recovery will take another 30 days, but most likely 60," he said. "We hope to have everything fixed before we're moving snow, which could start as early as November."

About 900 volunteers combated flood waters this summer, Chuck Tannehill, assistant director of fire services, said.

"There truly was a cross section of everyone in the community involved," Tannehill said.

Volunteers from the Flint Hills Job Corps are still working in flooded areas when individual assistance is requested.

"The event occurred very quickly in relation to how long it will take to recover," Kerry Bowse, assistant to the city manager, said. "We do have quite extensive damage."

Water will continue to be released from Tuttle Creek Reservoir at 20,000 cfs (cubic feet per second), Bowse said.

"As far as we know outflow will be kept at 20,000 cfs, and we don't foresee further closings for any streets," Bowse said.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency, will be traveling to the Manhattan area within 60 days to inspect about 20 sites.

"They (FEMA) might be able to look at a couple each day," Bowse said. "It depends what they see when they get to each site. We're not sure what they'll see."

The city manager's office is unsure of the extent of damages because some areas are still too flooded to examine, Bowse said.

After examinations by FEMA, the city will be rewarded 75 percent of costs, Bowse said. The State of Kansas reimburses 10 percent, and the remaining 15 percent is paid by the city.

"What the city has learned from the flood is that we do not have any control at all," Pearson said. "We've learned our design 100 and 500 plane are fairly accurate and that continued restricting building in this area is important in restricting future losses."

"The city staff and community as a whole learned what is needed for an adequate response to this type of emergency," he said. "I hope we never have to use that type of experience again."

SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION POLICY OF KSU

The following Substance Abuse Prevention Policy is effective August 27, 1990, and is adopted pursuant to the requirements of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act Amendments of 1989 and the Drug-Free Workplace Act of 1988. A copy of the Drug Prevention Policy will be distributed annually to each student and employee of Kansas State University.

1. Kansas State University prohibits the unlawful possession, use, manufacture, or distribution of alcohol or controlled substances by students and employees on property controlled by the University, or as part of University activities. The University is committed to a program to prevent the illegal use of controlled substances and alcohol by students and employees.

2. Any student or employee of the University found to be using, possessing, manufacturing, or distributing controlled substances or alcohol in violation of the law on University property or at University events will be subject to disciplinary action in accordance with applicable policies of the State of Kansas, the Board of Regents, and Kansas State University. Disciplinary action includes, but is not limited to, expulsion, termination of employment, referral for prosecution and the completion of an appropriate substance abuse rehabilitation program.

3. As a condition of employment, all employees of Kansas State University, including student employees, shall abide by the terms of this policy statement and will notify the Provost of any criminal drug statute conviction for a violation occurring on property controlled by the University, no later than five days after such conviction. Kansas State University will, in turn, notify, as appropriate, the applicable federal agency of the conviction within ten (10) days of its receipt of notification of the conviction. The University will take appropriate disciplinary action within thirty (30) days of notification of the conviction. For purposes of this policy, "conviction" means a finding of guilt (including a plea of nolo contendere) or imposition of sentence, or both, by any judicial body charged with the responsibility to determine violations of the Federal of State criminal drug statutes.

4. The term "controlled substances" as used in this policy means those substances included in Scheduled I through V of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act and as further defined by regulation at 21 CFR 1300.11 through 1300.15. The term does not include the use of a controlled substance pursuant to a valid prescription or other uses authorized by law.

5. Local, state and federal laws provide for a variety of legal sanctions and penalties for the unlawful possession, use or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol. The Federal Controlled Substances Act provides penalties of up to 15 years' imprisonment and fines up to $25,000 for unlawful distribution or possession with the intent to distribute narcotics. For unlawful possession of a controlled substance, a person is subject to up to one year of imprisonment and fines up to $5,000 may be punished up to twice the term of imprisonment and fine otherwise authorized by law.

Kansas law provides that any person who violates the criminal statutes on controlled substances by possessing, offering for sale, distributing, or manufacturing opiates and narcotics, such as cocaine and heroin, shall be guilty of a Class C felony. For a conviction of a Class C felony, the court may sentence a person to a term of imprisonment of a minimum of three to five years, a maximum of 10 to 20 years, and a fine of up to $15,000. Unlawful possession of a depressant, stimulant or hallucinogenic drugs is punishable as a Class A misdemeanor, with a penalty of up to a year in jail and a fine of $2,500. Under Kansas law, persons under 21 years of age may be subject to minimum fines of $100 for possessing, consuming, obtaining, purchasing or attempting to obtain or purchase alcoholic liquor or cereal malt beverages. Persons convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs are subject to severe fines, imprisonment, and other penalties.

The local ordinance of Manhattan, Kansas, also include prohibitions relating to illicit drugs and alcohol. Generally, these local ordinances are similar in content to state law.

6. Students and employees of Kansas State University should be aware that the following health risks have been associated with the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol:

Hallucinogens: Increased body temperature, increased heart rate and blood pressure, sleeplessness and tremors.

Marijuana: Irritation of the lungs, emphysema, increased heart rate, short-term memory reduced, and cancer.

7. Drug and alcohol counseling, treatment or re-entry programs are available to students and employees on a national, statewide, local and campus basis. Alcohol and drug counseling are available to students at University Counseling Services in Lafene Student Health Center (532-6927). The Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service (532-6927) can provide further information about health problems and treatment related to alcohol and drug use. Employees may seek referral for alcohol and drug problems through the KSU Employee Assistance Program (532-6277) or through the State of Kansas Lifeline Program, a 24-hour toll-free assistance line (1-800-284-7575). Other sources of assistance include the Kansas Alcohol and Drug Abuse Services (913-296-3925), the National Cocaine Hot Line (1-800-COCAINE), and the National Institute on Drug Abuse Hot Line (1-800-662-4357).

Kansas State University will also present educational programs on an ongoing basis to inform employees and students of the dangers of substance abuse.

"There truly was a cross section of everyone in the community involved," Tannehill said.

Volunteers from the Flint Hills Job Corps are still working in flooded areas when individual assistance is requested.

"The event occurred very quickly in relation to how long it will take to recover," Kerry Bowse, assistant to the city manager, said. "We do have quite extensive damage."

Water will continue to be released from Tuttle Creek Reservoir at 20,000 cfs (cubic feet per second), Bowse said.

"As far as we know outflow will be kept at 20,000 cfs, and we don't foresee further closings for any streets," Bowse said.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency, will be traveling to the Manhattan area within 60 days to inspect about 20 sites.

"They (FEMA) might be able to look at a couple each day," Bowse said. "It depends what they see when they get to each site. We're not sure what they'll see."

The city manager's office is unsure of the extent of damages because some areas are still too flooded to examine, Bowse said.

After examinations by FEMA, the city will be rewarded 75 percent of costs, Bowse said. The State of Kansas reimburses 10 percent, and the remaining 15 percent is paid by the city.

"What the city has learned from the flood is that we do not have any control at all," Pearson said. "We've learned our design 100 and 500 plane are fairly accurate and that continued restricting building in this area is important in restricting future losses."

"The city staff and community as a whole learned what is needed for an adequate response to this type of emergency," he said. "I hope we never have to use that type of experience again."

SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION POLICY OF KSU

The following Substance Abuse Prevention Policy is effective August 27, 1990, and is adopted pursuant to the requirements of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act Amendments of 1989 and the Drug-Free Workplace Act of 1988. A copy of the Drug Prevention Policy will be distributed annually to each student and employee of Kansas State University.

1. Kansas State University prohibits the unlawful possession, use, manufacture, or distribution of alcohol or controlled substances by students and employees on property controlled by the University, or as part of University activities. The University is committed to a program to prevent the illegal use of controlled substances and alcohol by students and employees.

2. Any student or employee of the University found to be using, possessing, manufacturing, or distributing controlled substances or alcohol in violation of the law on University property or at University events will be subject to disciplinary action in accordance with applicable policies of the State of Kansas, the Board of Regents, and Kansas State University. Disciplinary action includes, but is not limited to, expulsion, termination of employment, referral for prosecution and the completion of an appropriate substance abuse rehabilitation program.

3. As a condition of employment, all employees of Kansas State University, including student employees, shall abide by the terms of this policy statement and will notify the Provost of any criminal drug statute conviction for a violation occurring on property controlled by the University, no later than five days after such conviction. Kansas State University will, in turn, notify, as appropriate, the applicable federal agency of the conviction within ten (10) days of its receipt of notification of the conviction. The University will take appropriate disciplinary action within thirty (30) days of notification of the conviction. For purposes of this policy, "conviction" means a finding of guilt (including a plea of nolo contendere) or imposition of sentence, or both, by any judicial body charged with the responsibility to determine violations of the Federal of State criminal drug statutes.

4. The term "controlled substances" as used in this policy means those substances included in Scheduled I through V of section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act and as further defined by regulation at 21 CFR 1300.11 through 1300.15. The term does not include the use of a controlled substance pursuant to a valid prescription or other uses authorized by law.

5. Local, state and federal laws provide for a variety of legal sanctions and penalties for the unlawful possession, use or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol. The Federal Controlled Substances Act provides penalties of up to 15 years' imprisonment and fines up to $25,000 for unlawful distribution or possession with the intent to distribute narcotics. For unlawful possession of a controlled substance, a person is subject to up to one year of imprisonment and fines up to $5,000 may be punished up to twice the term of imprisonment and fine otherwise authorized by law.

Kansas law provides that any person who violates the criminal statutes on controlled substances by possessing, offering for sale, distributing, or manufacturing opiates and narcotics, such as cocaine and heroin, shall be guilty of a Class C felony. For a conviction of a Class C felony, the court may sentence a person to a term of imprisonment of a minimum of three to five years, a maximum of 10 to 20 years, and a fine of up to $15,000. Unlawful possession of a depressant, stimulant or hallucinogenic drugs is punishable as a Class A misdemeanor, with a penalty of up to a year in jail and a fine of $2,500. Under Kansas law, persons under 21 years of age may be subject to minimum fines of $100 for possessing, consuming, obtaining, purchasing or attempting to obtain or purchase alcoholic liquor or cereal malt beverages. Persons convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs are subject to severe fines, imprisonment, and other penalties.

The local ordinance of Manhattan, Kansas, also include prohibitions relating to illicit drugs and alcohol. Generally, these local ordinances are similar in content to state law.

6. Students and employees of Kansas State University should be aware that the following health risks have been associated with the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol:

Hallucinogens: Increased body temperature, increased heart rate and blood pressure, sleeplessness and tremors.

Marijuana: Irritation of the lungs, emphysema, increased heart rate, short-term memory reduced, and cancer.

7. Drug and alcohol counseling, treatment or re-entry programs are available to students and employees on a national, statewide, local and campus basis. Alcohol and drug counseling are available to students at University Counseling Services in Lafene Student Health Center (532-6927). The Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service (532-6927) can provide further information about health problems and treatment related to alcohol and drug use. Employees may seek referral for alcohol and drug problems through the KSU Employee Assistance Program (532-6277) or through the State of Kansas Lifeline Program, a 24-hour toll-free assistance line (1-800-284-7575). Other sources of assistance include the Kansas Alcohol and Drug Abuse Services (913-296-3925), the National Cocaine Hot Line (1-800-COCAINE), and the National Institute on Drug Abuse Hot Line (1-800-662-4357).

Kansas State University will also present educational programs on an ongoing basis to inform employees and students of the dangers of substance abuse.

Man convicted after 14 years

NATION

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Three women won their case Friday against the Atlanta hotel bellhop whom they happened upon and recognized as the man who had them tortured in Ethiopia 14 years ago.

Now the women's lawyers plan to seek his deportation.

"The question is whether the U.S. government wants to provide sanctuary for a man of this ilk," Michael Tyler, attorney, said.

Hirute Abebe-Jira of Ontario, Canada; Edgegayehu Taye of Atlanta; and Elizabeth Demissie of Los Angeles faced Kelbessa Negewo in federal court in May.

In emotional testimony, they described being bound and gagged, hung upside down and beaten on the soles of their feet.

Negewo, who represented himself in the trial, admitted that he headed a police jurisdiction in Addis Ababa, where the women lived. But he denied that he ever tortured anyone.

On Friday, U.S. District Judge Ernest Tidwell said each woman clearly established her claims of torture against Negewo. He ruled that each woman should get $300,000 in punitive damages and $200,000 in compensatory damages.

"They were elated," Tyler said of the women, who declined an interview request.

Negewo has an unlisted phone number and couldn't be reached for comment. A single father who works two jobs, he has no money to pay the women.

Peter Weiss of the Center for Constitutional Rights said the ruling shows the U.S. is no longer a safe haven for torturers.

The Alien Tort Claims Act allows foreigners to sue for human rights violations. Dozens of people have sued under the act, but Negewo was the first defendant to face his alleged victims in court, attorneys said.

The torture occurred during Ethiopia's Red Terror, when the Soviet-backed military regime gained control of the government. About 20,000 people were killed or left unaccounted for.

The women, all teen-agers at the time, suspect they were arrested because they were middle class and had prominent relatives — lawyers and business officials.

Meanwhile, Tyler said he will immediately ask immigration officials to deport Negewo, who has been granted provisional political asylum here.

Tyler said in addition to Tidwell's ruling, he will present evidence that Negewo misrepresented his past when he applied to enter this country.

UN closes airport to public

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — This seaside capital's airport was closed to civilian traffic for a week today because of what the United Nations said was a threat of shelling by fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

The closing came after a night of grenade, machine gun and small-arms attacks on two U.N. military posts and some random firing at surveillance helicopters, Capt. Tim McDavitt, a U.N. spokesman, said.

No casualties were reported.

McDavitt said the airport closure was ordered after the United Nations received information indicating that the Aidid faction may have access to weapons that can threaten our aircraft and is willing to use them.

He said the barring of civilian aircraft was a prudent measure. The closing does not affect military flights.

McDavitt said the airport was closed until next Saturday to conduct a more detailed assessment of the situation. He said it could be reopened before then.

Aidid's faction is known to have mortars and rifle-propelled grenades which could be used to strike the airport from a distance.

Students inspired by papal visit

World Youth Day attendees hear Pope's message

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

To see Pope John Paul II is a once in a life time chance that became reality for some K-State students.

"From my perspective he showed great devotion and compassion for human life," Splichal said.

Splichal said she went as a part of the Catholic Youth Organization of Belleville. She said she did not see the Pope until Saturday evening at the Cherry Creek State Park in Denver.

Everyone in the park camped overnight to have mass with him on Sunday, Splichal said.

"We were told that Saturday evening there were between 500 thousand and 750 thousand people from 70 different counties at Cherry Creek State Park," Splichal said.

Splichal said Saturday night there was a prayer service. She said the Pope talked about respect for human life.

"One strong message the youth of today need to remember the ideas of society don't always correspond with the ideals of our church and that we need to live for Jesus rather than the world," Splichal said.

"It pretty much inspired youth to return home to share the Pope's message about how positive the youth are in the United States and the World."

Splichal said the Pope's next visit will be in Manila in the Philippines in 1995.

Amy Heffern, junior in secondary education, said she went to Denver as a part of the National Catholic Student Coalition.

Heffern said the first time she saw the Pope was at the Papal Welcome on Thursday evening. She said not everyone could go and the process of selection was done by a lottery.

"It was full. There were 105 countries represented there," Heffern said.

"The Pope talked for a while and went through all of the different countries that were there."

Heffern said the week was a celebration of life and how the believers need to make the church a part of their lives.

"The general message throughout the week was we need to be proud of our teachings and stand up for them and to be proud of the gospel," Heffern.

Rec to get new equipment; renovations to start

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

As students return for the fall semester, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex will be a busy place.

"We have a lot to offer," said Raydon Robel, Director of Recreational Services.

The Rec Complex has two gyms, a jogging track, a weight room, locker rooms with saunas and 16 racquetball/handball courts, with new equipment on the way.

"We will be getting two Cross Aerobics machines by Stairmaster," said Robel. "It will really work you from the waist down."

Two treadmills and new weight machines will also be arriving soon.

For the physically handicapped, the Rec Complex is getting two power trainers and a Bug Roller, he said.

"The Bug Roller is like a wheelchair treadmill," said Robel.

The Rec Complex will undergo a renovation this semester. Contractors will compete to get the job.

"Bids open on September 2, and it should take 20 months to complete,"said Robel.

The expansion will follow what is called a mall design. It will include four basketball courts, a new weight and fitness room, an exercise and multi-purpose area, and a one-eighth mile jogging track.

Relocation of Rec offices, restroom expansions and the addition of a quiet lounge and stretching area are part of the project.

At the west end of the mall will be a large screen TV/video lounge. Air conditioning will be installed throughout the entire building to cut down on the heat and high humidity.

K-State's Natatorium is being also being improved.

"The pools are going through renovation," Robel said.

The six-lane pool and the diving pool will be open, but the eight-lane pool is getting a new filter.

Campus, city services aid student job search

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

These stories are the first in a series explaining "survival techniques" for those students who are new to K-State.

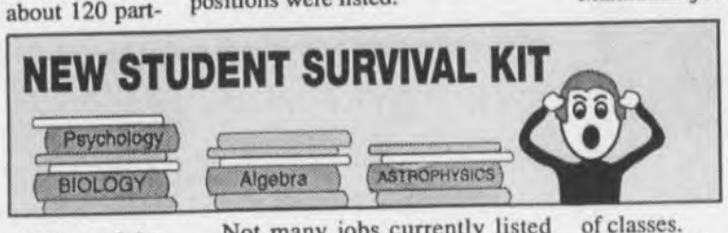
For pizza-hungry, beer-thirsty students who need extra money to finance their education, the K-State Union job board can help.

The board, located on the Union's first floor, is sponsored by the Student Governing Association and K-State Career and Employment Services. As of Aug. 16, the board listed about 120 part-time jobs on and off campus.

Part-time employment gives students an opportunity not only to finance their education, but also to learn skills and let prospective full-time employers get to know them, James Akin, director of the program, said.

"Never stand still while you're unemployed," Akin said. "Even if the job is temporary, you can learn new skills that could be helpful later."

The job board breaks down positions into food service, customer service and sales, office services, social and human services, labor and industry, science and technology and a miscellaneous category.



When using the Union job board, students should read over the listings and write down the numbers, listed at the top left corner of the cards, of six jobs that interest them.

Next, they should go to the Career Planning and Placement center in Holtz Hall. If a student is using the center for the first time, they will be asked to fill out an orange general-information card. They may also be asked to show student ID or an enrollment slip. The receptionist will ask the student to write the numbers of the job listings on the back of the card. The receptionist will give the student purple cards with information on the name of the employer and who to contact for each job.

It is the student's responsibility to contact the employer and set up an interview.

Career and Employment Services asks students to limit their information requests to six jobs each time they visit the center but encourages them to check the board daily for new listings.

Students should not be discouraged if they don't find employment right away, said Renate Stewart, a graduate assistant at the center who concentrates on part time employment. An average of 67.5 percent of jobs listed were filled each month and 44 new positions were listed.

Not many jobs currently listed with the center require work study, but many prefer work study, Stewart said. Campus jobs that require work study have a star at the top of the card.

Campus employers who prefer work study will hire students on work study first if they have two equally qualified applicants.

Students who are eligible for federal financial aid such as Pell Grants are generally eligible for work study. Students can check with financial aid office in Fairchild Hall if they are unsure of their eligibility.

Rhonda Boyd, assistant director of student financial aid, said work-study eligibility does not guarantee a job.

There are limited number of positions available. She suggested work-study students apply for positions as soon as possible.

About 165 on-campus jobs are listed with the center, Stewart said. Students might also check at individual departments if they have special technical skills or are looking for employment pertaining to their major.

The Cooperative Education department, also located in Holtz Hall, assists students in finding part-time employment related to their major.

Co-op is not for everyone. There is an application process and a grade-point average requirement for students to get into the program.

Toni Herzog, co-op coordinator, said there are not very many part-time co-op listings available right now. If students are interested in being placed in part-time or full-time positions later, they could begin the application process now, she said.

The year-old program is trying to get more local companies involved in the part-time program, she said.

Students are also welcome at the Manhattan job service center at 621 Humboldt .

There is no charge for the service. Students just need to fill out an application specifying the jobs in which they are interested and what skills they have. When a job is listed that matches the student's description, the center gives the student a call.

Oppy said most of their part-time listings require ten to 25 hours a week at a salary of $4.25 to $6 an hour.

"Most employers will be flexible with schedules if they can be," she said.

The application process varies greatly depending on the job, Stewart and Oppy said.

Some clerical or technical jobs require a resume, but other employers only ask students to fill out a general application, Stewart said.

"It is more important that you are there and eager to work," she said.

The K-State employment and the Manhattan job service centers said it is acceptable to apply for more than one job at a time.

"If you don't get the job this time, they may remember you the next time they have an opening," Stewart said.

Precautions can prevent crime

Residence halls, police offer safety tips and services

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Safety is a key issue for all students whether on campus or at home.

Sgt. Stanley Conkwright, in charge of special projects for the Riley County Police Department, said people can take many precautions to secure their homes against crime.

"It is a good idea to make your apartment or house look lived-in at all times," Conkwright said.

If you suspect a burglary, he said, do not enter your home. Call the police department immediately. It is important not to touch anything, he said.

Let police officers know about solicitors in the neighborhood and talk through the door to them, he said.

House numbers should be visible on the front and the rear of the home in case of an emergency, Conkwright said.

"Fire alarms are the first line of defense if you do have a fire in a house," said Donald Francis, fire marshal for the City of Manhattan.

Francis said all families should have a fire-escape plan designed to allow exit from every room in the home.

Alex Delgadillo, residence life program coordinator, said K-State encourages all residence hall residents to never leave their rooms without their keys.

"Our philosophy is not that we aren't a trusting environment, but why offer temptation?" Delgadillo said.

Residence halls provide students with an additional safeguard by locking doors at a certain time. The halls' Validine system allows residents to enter once their student ID is accepted by an electronic reader.

Six residence halls provide night escort services.

"Stay on well-lighted paths," he said.

Blue emergency phones on campus can be used whenever a person has a problem or just wants to be escorted, Lambert said.

Residence life encourages residents to be pro-active and get involved in the safety programs offered in the residence halls, Delgadillo said.

"It's real important for them to have that knowledge," Delgadillo said.

Twins separated, one dies in operation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Kenneth and Reitha "Joey" Lakeberg sacrificed one daughter so her twin might have a chance to live.

After 5 1/2 hours of surgery to separate the 7-week-old Siamese twins, Angela Lakeberg was resting comfortably in intensive care Saturday at The Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Her condition was critical but stable.

"I honestly didn't think either one would make it out of the operating room," the father said. Although doctors gave Angela a slim chance of long-term survival, Lakeberg said he felt totally optimistic.

"She looks good," he told WBBM-TV of Chicago. "She's got her color. She opened her eyes just briefly, and then went back to sleep of course. But we got to hold her hand and stroke her hair and she looks good."

The other twin, Amy Lakeberg, died about two-thirds of the way through Friday's operation, Dr. James A. O'Neill Jr., the chief surgeon, said.

Members of the 18-member surgical team that severed Angela's liver from Amy's and sewed the twins' shared heart into Angela said they were encouraged by early signs of success.

"I don't think it was a miracle," O'Neill said. "It was a lot of hard work."

Doctors decided which twin would live based on anatomy, O'Neill said.

Georgia Welsh, the twins' aunt, said she was surprised at the choice, since Amy seemed to be more aggressive.

"Amy was always leaning over and pinching Angela," Welsh said.

"We wished the very best to Amy," Welsh said. "We know God's with her."

Surgeons first separated the twins' liver tissue, then moved on to reconstructing the six-chambered heart. A normal heart has four chambers.

The shared heart was insufficient to keep both alive for more than a few more weeks, doctors said.

Welsh sat outside the hospital during the early hours of the surgery. In one hand, she clutched a plaster imprint of both the twins' 2-inch hands, made minutes before they were anesthetized for surgery.

She made funeral arrangements for Amy over a cellular phone.

"We were all standing there praying and Angela holds her hand up with her thumb in the air," Joey said.

The operation was the fourth at the hospital on conjoined twins with shared hearts. The longest survivor, separated in 1977, died of liver failure after three months.

O'Neill said the chances of long-term survival for Angela were slim.

He said; however, that surgery would not have been recommended had there not been a reasonable chance.

The twins were born June 29 at Loyola University Medical Center in suburban Chicago. Doctors there opposed separation.

Lakeberg, of Wheatfield, Ind., and his wife brought their daughters to Philadelphia on Tuesday. Although he was recently hired by a welding company after being unemployed for a year, they have no insurance to cover the hundreds of thousands of dollars in medical costs.

Indiana Public Aid provides $997 per day, and Children's Hospital has said it will absorb the rest.

Welsh said criticism about the Lakebergs' decision to proceed with the operation despite long odds and high costs was misguided.

Stark recovers from mennigitis

KATIE WALKER
Collegian

A K-State sophomore in business has recovered from a summer bout of meningococcal meningitis and has returned to K-State as a full-time student.

Jamie Stark was hospitalized for the illness from May 14 to June 24, and was in a coma for the first five days.

"I don't have any finger prints on those fingers, and the prints won't grow back," Stark said.

They had to be removed because the bacteria that causes meningitis had collected there and killed the tissue. She still has all her fingers and finger nails.

Meningococcal meningitis is transmitted by virus or bacteria. The bacterial form is more serious and is the type Stark contracted.

Because she had been lying in bed for so long, Stark has been doing physical therapy ever since her release. Walking and bike riding built her leg muscles. Working with putty strengthened her fingers.

"If you've been exposed, there's an antibiotic that's taken from two to four days," he said.

Meningitis is spread by touching things that the person with meningitis has touched. Keeping your hands away from your face and washing your hands often can minimize the risk of contracting meningitis, Moeller said.

Every year, 15-20 cases of meningitis are reported, he said. Stark's case was isolated. Doctors are assuming she carried a benign strain, which, for unknown reasons, becomes virulent, Moeller said.

Stark was living in the Alpha of Clovia Scholarship House when she became ill. Residents were notified and on medication within 15 hours of Stark's hospitalization.

All the residents are fine, Moeller said.

"This bacteria is one that likes our central nervous system, which is our main control," he said.

The central nervous system includes the brain and spinal cord. As these become infected, any number of things can happen, from blindness and deafness to retardation.

Stark had the same form of meningitis that killed Christopher Henley, University of Kansas freshman on May 4. He had been hospitalized for two days.

▶ KING ARRESTED FOR DRUNKEN DRIVING

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rodney King was arrested Saturday for drunken driving after he crashed his car into a wall, police said.

King was driving in an area west of downtown Los Angeles at about 1:40 a.m. when his car plowed into the wall, police Detective Chad Wetzel said.

Police decided King was driving under the influence and booked him on the misdemeanor charge, Wetzel said. He was released on his own recognizance, Detective James Edward said.

Tests indicated King's blood alcohol level was .19, more than twice the legal limit of .08, Wetzel said. The charge was a misdemeanor because no other vehicles were involved. King was driving with two passengers. No one was hurt.

On March 3, 1991, King was stopped for speeding and was beaten by police officers. Two officers were sentenced to 2-1/2 years in prison each for violating King's civil rights.

King has been arrested several times since the videotaped beating, but no charges were filed.

On May 28, 1991, he was arrested after vice police accused him of trying to pick up a transvestite male prostitute. Police said King tried to run down two undercover officers who approached his vehicle.

On June 26, 1992, King was arrested after his wife told police she had been injured in a domestic dispute and feared for her life. Police determined there was insufficient evidence to book King.

▶ MAYS SAYS SHE WON'T HAVE CHILDREN

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — The girl who was switched at birth and won a court order barring her biological parents from contacting her said she will never have children of her own.

"I don't want them to go through what I went through," 14-year-old Kimberly Mays said at a news conference Friday.

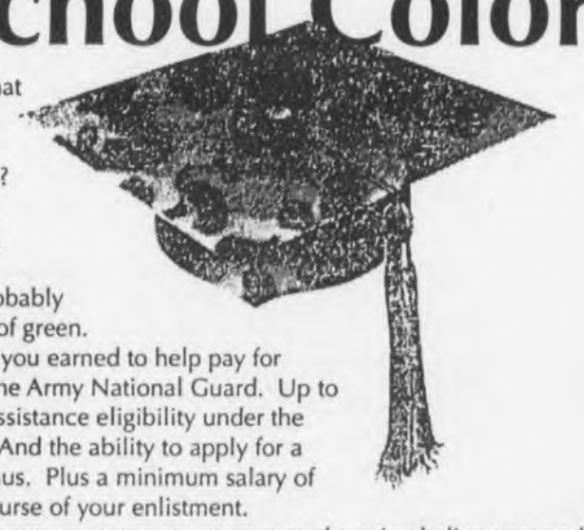
She was responding to comments by the attorney for her birth parents, Ernest and Regina Twigg, that even when she is an adult they will seek visitation rights with her children as the biological grandparents.

The Twiggs have been pursuing Kimberly for five years, since the swap at a rural Florida hospital in 1978 came to light.

Circuit Judge Stephen Dakan ruled Wednesday that Bob Mays, who raised Kimberly since the swap, is the girl's legal father. Dakan said the Twiggs have no right to act as her parents or even visit her.

Describing her immediate reaction to the decision, Kimberly said, "I jumped up and down and yelled. I got goose bumps."

"It was a wonderful feeling," her father added, "almost like a cancer was removed from my body."



Kimberly, a blond, bespectacled girl who wore a white dress and broad smile, thanked her father and his current wife, Darlena, for helping her during the tough times.

As for the Twiggs, Kimberly said she just wants them to leave her alone.

"I want to get on with my life," she said.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?
If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.
There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.
Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.
All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Local band travels to Los Angeles for recording deal

Truck Stop Love joins label that represents Weird Al Yankovic, Survivor

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

π Local bands continue to fly in the Manhattan sky, but Truck Stop Love has just broken the sound barrier.

After signing a recording contract last spring with Scotti Brothers Records, the band recently traveled to Los Angeles to record a six-song, self-titled album.

With this deal, Truck Stop Love joined a record label representing such artists as James Brown, Weird Al Yankovic and Survivor.

The contract provided the band with an all-expenses paid EP, with an option of seven albums to be completed in the future.

"We are the first band out of Manhattan to sign a major record deal," Eric Melin, drummer for Truck Stop Love, said.

Melin also said he is happy Kansas has finally been recognized as a hot-bed for rock music.

"I'm proud that we were finally noticed," he said.

Formed in 1989, the four-piece band has played at an MTV-sponsored contest in Dallas, appeared in the College Music Journal and toured consistently throughout the Midwest.

Melin said remaining active as a complete unit has kept the band alive. Mozier said persistence was the key.

Mozier also said a dedicated fan base is what kept them going. He said although the band has always had a following, its recognition has been increasing lately.

Although recognized and briefly courted by Epic Records, Truck Stop Love chose a contract with Scotti Brothers for several reasons.

"Scotti Brothers are a major label but have a limited number of artists. We'll be given number-one priority," he said.

Another contributing factor for their decision was a guaranteed release of an album this fall.

"It was more work than I expected. We would spend a couple hours working to get the tone right. That put us in the crankiest of moods."
MATT MOZIER

"We want to get the ball rolling because we are ready," Melin said.

Truck Stop Love spent a month in a recording studio with producer Joe Chiccarelli and co-producer Tracy Chisholm, who also produced Belly's latest album.

"The first week, we put down the basic tracks," Mozier said. "After that, it was mostly overdubs."

However, working to produce a quality record is very different from playing something live.

"It was more work than I expected. We would spend a couple hours working to get the tone right," Mozier said.

"That put us in the crankiest of moods," he said.

Melin said hard work was necessary to have a strong debut album.

"We went out there and lucked out. He (Chiccarelli) got what he needed to have a good record," he said.

Although relieved to have completed the album, the band still has reservations about its Sept. 14 CD release.

"We're a little nervous — a little worried," Mozier said.

Tentatively, the band is planning to have a pre-release party in Manhattan to present its new material as well as thank its fans.

Overall, Melin said the band is ready for the release.

"The entire album is full of energy," he said. "This is our introduction to the big leagues."

TRAVEL

Students spend 3 weeks touring England to study theater

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

For one group of students, the best way to study theater was to visit its home.

Donald Hedrick, professor of English, took five students to England this summer to study British theater. Students spent one week studying in Stratford and two weeks studying in London, he said.

Students attended 13 productions, Hedrick said. He said six of the productions were Shakespearean and performed by The Royal Shakespearean Company.

"It is the most professional thing you can imagine," Hedrick said.

Six days of the week the group participated in three hour class sessions in which they discussed text and performance, he said. During the last hour of the sessions, actors from the performances and critics came to participate.

"It is the most professional thing you can imagine."
DONALD HEDRICK

Sarah Caldwell, senior in English and economics, said that she was impressed with the actors' scholarly abilities, their interpretation of the script and their knowledge of all aspects of production. She also said the actors were accessible to the public.

"You could sit down with them and have a drink," Caldwell said. "They would ask you about your thoughts, and they really do care what you think."

"Talking with people experienced at that level was just phenomenal," she said.

Rebecca Olivas, senior in English, and Caldwell both commented on the quality of the performances. They said the productions made Shakespeare both understandable and entertaining.

"The sets, lighting and everything was so fabulous that anybody would like it," Caldwell said.

Olivas said the knowledge gained can be applied to her future teaching career.

"It offered me a good opportunity for a different perspective aside from reading," she said. "I am also very excited, and I hope that I can share my enthusiasm with my students."

Caldwell agreed that the experience added to what she had learned in the classroom.

"It is the best thing I've done to enhance my education out of the classroom. It broadened my perspective a lot," Caldwell said.

Family returns to flooded neighborhood

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Cheryl Sjodahl is back home now, a fact of life most people take for granted.

Yet, it was only a few weeks ago she and her family watched with dread as water crawled nearer to her home on Adams Street near the Fairmont trailer park.

Although all the other houses in her neighborhood succumbed to the flood waters, Sjodahl and her family were lucky. The water never got inside their home.

"We watched with our neighbors as the water came closer and closer everyday to our house," Sjodahl said. "It was a few feet from the sandbags when the water finally started to recede."

Their house is right next to the Kaw River, so their neighborhood was one of the first to be evacuated.

The family was notified of the impending water on July 18. They had six hours to gather their things before they were evacuated, but it was several days before water started reaching the houses.

"We thought it couldn't happen to us, but we could see the water coming," Sjodahl said.

"We threw things in bags and loaded up as much as possible before we had to evacuate,"she said.

"There wasn't a sandbagging effort until the Dix area was threatened," she said. "Later we placed sandbags around the doors. We knew we couldn't stop the water, but we thought we could slow it down."

Cheryl, her boyfriend and her two children, ages 11 and 15, moved to her mother's house, which was in the area.

The family didn't even have a chance to unpack their things when, four days later, the family was given two hours to evacuate their new refuge.

The family, along with several other families from their neighborhood, then took up residence at the Manhattan Days Inn where the family stayed until Aug. 15.

"At first the kids didn't realize what was happening. It was like a vacation for them — going to grandma's and then Days Inn with the pool," Sjodahl said.

"After a while though, with four people living in one room, they ran out of things to do,"she said.

But the Red Cross did help the family with their hotel bill and with money to buy school clothes for the kids, who ruined most of their clothes while sandbagging.

Even though water didn't get into the house, the Sjodahls had a lot of cleaning up to do.

"The smell was awful," Sjodahl said. "The ground was so saturated you couldn't hardly walk on it."

The water from their well had to be purified and everything scrubbed. The floors had warped from water getting into an old basement, which had been destroyed by the flood in 1951. Snakes, spiders, fleas and mice had invaded the house during the family's absence.

"Our house was a mess, "Sjodahl said. "But after I saw some of my neighbor's homes, I felt lucky."

The neighborhood stuck together, Sjodahl said.

"Everyday we all went out to see where the water was," she said. "We would see that water was coming close to someone's house, and then the next day water would be in that house."

It was the little things that upset most people, she said.

"One of my friends got really upset when she saw her daughter's tricycle floating away," she said.

The bicycles placed on pile-ons along the Kaw River acted as a symbol of what the people in Sjodahl's neighborhood were going through, she said.

Not all the flood victims will be returning to the area they used to call home.

A house across from the Sjodahls' collapsed and the family lost everything.

Another of Sjodahl's neighbors decided not to return to their damaged home and moved into a trailer park.

"They had three inches of water in their house. Her husband comes out everyday and saves what he can," Sjodahl said.

Area receives over 15 inches of rain

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Water brought destruction to Manhattan as what was called a 100-year flood poured into the area in July.

During the fourth of July weekend, park rangers started to worry about possible flooding in the Manhattan area. Most of the Tuttle Creek State Park was already closed because of flooding.

The water level at Tuttle was increasing at a rate of five feet per day and the National Weather Service was predicting no break in the cycle of daily heavy rains for the area.

"When we saw the weather services' predictions for the same pattern of rain, our worst fears where confirmed," Paul Weidhaas, park ranger, said.

The month of July was a wet one for northeastern Kansas, just as the weather service had predicted. The amount of rain that fell was equal to about half of what is normal for an entire year — 16.9 inches.

■ By July 20, the water level reached the top of the dam flood gates, a record 1,136.0 feet above sea level. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers decided to start releasing water from Tuttle.

"This is the first time since the dam was built (in 1951) that we open the flood gates with water behind them," Weidhass said.

"We held back water as long as we could," he said. "We tried to help out the people downstream as much as we could as long as we could."

Tuttle Creek is a small link in the expansive Mississippi River basin. Water from the Big and Little Blue Rivers drain into the Tuttle Creek Reservoir, and water from the dam then empties into the Kansas and Missouri Rivers.

While the wall of water at Tuttle was rising, so were sandbag levees in Manhattan.

A wall, eight feet high in places, stretched from Dix Drive to Morning Glory Drive — another from Harvey Drive to Violet Circle.

■ By Wednesday July 21, Tuttle was releasing 25,000 cubic feet per second and the corps of engineers was making plans to raise the dam's output. Afraid that levees might break, city officials took steps to protect volunteers.

■ Friday July 23, Tuttle was releasing 50,000 cfs from the dam. Overnight, sandbag levees broke allowing streams of tears and water to pour into the Dix addition.

Orders to evacuate had already been given to approximately 1,000 homes. In Manhattan, the area east of Casement Road and south from the KMKF radio station to Hays Drive was evacuated. Hunter's Island south of town was also evacuated.

Donald Francif, Manhattan fire marshal, said members of the fire department were working double and triple shifts evacuating and assisting people in threatened areas.

■ Saturday, July 24, the corps of engineers raised the Tuttle Dam output to 60,000 cfs to combat the 110,000 cfs of water that was pouring into the reservoir.

Output remained at that level until July 30.

Families, the city and the corps of engineers are still trying to determine the exact amounts of damage done in the area. Estimates are in the millions of dollars.

■ On July 18, a Red Cross disaster shelter was established in the K-State Union. Victims were given a place to stay and hot meals. Child care, counseling, health care and entertainment were also provided.

Red Cross Emergency Response Vehicles were used to provide meals at evacuation and sandbagging sites.

Kris McLean, mass care assistant officer in charge of Kansas, said, approximately 295 people volunteered with the Red Cross in the Manhattan area.

"The flood united people and made them really work together," she said. "There were no age or ethnic separations among the people that volunteered."

The flood affected everyone, Pollock said.

"The flood made us all aware of each other," Pollock said, "We realized we were all fallible and that we all lived in the same realm."

This was the first time Pollock had volunteered at a Red Cross disaster center. She plans to use what she has learned in Manhattan to volunteer on a national level, because working for the Red Cross, she said, made her feel like part of a bigger community.

Theatre auditions begin tonight

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

There isn't any time for stage fright. The K-State Theatre Group is starting auditions for its fall productions.

Marci Maullar, general manager of KSU Theatre, said 65 parts are available. She said 150 auditions usually fill those parts.

Students wanting to audition will not need to prepare monologues, Maullar said. They will be given time to review the script and will read to the director, designers and stage manager.

"A lot of people appear pretentious, and that is more for effect," he said. "Everyone is experiencing tension."

Laura Camien, senior in theater, said she agreed.

"When anxiety is in your head, it can be heard in your voice and seen in body movements," she said. "The director is hoping that you will be great."

It is important to be confident, take risks and be yourself, Aumiller said. It is also vital to be familiar with the script, flexible in the interpretation and to try to connect with the audience.

DEREK THOMAN/Collegian

Kate Anderson, director of theater, said they have cold readings so non-majors won't have to worry about preparing a monologue.

"We look to involve as many new people as possible each semester."

Maullar said students can view scripts in the speech department office in Nichols Hall. Call-backs will be Wednesday.

Students can audition for "Hello Dolly!", "A Gathering of Fools," written by Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of speech, and "The Beautiful People" by James Edward Norman, graduate student in speech.

Ebony Theatre Co. will be producing "Fences," a story of the black male in modern society.

Reader needs to be more sensitive

Dear Cassandra,

I thought it probably couldn't hurt to write to you ... I mean this is anonymous and all.

I have this dilemma, and every time I start to talk about it with my friends, they just get mad and say they don't want to talk to me about it. I suppose they're sick of hearing about it. Anyway, here goes.

I met this guy, Jed, this summer and he's really cool. He's tall and kind of dark and has really beautiful eyes. And then there's my old boyfriend, Peter, from last spring who is also really cute, even though he's blond and not as "built" as Jed. (You know what I mean.) And then, to make matters even worse, I just met Charles in Aggieville this last week, and he is definitely the sexiest!

So my problem is pretty clear. I don't know who to pick and be with. I mean they're all so sweet and cool. It's not like I don't get along with all of them or anything.

I think about this problem all of the time, because I know that one of them would be just perfect for me. I just can't decide. Help!

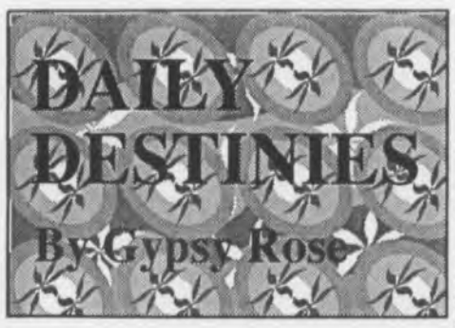
Signed,
Indecisive and in love

Dear Shallow Little Girl,

Whoa little mama ... WHAT are you thinking?

You describe these men you have to "pick" from strictly in terms of their physical appearance. No mention of their personalities, their likes and dislikes, or how compatible you are with each of them — nothing. It's only "he's got great eyes, and he's really cool."

No wonder your friends don't want to discuss this problem with you. It's absolutely a waste of time. Until you can stop objectifying these men, stop regarding them as pieces of meat from which you can pick and choose, you have little chance of finding "the one that would be just perfect."



If you want a playtoy, go to Wal-Mart and buy a plastic hotdog.

Welcome to Cassandra, an advice column about love, lifestyles and relationships.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22) — Today is a good day to exercise. Go to the rec. It's a great way to pick up dates. Tonight: Pig out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Stop being a victim, take responsibility for your life. Tonight: Talk to the person you trust most.

SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Stop letting your job take over your life. Run naked around your yard to relax. Tonight: Party.

CAPRICORN (DEC.22- Jan. 19) — Rediscover your roots. Go to a familiar place and relive old times. Tonight: Rent a B-movie. How about "Shag?"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Do a good deed today. It is better to give than take. Tonight: Live on the wild side.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Do something drastic to your hair. Maybe a green mohawk. Tonight: Go on a blind date.

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19) — You are in the right frame of mind to begin classes today. Count on doing well. Tonight: Touch bases with friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A long-standing and troubling problem will be resolved today. Tonight: Celebrate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Finances will improve with time, be patient. Tonight: Call your mother.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Today is the day old friends will come back into your life. Tonight: Look under the bed before you go to sleep.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Avoid sharp objects and large appliances today. You may feel like you are the star of "Maximum Overdrive." Tonight: Do the same.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Studies show that 78% of K-State students participate in Recreational Services programs. Diversity abounds with persons of all ages, races, nationalities and physical abilities participating. Regardless of experience, gender or age, there is something for you.

We're here to help you get involved and hope you'll make Recreational Services your Fitness Connection at Kansas State. You'll feel better both mentally and physically by being involved, and the friendships and experiences will be long-lasting.

Eligibility:

Recreational Services facilities are available to authorized users only. Participants must present a current validated student ID or facility use card each time admitted. Cards may be purchased in the Recreational Services office (second floor of the Recreation Complex), Monday - Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Cards are not sold to the general public. Facility users must be affiliated with Kansas State University. Proper ID is required. Call the Recreational Services office at 532-6980 for further details.

Blood Pressure Checks at the Rec

Lafene Health Center will be conducting blood pressure checks at the Rec Complex this semester. The first one will be held Tuesday, August 31, 5:00 p.m. - 7:00 p.m. in the lobby on the 2nd floor of the Rec Complex.

Working it Out

Wildcat Workouts

Recreational Services presents WILDCAT WORKOUTS, daily aerobic and step sessions, beginning Monday, August 23. The Wildcat Workouts are designed to help you look better, feel better, tone muscles, and improve cardiovascular fitness. Exercise leaders will motivate and encourage you through high intensity/low impact choreographed movements. We invite you to workout on the wild side.

Wildcat Workout, Aerobic and Step Sessions

Who's New at Rec Services

We are happy to welcome two new members to the Recreational Services office staff.

Sarah Forsyth is a native Texan. Before coming to KSU, Sarah worked for Texas Christian University as the Aquatic and Fitness Coordinator for Rec Sports and was on the faculty teaching aquatics for the Department of Physical Education. Sarah earned a bachelor of fine arts degree from the University of North Texas in Denton, Texas. Sarah's master's degree in physical education was earned at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, Texas.

At K-State, Sarah is Assistant Director of Recreational Services/Aquatics and Fitness. She is responsible for the lifeguard staff, exercise leaders and all the aquatics/fitness programs. Sarah is looking forward to working with the student staff and further developing the aqua and fitness programs with student input and new ideas.

Russell Spicer calls Colorado Springs, Colorado his hometown. He earned a bachelor of science degree in corporate fitness from Colorado State University and a master's degree in physical education/sports administration from Kansas State University. He is also a certified pool operator and a certified recreational sports specialist.

Most recently, Russ was the Assistant Director of Informal Recreation/Facilities at Xavier University in Cincinnati, Ohio. As the Assistant Director/Facility Manager with KSU Recreational Services, he will supervise the student staff at the Rec Complex, as well as be responsible for the facilities.

Russ is excited to be at K-State and is looking forward to watching KSU athletics.

Please help us welcome Sarah and Russ to K-State!

Intramural Mania

INTRAMURALS–The Intramural program offers a wide variety of individual and team sports. We invite all students, faculty and staff to participate. It's a great way to meet people, have fun, and stay fit!

INTRAMURAL MANAGERS–Intramural Managers represent and assist organizations or living groups with their participation in Intramural programs. They are responsible for linking the Intramural program and their group.

K-State aids displaced students

WADE SISSON

Summer flood waters have left some K-State students without housing.

Some University offices are offering assistance to such students, who are facing extra challenges as the semester begins.

The Consumer Relations Board, which is located in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Union, is offering advice for students whose apartments sustained flood damage.

"One of the first things they want to know is what the landlord has to do," Tracy Hearson, director of the CRB, said.

The first thing students must realize, Hearson said, is flood damage is not the landlord's fault. Also, landlords are only required to have insurance for the structure — not for the contents.

In order for students to move out of an apartment, it must be a health or safety hazard, Dianne Urban, students' attorney, said.

"We're here to protect students from unfair business practices, but we're also here to protect businesses from unfair complaints," he said.

However, if one room in an apartment is uninhabitable, tenants should determine how much they pay per day for use of that room. After counting the days the room was unusable, tenants can ask the landlord to adjust rent accordingly, he said.

For students who find themselves without housing, four floors of Marlatt Hall have been made available for short- and long-term stays, said Bob Burgess, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services for business operations.

Students whose apartments are uninhabitable because of flood damage must bring their lease to be eligible for a space in Marlatt.

"With our contract being for a full year, we wanted to make sure that when they can get back into their apartments, they are able to do so," Burgess said.

The rates are negotiated with the students, he said, and vary depending on the amount of time each student must stay in the residence hall.

For a short-term stay, loosely defined as less than 30 days, a student pays about $8 per day. This price does not include meals.

Students staying for more than 30 days pay the standard rate of $13.75 per day, including meals.Students who return to Manhattan and can't find apartments won't have this option.

Because these students were not directly displaced by the flood, their only option is to sign a full-year residence hall lease, Burgess said.

WATER DAMAGE HOW-TO

1. Hang on to the key. The tenant may have to prove that damage exists.
2. Tenants within the city limits should call the Manhattan Housing Code Inspector at 537-0056. The inspector will send a letter to the landlord detailing what repairs are needed. The inspector can be subpoenaed as a witness.
3. Because a landlord can sue for unpaid rent, the law requires a written letter to the landlord. When delivering the letter, the tenant should take along a witness and keep an extra copy of the letter.
4. If repairs are needed, a 14-30 form must be filled out. These are available in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Union. If the landlord gives the tenant an apartment in bad condition, the tenant can move out. In order to get the rent and deposit returned, the tenant must notify the landlord within five days of moving out.

For more information, call the Consumer Relations Board at 532-6541.

Rain caused delays in construction of Haymaker lot

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

A heat index of 106 was not the only problem residents moving into Haymaker Hall last week faced. The unfinished parking lot, which surrounds the north side of the building, was an obstacle.

Unending rain this summer left the parking lot a swamp for many days, delaying its completion. The parking lot was originally to be completed by Aug. 18.

Assuming no further weather delays, the lot should be completed Sept. 9, Cole Stanley, assistant director of Haymaker Hall, said. Currently, the lot is half pavement and half dirt.

The new parking lot, which faces Claflin Road, will contain 92 parking stalls, which is five fewer than last year. Part of the parking lot, located in front of the building, will be filled with dirt to plant trees and grass, Stanley said.

Because the parking lot was unfinished, residents devised a system of stations to eliminate some of the traffic and congestion problems faced when the students arrived.

"The efforts to keep congestion to a minimum were coordinated by the Department of Housing and Dining Services, the Division of Facilities, the contractors and city officials," Kim Alfano, director of Haymaker Hall, said.

Campus police also directed traffic at the light and also at the back parking lot during the morning rush, she said.

Haymaker residents were first directed into the unfinished parking lot where their belongings were unloaded on the lawn. They were then asked to move their vehicles to parking lot B2. When they returned for their belongings, they were allowed to move into their rooms.

Kirk Borough, senior in marketing, and Eric Davis, junior in landscape architecture, both Haymaker residents, said the system was running as smoothly as could be expected. Borough and Davis were among the volunteers who were assisting with the moving-in efforts.

There were only minor problems during the rush, said Ray Kahmeyer, sophomore in chemistry and secondary education, and Haymaker resident. Kahmeyer directed traffic in and out of the unfinished parking lot.

"Parents didn't like putting everything in the grass and not being able to park," Kahmeyer said.

Paul Simpson, hall president and sophomore in economics, said having unloading stations really helped. Volunteers directed traffic, unloaded vehicles and directed drivers to B2, he said.

"After the first rush things began to fall into place," Simpson said.

Kathy Loyd, mother of Darrel Loyd, junior in business, said this is the third year she has moved her son into Haymaker Hall.

"The young men were very courteous and quick," she said.

Efforts to make this day run smoothly began with a letter to residents of Haymaker Hall, said Alex Delgadillo, resident life program coordinator.

"We took a pro-active stance by sending a letter to Haymaker residents about the parking situation," Delgadillo said.

Russell Entz, freshman undecided, said he was notified of the parking situation by the summer letter.

It took about 15 minutes to unload and 30 minutes to take belongings up to the room with the system the residents devised.

Lafene improves student services

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

New hours, improved services and an appointment-only policy are changes this semester at Lafene Health Center.

Lafene director Lannie Zweimiller said the center is trying to provide better services and hours to students at a lesser cost.

"We are trying to enhance service in the evening for students," Zweimiller said.

Last semester, Zweimiller and staff members began to analyze the utilization of the clinic using information obtained from a student survey.

The Student Health Advisory Committee, Student Senate and the administration decided these changes should be made to better serve the student body, Zweimiller said.

The health center will now be open Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. with a physician on duty at all times.

Before, the center's hours were from 8 a.m. to midnight with a physician on staff from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. After 4:30 p.m., a physician had to be called in for emergencies.

The center has also stopped charging after-hour fees for calling in a physician.

Now, students will not have to pay more money for those services. But if students need medical services when Lafene is not open, they will need to go to either the Saint Mary or Memorial hospitals, Zweimiller said.

Zweimiller said he encourages students to make an appointment to see a physician.

In addition to these services, Lafene also offers speciality clinics, Larry Moeller, medical director, said.

"Specialty clinics' hours are open from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.," Moeller said.

"Our staff are all licensed care-givers. We review our medical practices, and an outside agency also reviews us," Moeller said.

The medical staff is made up of eight physicians, one physical assistant and one nurse practitioner and more than 20 nurses, Moeller said.

Chris Shock, junior in elementary education, said she thinks the new hours will limit the time students have to spend waiting to see a physician.

"I think the new hours are going to be a lot easier to work into my schedule," Shock said.

"Last year, when I went there, I had to wait because of walk-ins."

Woman says robbery was racially motivated

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A motorist robbed at the intersection where Reginald Denny was beaten testified Monday that a black man allowed black drivers through the area, but pointed at her and said: "Get her. She's not a sister."

Alicia Maldonado, whose car was damaged and purse taken at the intersection where last spring's riots began, said that the traffic slowed as she approached the area.

"I had to slow down because traffic was being directed according to the color of your skin," she said.

Maldonado was the first prosecution witness in the trial of Damian Williams, 20, and Henry Watson, 28, who are accused of beating Denny and seven others at the start of the April 29, 1992, riots.

But, does God speak Wookie also?

RED LAKE FALLS, Minn. (AP) — The reading at St. John's Lutheran Church told the story of the Tower of Babel — in Klingon, one tongue God didn't include when he confounded the languages.

Klingons are the alien adversaries of those on the "Star Trek" starship Enterprise. And they are imaginary. But that didn't stop Glen Proechel from planning a Sunday service in "tlhIngan," the Klingon language.

"Sometimes you have to use fiction to deal with the problems of real life," said Proechel, director of a two-week camp in northwestern Minnesota where the Klingon language is being taught.

About 50 people attended Sunday's service. Proechel translated the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed into Klingon.

Reno to participate in Wichita forum

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno plans to participate in a public forum here Monday on guns, gangs and violence.

Glickman and Kassebaum said in addition to the forum at Tabernacle Baptist Church, Reno will be involved in other activities to be announced later.

Spacecraft suffering from malfunction

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — NASA engineers say the "missing" Mars Observer spacecraft was probably hit by a temporary computer glitch and is not lost in space forever.

They repeatedly radioed commands Sunday in an attempt to get a response from the spacecraft, a high-tech robot designed to give scientists their most detailed global look at Mars.

Even without a reply, Mars Observer has automatic computer programming to make it fire its thrusters and start orbiting the Red Planet on Tuesday. It then would try to contact Earth on Wednesday, said Glenn Cunningham, manager of the $980 million project run by Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Kansas wheat harvest finally finished

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Farmers finished bringing in the 1993 wheat crop during the past week, making it the latest finish to a harvest in 41 years, the state's official crop-monitoring agency said Monday.

Dry, hot weather is ideal for wheat harvesting, and some parts of the state, particularly the northeast, saw little of it in late June and July. Kansas Agricultural Statistics said farmers have not finished so late in the year since 1952.

Sprint markets calling card to students

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Sprint introduced a long-distance calling card on Monday that allows college students to make calls for 9 cents per minute during late-night hours.

The new Collegiate FONCARD's rate is good from 11 p.m. to 6 a.m. The card also allows students to stage a conference call with two other people in different places for the 9-cent rate.

A surcharge, which is applied to all FONCARD calls, adds 80 cents to the cost of a call, making a 10-minute call from Chicago to Los Angeles $1.70 at the collegiate rate. The same call with FONCARD would cost $3.40 at regular daytime rates and $2.50 at regular evening rates.

Abortion fight leads to shoving match

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The fight over abortion came down to pushing and shoving outside two Wichita clinics this weekend, but no major disturbances were reported in the wake of a doctor's shooting.

Dr. George Tiller was shot in the arms on Thursday by an anti-abortion activist. Rachelle Renae "Shelley" Shannon, 37, of Grants Pass, Ore., is scheduled for a court appearance today in Sedgwick County District Court. She is charged with attempted murder in the attack.

On Saturday, about three dozen people from anti-abortion and pro-choice groups jostled and exchanged words outside the clinics.

At Women's Health Care Services, clinic supporters shouted down protesters who tried to talk to incoming patients. Pro-choice volunteers sometimes pushed abortion protesters out of the way and shouted, "Keep moving. Go! Go! Go!" supporters said they

FOOD

Ice cream, meat, bread: All for sale in campus departments near you

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Growing, processing and selling food is a large part of K-State's heritage.

Today, consumers can buy a variety of meats, dairy products and baked goods on campus. The majority of these products are grown on University land and processed with University equipment.

Perhaps the best known campus food outlet, besides residence hall cafeterias, is the Dairy Bar. Located in Call Hall, the Dairy Bar is known for its K-State ice cream.

Ice cream can be bought by the half-gallon or in cones. Only 12 flavors are available at one time, Renee Westgate, Dairy Bar manager, said, but flavors change frequently.

Chocolate fanatics need not worry about being deprived of their favorite flavor, however.

"Chocolate, vanilla, strawberry and blueberry are always available," Westgate said.

The Dairy Bar also sells shakes, malts, floats and Cool Cat, which Westgate described as being similar to a Dairy Queen Blizzard.

K-State has had dairy processing facilities since 1905. The dairy facilities moved to the basement of Waters Hall in 1923, when milk products first began being sold on campus.

The sales counter and processing facilities moved to their present location in Call Hall in 1964, Harold Roberts, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

All the milk, ice cream, cheese and butter are made from milk produced by the K-State dairy herd, Mike Forbes, dairy plant supervisor, said.

Meat is also available on campus every Friday in Weber Hall throughout the year. Beef, pork and lamb are all available, John Wolf, meat sales manager, said.

As with the Dairy Bar products, all meat products are from K-State animals, raised on K-State land and processed with K-State facilities.

"K-State has been selling meat at least since the 1960s and probably well before that," Wolf said.

The meat sales counter moved to its current location in Weber Hall after the building was remodeled in 1988.

A student-run club, the Bakery Science and Management Club, sells baked goods every Wednesday in Shellenberger Hall. This group sells several different kinds of bread and sweets.

"The faculty just peeks over their shoulders to see what the students are doing," Joseph Ponte, professor of grain science and industry and faculty adviser to the Bakery Science and Management club, said.

Profits from the sale of the baked items help send students to professional meetings each year, Ponte said.

Prices of all K-State products are comparable to what are found in local stores, Wolf said. This is a deliberate attempt to be fair and not undercut private businesses, he said.

"We try to be as fair as we can. We depend on private industry to support research and other activities. It is in our interest to be on good terms with industry," Wolf said.

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Dale Niedteldt, Dairy research assistant, stocks ice cream made at Call Hall in freezers at the Dairy Bar. Ice cream is made once a week to be sold by the gallon or by the scoop. The Dairy Bar also sells shakes, malts, floats and Cool Cat.

Church groups, gays clash at picnic

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARIETTA, Ga. — Gay rights supporters organized a Queer Family Picnic, and church groups staged an opposing rally after leaders of this affluent Atlanta suburb declared homosexuality incompatible with community values.

Authorities managed to keep the peace Sunday despite three bomb scares and an occasional verbal clash between participants in the two rallies.

Cobb County commissioners are scheduled to vote Tuesday on a proposal to use family-oriented standards to determine who receives county arts subsidies.

Authorities evacuated the park where the picnic and rally were. They reopened it about a half-hour later Sunday after a man carrying what looked like a bomb under his shirt was stopped by police.

"It was a fake, but it was made up to look like a bomb," Marietta Police Maj. B.R. Fuller said of the black cylinder laced with wires.

Police investigated two other bomb threats that were determined to be false alarms.

County commissioners passed a resolution Aug. 10 declaring homosexuality incompatible with community values.

The county northwest of Atlanta has about 450,000 residents.

About 1,000 people, many carrying picnic baskets and quilts and accompanied by children, attended the Queer Family Picnic to protest the anti-gay resolution.

About 500 people attended the church rally, including former Gov. Lester Maddox.

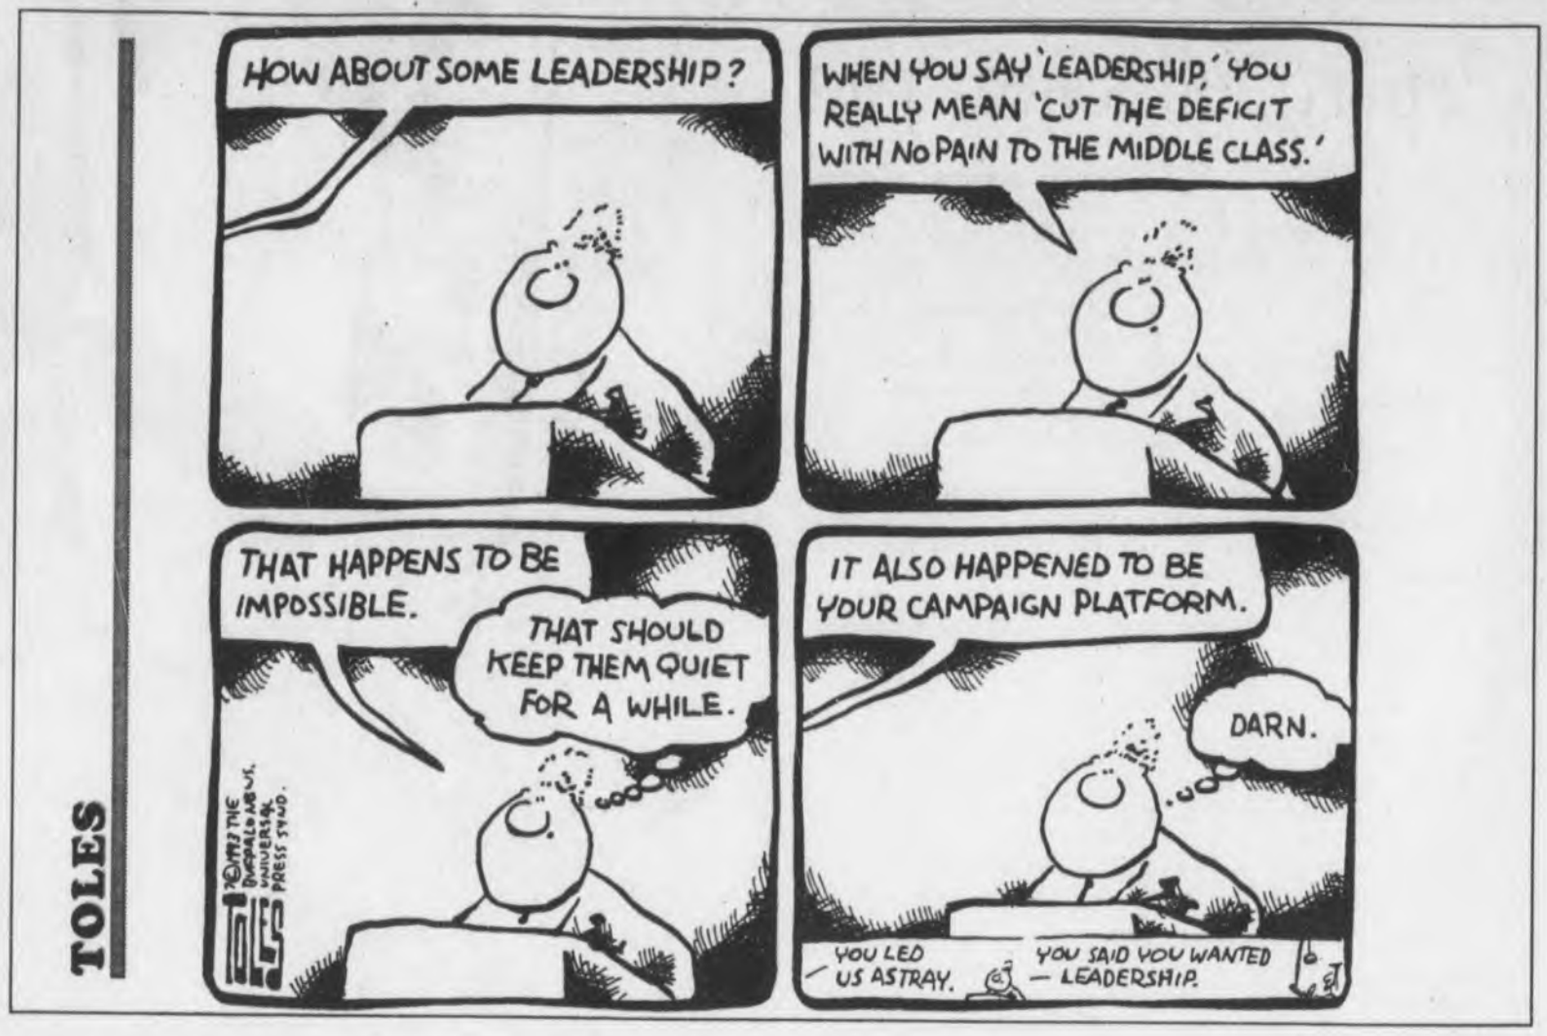
Fishers take it to Exxon

Exxon Corporation operates under the motto "The power to succeed." But if recent events around Prince William Sound are any indication, Exxon has a long way to go to re-establish its power to succeed with the people who live around the area.

It's been almost four years since the Exxon Valdez oil spill that dumped nearly 11 million gallons of North Slope crude oil into the Sound's fishing waters. Now local fishermen protest that this accident is being ill-handled by the government and that yearly fish returns have suffered as a result.



The fishermen spent the weekend blockading the trans-Alaskan pipeline terminal from incoming tankers. Meaning to call attention to slow-going civil suits and Exxon's reluctance to throw themselves into recovering the area from oil damage, the protesters were finally dispelled by Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt.

Babbitt met with individuals and promised to help expedite the situation. When Exxon refused to meet with the fishermen, Babbitt said, "I think it's outrageous that an American company with the size and sophistication of the Exxon company doesn't have the will to sit down and talk with a bunch of fishermen on this sound."

Exxon claims there is no link between the oil spill and the weak fish returns.

Come on, Exxon. It's time to own up to the fact that estimates of the damage and the mediocre clean-up operation don't fit the reality of the situation. It's a positive sign indeed that an official as high up as Babbitt is tackling the situation face to face. Exxon has been hiding behind its big-corporation facade for too long.

Until Exxon is made to meet with the people whose livelihood it severely damaged and pay its debts to society, it will only continue to shirk its responsibilities. Letting Exxon get away with that would be the worst crime of all.

ABC's of being PC by Sunshine, Flower and Tree

Once upon a time, the ultimate Politically Correct trio went for a walk. Sunshine, Flower and Tree decided to walk because driving a car would pollute our sacred earth. Besides, being students of the University of Kansas, they loved to feel at one with nature and the universe and they might feel like hugging a few trees along the way.

As they walked and gained environmental harmony and a false sense of enlightenment, they engaged in PC banter about whatever the PC crowd talks about — Anita Hill, Birkenstocks, Jerry Brown in '96, this month's issue of New Republic, recycled toilet paper, the dying planet and REM concerts, I suppose. Then they passed a group of PC men.

Flower: "Check out that oppressor over there, under the life-giving tree. He used to be my significant other."

Sunshine: "Which one, the one who appears to be vertically challenged?"

Flower: "No, not him! I would never engage in social association with an oppressor who was so visually disagreeable. The one I meant was the one on the left."

Tree: "I don't know, Flower, he looks kind of aesthetically disinclined to me."

Flower: "Well, he always was fashion impaired."

Sunshine: "Why did you break up?"

Flower: "I found out he was secretly making money at the expense of others in the Decade of Greed and not making his fair share of contributions. Besides that, he refused to carpool. And to top it all off, I caught him with a Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue with a blond on the cover."

Tree: "He's a pig!"

Sunshine: "A sexist chauvinistic pig!"

Flower: "Did I mention he voted for Reagan twice?"

Tree: "A greedy sexist chauvinistic Republican deficit-spending pig!"

Sunshine: "The swimsuit issue! I mean, he was looking at women as objects and contributing to inequality by even picking it up."

Flower: "He gave me some song and dance routine about the swimsuit issue coming with the subscription, as though I would buy that old line."

SARA SMITH

While journeying past the recycling center and various war protests, this self-contained unit of psuedo-intellectual liberalism came across the people they love to see, the ones who give them power, the less fortunate. They avoided them, of course, but took enough notice to comment.

Tree: "What is that disgusting olfactory sensation?"

Sunshine: "It's coming from that person over there, the one who looks like he might be forced to live on the streets because of his alcohol dependency. He appears to be displaying the common signs of a gifted detoxifier."

Flower: "No, look closer, at his arms. He's hypodermically talented."

Tree: "Whatever it is, he certainly seems to be employing alternative hygienics."

(At this point, a totally Politically Incorrect male had the audacity to approach them, having the nerve to notice that they were members of the opposite sex.)

"Excuse me, girls, but would you like a ride so that you can get away from all these dirty, smelly junkies, lushes and street people? This kind of neighborhood is no place for a lady."

At that, with a collective scream of righteous feminist indignation, Flower, Sunshine and Tree fainted, falling in a heap of long unwashed hair, natural fibers and wool tights, never to recover.

So ended the trio's dedication to being Politically Correct, a massive, insincere and intellectually bankrupt sellout of a movement.

Not to mention that Politically Correct is a contradiction in terms.

The trials and tribulations of a new year

LAJEAN RAU

Tell me I'm not the only one who goes through back-to-school withdrawal. Tell me this sudden fear of leaving my house is normal.

I know I'm not alone in my trepidation. Not the only one who curses hundreds of people I don't even know as I spend a half an hour driving the length of campus on Anderson Avenue.

Not the only one who finds herself saying over and over, in a sort of shell-shocked daze, "Who are these people? And where did they come from?"

It's truly amazing the metamorphosis this town goes through in a matter of a couple days each August. For those of us who live here year-round, it's almost too much to handle. Particularly right after a Manhattan summer, where if it weren't for natural disasters, the biggest excitement would have been T.G. Sheppard performing at City Park.

You don't have to tell me the obvious. Don't have to remind me it happens every year. I ought to have figured it out by now, considering this is my sixth time.

But that knowledge doesn't seem to make it any easier somehow.

The majority of the 20,000 people who call themselves K-State students pull into town on the same day, I think— U-Hauls and parents in tow.

What else could explain the catastrophic proportions of this influx?

I find myself referring to these student "immigrants" as "them," as if they are a different breed. I have a hard time seeing them as students just like myself.

They clog up streets and drive like maniacs. Crossing the street suddenly takes strategy and blind courage.

Gas prices go up, and a trip from my house to Westloop, which took 2.3 minutes this summer, is faster on foot than in my car.

They cause huge lines at the Union. Lines to buy books, or lunch or use the courtesy phone (that I've already resigned myself to never have the courtesy of using again).

Dillons is Grand Central Station where well-dressed people load up their carts with expensive meats and pre-prepared frozen foods. In my cart there is rice, two apples and bread.

I won't even get within a square mile of Wal-Mart for a couple of weeks. I get nervous just thinking about it.

Going out to dinner is also a challenge. Entire dorm floors and pledge classes crowd every restaurant that sounds good to me at that particular moment.

Getting a beer in Aggieville becomes an evening affair. And not only are "they" all curiously old enough to drink, they're all — guys and gals alike — good looking.

One night after fee-payment, I attempted to meet some friends at a bar to enjoy some live music and a couple of beers. Instead, I entered into a different dimension. Where everyone looked like cast members of "Beverly Hills 90210."

I retreat to my house, vowing not to come out until after the first week of school. And I'm not even safe there.

At night, it's loud music from now-bustling fraternity houses, and a parade of drunks coming home from Aggieville at night. During the day, it's a parade of attractive, young, fit people with headphones, jogging or walking really fast.

It reminds me the whole reason I live in this town is to do things like pay fees and go to class to get an education, because I'm told that's how you get one.

Or maybe the worst part is that this time of year makes me feel old. "They" are all young. And it seems an eternity since I went to Wal-Mart to buy cute plastic crates for my dorm room.

Walking on campus this weekend, fall in the air, I saw it for the first time again, and my cynicism and annoyance faded into a smile.

I started to worry about what I was going to wear to the first day of school and whether I remembered where BH 343 was.

Then a vacuous-eyed freshman ran into me, campus maps and schedules catching the wind.

Thank God for Labor Day.

4 former students survive plane crash

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Clifford Sheets, a 1992 graduate from the College of Arts and Sciences; Blake Wilson, a 1993 graduate in geography; Shane Lyle, a 1993 graduate in geology and Timothy Hutton, a former student, were all aboard the four-passenger plane.

The crash occurred as the single-engine Cessna 1-72 was approaching the Palwaukee Municipal Airport for a landing. Sheets, an instructor at Manhattan's Kansas Air Center, informed flight controllers he was experiencing engine trouble.

Soon after they were cleared for an emergency landing, the engine stopped. Sheets attempted to land in a cornfield outside Long Grove. The plane hit a power line, flipped and crashed seven miles short of the runway.

"We were all very nervous when the engine quit, but I thought Cliff could land in the cornfield," Lyle said. "Then we hit the power line, and I don't remember too much after that."

Sheets was critically injured in the crash, suffering from severe head injuries. He was air lifted to a hospital in Milwaukee. He will be flown to St. Francis Hospital in Topeka by Wednesday to continue his recovery.

Wilson suffered internal injuries and was hospitalized for three days, and Lyle and Hutton suffered only minor cuts and bruises.

Sheets and his party departed the Manhattan Municipal Airport late Thursday, July 22. They were traveling to Chicago to attend a friend's wedding.

"None of us holds anything against Cliff," Wilson said. "He did everything he could. We still don't know exactly what went wrong."

▶KING DENIES CAUSING ACCIDENT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rodney King said he wasn't at the wheel of a truck when it crashed into a wall, state parole officials said. The accident resulted in the videotaped beating victim's drunken-driving arrest.

King told his parole officer one of his two cousins was driving the 1986 Chevrolet Blazer when it crashed near the Glam Slam nightclub, the Daily News reported Sunday. No one was injured.

The accident occurred early Saturday. Shortly before that, King had been denied entry to the Glam Slam, which is owned by musician Prince, because he was extremely drunk, said club security guard Johann Sfaellos.

Police said tests indicated King had a blood-alcohol level of 0.19 percent, more than twice California's legal drunk-driving limit of 0.08. He was arrested for investigation of misdemeanor drunken driving.King is on parole for a robbery conviction.

He told his parole agent one of his two women cousins was driving the Blazer. Neither woman was arrested.

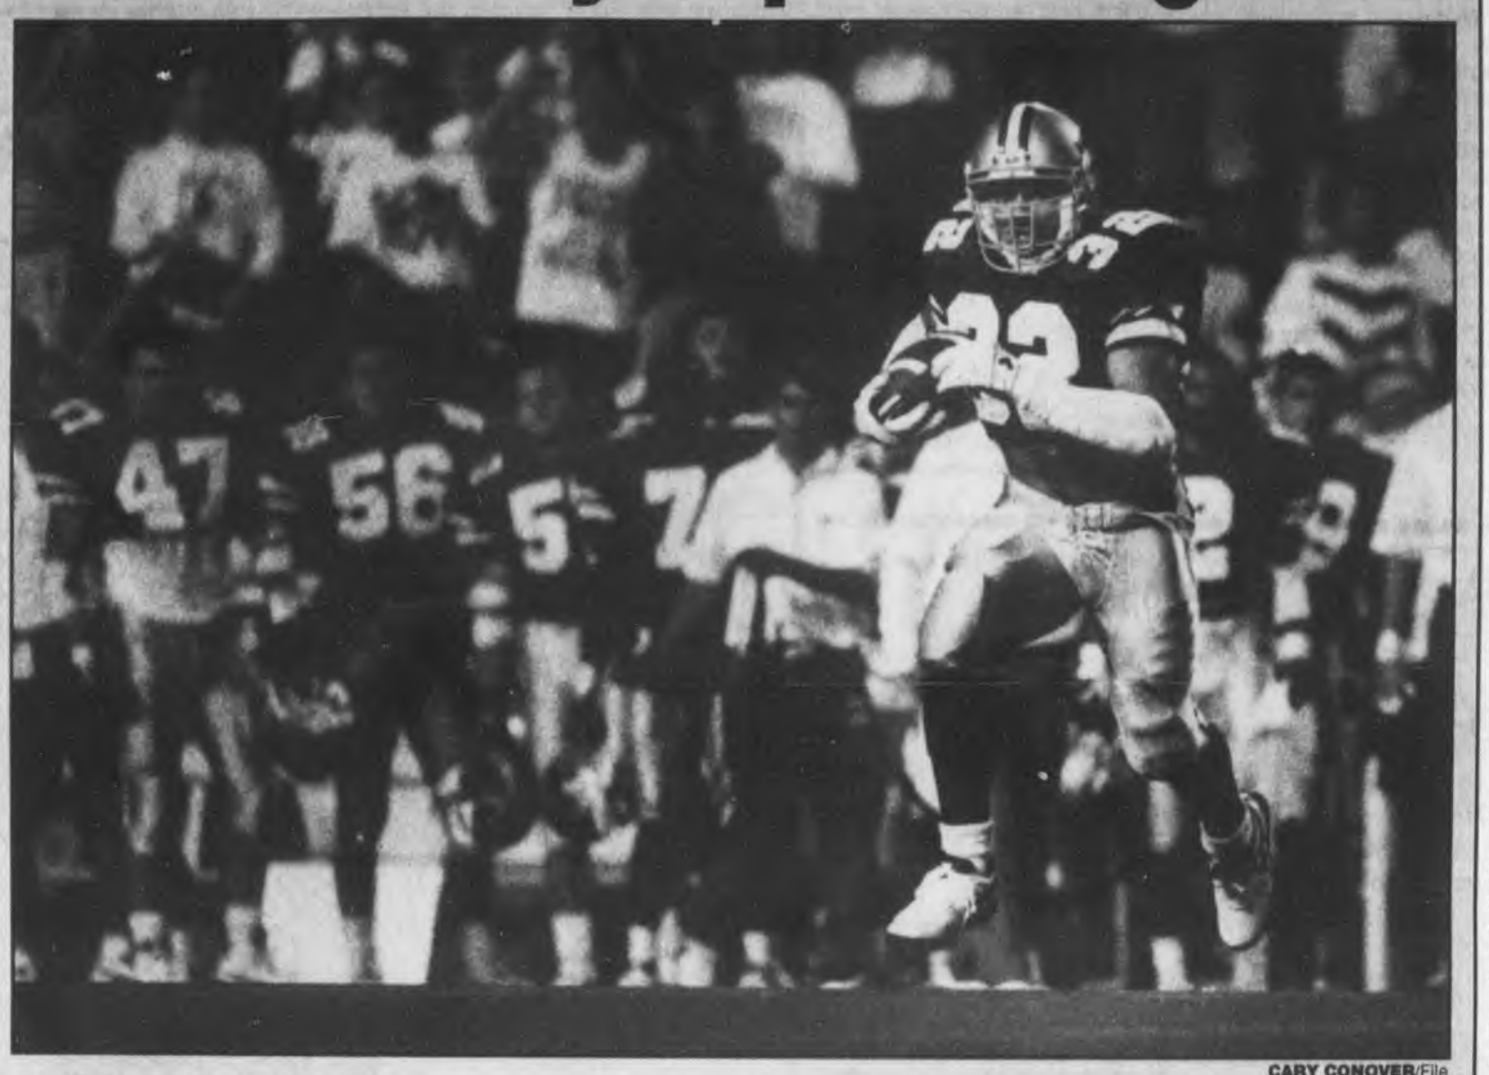
K-State secondary tops in Big 8

Cats return veteran D-backs for 1993 season

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI
Collegian

One area of strength for the K-State football team is the defensive backs.



Three starters return from the squad that placed second in the Big Eight in pass efficiency defense and first in interceptions with 21 last year.

Six of those thefts were registered by senior free safety, Jaime Mendez. Mendez enters this year as a preseason all-American and may become the sixth player in K-State history to earn first-team all-Big Eight honors three years straight.

Mendez will be joined in the secondary by strong safety Kitt Rawlings. Rawlings, a senior, was moved from offense to defense a year ago and from cornerback to strong safety in the spring. Rawlings recorded 59 tackles and forced four fumbles last year.

"Kitt is a very physical, aggressive player," Bobby Stoops, K-State's co-defensive coordinator, said. "The strong safety position really promotes those characteristics, so I believe that position will be as solid as it was a year ago."

The same might be said about the cornerback position. Thomas Randolph, a senior, ranks as one of the best man coverage corners in the conference. Last season, he recorded 53 tackles (41 solos), two interceptions and 10 passes broken up.

CARY CONOVER/File

Senior cornerback Jaime Mendez returns an interception during K-State's 34-14 win over Temple last season. Mendez has been picked as a pre-season all-American by several sports publicatons.

Along with being a proven coverage cornerback, Randolph has all-American speed. He is a three-time NCAA all-American in the 55-meter dash, including a third-place finish at the 1993 NCAA Indoor Championships.

The other cornerback spot will be occupied by Kenny McEntyre, a junior who recorded 24 tackles and three interceptions in limited action last year. A two-sport athlete, McEntyre played in 11 games and made eight of 13 field-goal attempts for last year's Wildcat basketball team. But, he said, he is a football player first.

"I consider myself a football player first from the standpoint that they pay for my schooling," McEntyre said. "I guess since I play more in football, it would be fair for people to think of me as a football player instead of a basketball player."

And, Stoops said, McEntyre is ready to show the Big Eight that he is a football player first.

"I believe very strongly that Kenny will be the surprise of the entire group," he said. "He has an excellent feel for the game and I think that he will be an excellent player in the Big Eight this year."

Mendez rewriting record books

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI

When it comes to playing free safety, few people in the Big Eight do it better than Jaime Mendez.

And considering his preseason selection as an all-American, one might say that he is among the best in the nation.

Mendez, a senior co-captain, returns to the Wildcats after being selected to the first-team all-Big Eight squad each of the last two seasons.

All the attention associated with being a preseason all-American might go to most player's heads. But Mendez, he said, keeps it all in perspective.

"Every once in a while, I find myself thinking there are people out there who think you're one of the best there is," Mendez said. "But I try to get rid of that as quickly as I can. If you think about things like that, it just blows your head up, and you start thinking you're better than they are."

Mendez's career has been decorated with many records and awards. He set the the K-State career record for interceptions with 13, as well as the single game mark with four against Temple last season. He also set the K-State record for interception return yardage (266) and needs just 88 yards to move into the top spot in the Big Eight.

Playing the ball is obviously Mendez's strength. He had six interceptions a year ago, tying him for second in the Big Eight. He led the conference in passes broken up with 12. He is also a proven tackler, registering 186 stops (108 unassisted) in his three-year career.

Mendez has also averaged 10.4 tackles against ranked teams in his career, including 14 against Washington and 13 against Colorado in his sophomore year.

And Mendez has the physical tools that help him on the field. He broke his own school record for the squat lift this past winter for defensive backs when he lifted 569 pounds. He also has a vertical leap of 35 inches. But it may be his work ethic that sets Mendez apart from the others.

"Jaime never ever misses a workout and always prepares himself for every season better than anyone we've ever had here," Bobby Stoops, co-defensive coordinator/secondary coach, said. "His weight-lifting, running, and vertical jump are stronger than they've ever been."

Mendez said he appreciates the personal accolades, but team goals remain the most important to him.

"I appreciate it (preseason honors), but it's time to put them on the back burner," he said. "Right now there are bigger things to be concerned with. What I want is for Kansas State to go to a major bowl game.

"More than anything else, that's the way I want to leave this University."

Twins down Royals 3-2 in extra innings

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kirby Puckett's 10th-inning sacrifice fly gave Minnesota a 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals on Monday night and ended the Twins' six-game losing streak.

Puckett drove in the winning run against Jeff Montgomery (3-4), the AL save leader who came on to pitch the 10th.

Larry Casian (4-1) got the victory, allowing two hits, walking one and striking out two in 2 2/3 innings.

Kansas City tied the score 2-2 in the seventh despite Felix Jose's second base-running error in as many innings. Jose reached on a fielder's choice, putting runners at first and third, and Brian McRae followed with a slow grounder to shortstop.

Jose beat the throw to second, but overslid the bag and was tagged out.

The umpires, however, ruled that Greg Gagne crossed the plate before the tag-out.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶RYAN TO RETURN TO MOUND

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — When Nolan Ryan announced this would be his 27th and final baseball season, he intended to finish it on the mound, not the disabled list.

Injured or not, he says that's exactly what he'll do.

After starting the season healthy, Ryan has been plagued by injuries. The latest came Saturday night in Baltimore when he strained a muscle in his left lower rib cage while fielding a ground ball. The Rangers will not place Ryan on the disabled list.

The Texas Rangers said Monday that baseball's career strikeout and record-holder with seven no-hitters will pitch again.

During the rehabilitation period, he ran into further trouble when he cut his foot near his ranch and received seven stitches.

Dr. John Conway said Ryan is expected to miss his start on Thursday against Boston but believes he will be able to pitch again by early next week.

Since his latest return from the disabled list July 19, Ryan has helped lift the Rangers stay in the AL West race. He is 5-3 with a 4.53 ERA.

▶SAINTS EDGE BEARS 20-14

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The New Orleans coaching staff went through three exhibition games without giving quarterback Wade Wilson an entire half of work.

After Wilson played two quarters in the Saints' 20-14 victory over the Chicago Bears Monday night, he made the point that he deserves to be the starter in the regular season.

Wilson, who signed with Saints this summer after a season with the Atlanta Falcons, completed 13 of 22 passes for 134 yards and a touchdown.

Quinn Early caught a 30-yard scoring pass from Wilson in the second quarter, and Morten Andersen kicked a 47-yard field goal as time ended in the first half.

Chicago pulled to 10-7 with 4:53 remaining in the third quarter when Jim Harbaugh threw a 17-yard TD pass to Dante Whitaker. The Bears took the lead with 4:36 to play in the game when backup quarterback Peter Tom Willis hit Terry Obee for a 38-yard touchdown.

Mike Buck threw a 16-yard TD pass to Sammy Martin 2:12 later to give the Saints a 17-14 lead. Rich Andrews' 25-yard field goal with 42 seconds remaining finished the scoring.

OUTDOOR COLUMN

Floods hurt hunting? Depends on who you ask

As the hunting seasons approach, outdoorsmen are hearing rumors and stories of the negative effect of wet weather and floods on the wildlife in northeastern Kansas.

Well, don't throw your bows or guns in the closet just yet.

As the outdoor columnist for the fall semester, I took it upon myself to find out just how the weather and floods did affect the wildlife.

I first contacted Marty Burke, communications coordinator of the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks. Burke referred me to the research specialists of the department.

"The effect of the floods and wet weather is still undetermined," Burke said. "As far as upland game, there is a lot of cover out there.

"A hunter from Hays told me that if you plan to hunt this year, you'd better have a good dog," he said.

The effect of the wet season and floods on the upland game as told by Dr. Kevin Church, small game coordinator of the department of wildlife, is somewhat substantial.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

"It's not so much the flooding as the wet and cool weather we experienced during the breeding season," Church said.

The levels of nesting and breeding success are thought to have been fairly low, he said.

This is no reason to lose hope. As I have been out in the backwoods and back roads around northeast Kansas, I have seen quite a few numbers of pheasants and quail with their young (not to mention an impressive flock of gobblers) and remain anxious for the seasons. This is contradictory to the forecast of researchers who maintain that we will be lucky to sustain the numbers of last year.

As for the upcoming dove season, the migratory bird appears to be plentiful and looks promising for hunters.

Marvin Kraft, waterfowl program coordinator for the department of wildlife, said it is hard to support any forecast on the dove season.

"We have no actual breeding or production surveys, but based on the calling count surveys, the population of dove is down from last year," he said.

Kraft said the heavy rains and wet weather in the early spring had a negative effect on the production of dove. He said the numbers of dove will be much lower than last year.

Other migratory bird numbers will vary this year, Kraft said.

The dabbling species of waterfowl, such as snow geese — which usually migrate along the Missouri river bottom — may not find sufficient feed and move on past Kansas farther to the southern coastal regions, Kraft said.

Kraft's forecast for hunting other species of waterfowl, which use the area waterways as resting places, is probably one of the most promising seasons of the past few years.

"There should be good hunting in the areas where the birds normally inhabit," he said.

"Areas such as ponds and watershed lakes will be much better this year due to the moisture. They have maintained good levels and have drained quickly after flooding."

Northeastern Kansas is host to many areas which are good habitat for waterfowl and should provide good hunting.

"The goose population is at an all-time high. Despite the rain and flooding, there will be very good goose hunting this year," Kraft said.

I also visited with Keith Sexson, big game program coordinator for the department of wildlife, about the fall turkey and deer seasons coming up.

"The flooding of localized areas probably changed the habitat and distribution of turkey and deer," Sexson said. "Since the bottom lands were underwater, the area will not be very inviting for them to return."

The production period of turkeys was probably set back due to heavy rains, and the floods probably resulted in a few direct mortalities for fawns not yet out of their beds, Sexson said. This may translate into smaller populations in the future.

Sexson said, however, he is not expecting any considerable difference in the populations of either game animal in northeastern Kansas this year.

This year, turkey and deer hunters should experience success by changing locations of where they concentrate their efforts.

The specialists are telling us that all of the game populations have been affected in some way, but from strictly an observational point of view, the game is out there. Just find it.

U-LearN moves, expands student services

KIM DILLON
Collegian

U-LearN has not only moved but has also expanded its services to cater to the needs of students.

"We want U-LearN to be the one place on campus that students can call to get the answer to their questions," Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said.

U-LearN recently moved to 2 Holton Hall.

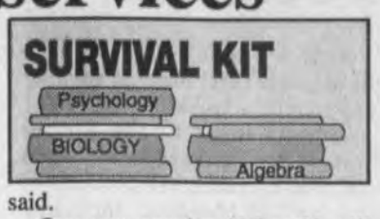
Students' questions may not always be answered directly, but U-LearN staff will do their best to find a phone number of someone who can answer the question, Lynch said.

Some walk-in services have been eliminated because they have been picked up by other places on campus, Lynch said.

Phone services will still be available.

The organization provides students with campus and student phone numbers and campus information, said Billie Miller, graduate student in college student personnel services and director of U-LearN.

U-LearN's reorganization was due to three things, Lynch said.



Changes in the budget made the reorganization necessary, he said.

The organization's mission was changed after many of its previous services had been assumed other places, he said. Quick access to its phone service, provided for students, was also seen as being unique to U-LearN, Lynch said. The third item looked at was the reduction in U-LearN's budget and how its resources could best be used.

Because U-LearN has always relied heavily on volunteers, the budget reduction will not affect its number of employees, he said. What it will do is cause them to consolidate their information and to see what needs can be met other places so they do not duplicate services.

"We are trying to change the focus from trivial facts to deadlines and facts that will make students more successful at K-State," Miller said.

One new service U-LearN will be offering is a monthly program for students in residence halls. These programs will be aimed at helping students deal with different situations, such as how to adjust to going home for a month after being at college or how to survive finals, Miller said.

The program is refocusing to make students more aware of the services it provides, Sara Doornbos, U-LearN adviser, said.

Student senators allocate fees, write bills

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Students paid about $3.5 million in fees last week. Student Senate will allocate that money during the semester.

"Fifteen percent of the interns eventually service as senators," DeLoss Jahnke, Senate chairman, said.

Legislation is first introduced to Senate by one of the six committees. After being introduced, senators can ask questions.

This process is referred to as the first reading. If the legislation is especially timely and needs to be addressed immediately, a bill may be moved to special order. This allows Senate to debate and vote on the bill the same night it is introduced.

Then it goes back to the committee for revisions. When the revision is made, it is re-introduced to Senate as the second reading. The senators vote on the bill at this time.

Nicaraguan factions reach compromise

ASSOCIATED PRESS

QUILALI, Nicaragua — In this ramshackle cattle and coffee town in northern Nicaragua, former Contra rebels took a step back from a growing confrontation that threatened to plunge Nicaragua into chaos.

On Sunday, leaders of the rearmed Contras released 20 hostages they seized Thursday and promised to release the other 21 soon, said Francisco Mayorga, leader of a delegation mediating the crisis in this Contra stronghold.

Jose Angel "The Jackal" Talavera Analiz and his 400 fighters also dropped their demands for the removal of Nicaraguan army chief Gen. Humberto Ortega and presidential chief of staff Antonio Lacayo, Mayorga said.

In return, the government promised not to punish them, to withdraw government troops sent to Qualili and to study rebel demands for land and money, said Mayorga, former president of Nicaragua's Central Bank.

Before the agreement was announced, the pro-Sandinista gunmen who are holding hostages in the conservative opposition headquaters in Managua released two more captives. They freed 14 on Saturday.

The compromises could be a breakthrough in the crisis that began Thursday and threatened to rekindle the devastating civil war between U.S.-backed Contras and leftist Sandinistas in the 1980s.

Rebels from both sides are angry with the government of President Violeta Chamorro for failing to deliver land, money and other concessions promised after a 1990 peace accord.

The hostage crisis is the second uprising by rearmed rebels in as many months.

The crisis began when the former Contras seized government delegates sent to northern Nicaragua to offer them an amnesty for past rebel attacks.

Leftists loyal to the former Sandinista government then retaliated by taking 34 hostages of their own in Managua, including Vice President Virgilio Godoy and other top members of Nicaragua's conservative opposition.

The gunmen, led by former Sandinista army Cmdr. Donald Mendoza, said they would not release their captives until the Contras released theirs.

An estimated 1,400 former Contras and some demobilized Sandinista soldiers have rearmed recently. At least 50 people were killed last month when former Sandinista soldiers attacked Esteli, a town about 60 miles north of Managua.

After the defeat of the Sandinistas by Chamorro and her center-right National Opposition Union (UNO) in 1990, Chamorro decided to keep many Sandinistas in their posts as part of her policy of reconciliation.

Last January, UNO leaders — including Vice President Godoy — announced they were deserting the president.

The Contras are especially suspect of Ortega, military chief during the 1980s when his brother, Daniel, was president, and Lacayo, who supports Chamorro's policy of reconciliation.

The announcement of Sunday's agreement with the former Contras — and the apparent lessening of tension — came hours after the pro-Sandinista gunmen in Managua took nine Nicaraguan journalists captive.

Public services to cost more for cities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Reports estimating the costs of public services to immigrants in California have helped drive the campaign by politicians and citizen groups for tougher measures against undocumented workers.

Financially strapped state and local governments hope the reports will force the federal government to pick up a greater share of the costs of legally required services, such as medical and financial assistance.

In Los Angeles County, officials concluded that undocumented immigrants and their children make up about 950,000 of the county's 9.2 million residents.

The cost of services to the newcomers, including educating their children, was estimated at nearly $400 million during fiscal 1991-92.

A San Diego County study placed the cost of such services at more than $145 million.

A similar report by the Orange County grand jury said illegal immigrants had access to some $230 million in county services, but officials said they did not know how much the services actually are used by undocumented newcomers.

The only costs clearly attributable to illegal immigration, the study said, were the up to $2.2 million spent on the incarceration of immigrants awaiting deportation and the $1.3 million distributed through the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

Nevertheless, the grand jury recommended that the federal government declare a three-year moratorium on all immigration, legal and illegal.

A study released last year by Houston's Rice University estimated the net cost of illegal immigrants to federal and state programs nationwide at $12.5 billion, after subtracting the estimated taxes they pay.

German police fight in race riots

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — Police used tear gas and clubs to quell scattered weekend disturbances on the first anniversary of rioting in Rostock that set a grim standard for anti-foreigner violence in united Germany.

Radical leftists staging an anti-racism demonstration Saturday night in Berlin tried to attack rightist skinheads who threw stones and taunted them with Nazi salutes. Police arrested 16 people.

Police said they detained 240 rightist youths at highway blockades in three states to block a banned skinhead rock concert Saturday night near the eastern city of Magdeburg.

On Friday night, leftists went on a rampage through the west-central city of Goettingen, vandalizing cars and injuring two policemen.

In Rostock — the Baltic coastal city where anti-foreigner rioting started Aug. 23, 1992, and went on for a week — police braced for a feared rightist attempt to celebrate those attacks.

Police said about 10 skinheads attacked three men on a seaside promenade Saturday night, but no other disturbances were reported.

The Rostock rioting, which resulted in no deaths but caused hundreds of mostly minor injuries, was the most sustained anti-foreigner violence since German unification in 1990.

It was followed by arson attacks in Moelln and Solingen that killed eight Turks, including several children.

Kennedy files link death to Soviet Union

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Five days after John F. Kennedy's assassination, a CIA official speculated the murder was instigated by the KGB in an effort to relieve internal pressures on Nikita Khrushchev, then the leader of the Soviet Union.

"Our president's death ... effectively diverts the Soviets' attention from their internal problems. It directly affects Khrushchev's longevity," wrote the CIA official, Peter Deryabin, in an eight-page, single-spaced typewritten memo to his superiors dated Nov. 27, 1963.

Deryabin's memo came to light today when the National Archives made public more than 800,000 pages of government documents concerning the assassination, as required under a 1992 law.

Included in the disclosure were files from the CIA and FBI; State Department; Defense Department; the Warren Commission, which investigated the assassination; the follow-up 1975 Rockefeller Commission, presidential libraries and congressional committees.

It offered no factual basis for his speculation that the Soviets were behind Lee Harvey Oswald's shooting of the president in Dallas.

Instead, it listed reasons why such an event would benefit the Soviets.

It advances the idea that the KGB, the Soviet Union's secret intelligence agency, may have instigated such an act while Oswald lived in the Soviet Union.

A former Marine, Oswald defected to Moscow for a period and then returned to the United States.

"The very real possibility also exists that Oswald was sent here on another mission by the KGB and subsequently accomplished the deed on his own initiative," Deryabin commented.

However, such a possibility does not make the KGB less culpable as the seeds for Oswald's act must have been planted while he was trained in the USSR for his other mission.

"We might first examine the question uppermost in the minds of most Americans, 'what did the USSR have to gain by killing the president?'

"I believe we can make a good case as to the precise gains accruing to the USSR and more specifically accruing to Khrushchev."

Deryabin's memo was signed just Peter over his typewritten signature. And it offered no evidence to indicate that his theory that the Soviets instigated the murder was anything but speculation.

It was written at a time when investigators from many branches of the government were speculating as to Oswald's possible motive for shooting Kennedy.

His first was Western pressure, led by America, would automatically ease up, adding, witness President Johnson's immediate conciliatory telegram to Khrushchev after the murder.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A big project will prove tougher than you had imaguned. Procrastinate. Watch "Roseanne."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22) — A big chance awaits you. Look opportunity in the eye and run.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Stay away from any new love interest, rushing in could be a disaster. Instead, call a 900 number and have love at a distance.

SAGITARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Its time to stop moping over academic failures. Think of entering the exciting world of fry cookery instead.

CAPRICORN (DEC.22- Jan. 19) — The further you look ahead, the worse off you'll be. Look at your feet instead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Money is in your future, but you will have to be vcreative to obtain it. I see a map of buried treasure under Anderson...

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19) — The time has come to reveal your hidden talents. Stand in the Union Courtyard at noon and belt out your favorite Broadway hits. What a good way to get a date.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Love is in the air for you tonight. Just remember to wear deoderant.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The odds are stacked against you today. There will be a pop quiz in all of your classes. Go back to bed and set the alarm for tomorrow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Strange things are afoot for you today. Beware of squirrels, badgers and falling roof tiles from Anderson.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You are going to have an excellent day. Wear your lucky shoes and go dancing tonight.

REVIEW

Dark thoughts permeate dark comedy

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Feelings of hopelessness and despair prevail in Bill Forsyth's 1979 dark comedy "That Sinking Feeling."

The film opens with an ironic disclaimer stating "The action of this film takes place in a fictitious town called Glasgow. Any resemblance to any real town called Glasgow is purely coincidental."

Similar references to the forgotten status of urban areas are found throughout the film.

The film examines the lives of a group of bedraggled Scottish youth. Their leader, Ronnie, played by Robert Buchananan, has wallowed in his own self-pity to the point of attempting suicide.

"There's got to be more to this life than committing suicide. There's got to be a way out," he said.

Ronnie finds his way out when he sees a shiny stainless steel kitchen sink in a shop window. He forms a gang, and they attempt to better themselves by stealing a truckload of kitchen sinks from a local factory.

Filmed on location in proletarian Glasgow, Forsyth portrays the experience of Scottish urban youth culture as not only hopeless, but utterly wretched.

The films few comic moments are quickly subtracted as the gloomy backgrounds of Glasgow's industrial areas and working-class neighborhoods loom over us as if to swallow any good feelings we could have about the characters Forsyth has brought to the screen.

Forsyth is to be commended for his real-life portrayal of the youth of his country, while most filmmakers would opt for a more enthusiastic class of characters, instead he settles for the complete slackers of the generation.

Even when the gang wants to do what seems imaginative (the sink robbery), it seems whimsical, at best.

Selfish potty habits unfair, reader says

Dear Cassandra,

My roommates are both male, and I'm female. None of us mind this version of "Three's Company" because we're all great friends.

My problem is they absolutely refuse to put the toilet seat down when they're done using it.

I've tried asking and pleading and begging — even leaving little friendly notes on the back of the toilet. But they just joke and ask me why they should have to put the seat down for me when I don't put it up for them.

Anyway, I'm not feeling so friendly anymore because the other night, after coming in from a late-night excursion to Aggieville, I fell into the freakin' bowl. Granted, I'd been drinking some, but that was definitely the last straw.

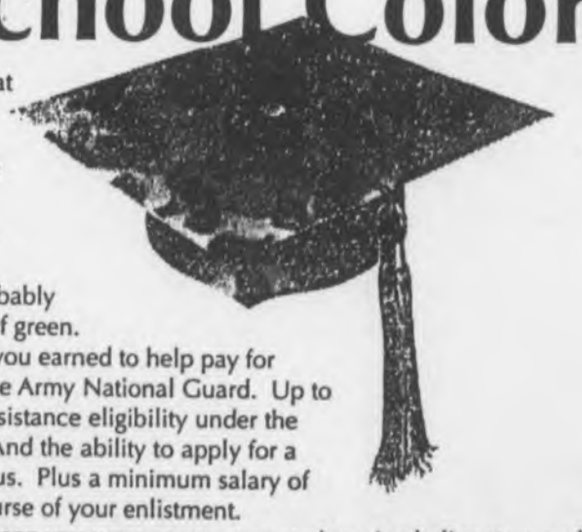
I'm beginning to get kind of bitter about this whole thing, and it feels like it's turning into something of an ordeal.

So tell me, Cassie, what would you do?

Signed,
Drip-drying on Laramie

Dear Drip,

Hey, girl — I can totally relate to your soggy bum because I've actually cohabitated with members of the male species before as well.



It's a pain to always have to put the seat down before you indulge in the golden showers — especially at night and even more so when you've been drinking and your senses are rather blurred.

What I did and what I would suggest you do is to sit down with you roomies and have a chat. Tell them yet again that you don't like to always put the seat down, yet you understand their argument about your raising the seat for them.

Then suggest a compromise — everybody always has to put both the seat and the lid down every time. That way everybody has to fiddle with it before tinkling, and no one will feel bitter or angry.

Try it out.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?

If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.

There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.

Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.

All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Bringing pot into the open

Weekend marijuana festival aims to educate and enlighten

They were there to talk about dope.

Although Saturday's Mean Green Marathon Bash outside of Newton brought less than its expected 1,500 turnout, the objective remained clear — to talk about marijuana.

In addition to listening to bands ranging from Skunk Budz to Dead Orchestra, campers had the opportunity to visit booths with hemp clothing and literature on marijuana.

"If you don't talk about marijuana, change will not come," Debby Moore, founder of the Kansas Environmentalists for Commerce in Hemp and organizer of the event, said. "Change comes through education."

Moore said marijuana could be used more effectively than timber in paper production. She said paper money within the United States is actually made from hemp.

She also said she was arrested last November at Hemp Designs by Debby, her shop in Wichita that sells hemp clothing. Not surprisingly, she said police could be put to better use.

"Look at them," she said, as several policemen walked by. "You can tell they're out of shape. The most masculine thing they can do is throw a woman down and put their knee in her back."

Members of the Harvey County Police Department showed up for the festival. Byron Motter, Harvey County sheriff, said all six of the officers working the day shift were there.

Motter said he saw brochures about the concert a month ago and decided to come.

"We don't need this kind of group in this area," Motter said.

Harvey County is a religious community with a strong Mennonite influence, Motter said. He said out of 232 people who had arrived at the concert by Saturday afternoon, only 12 vehicles were from Harvey County.

"When they picked Harvey County, it really upset a lot of people," Motter said.

Officers made rounds walking through the camping areas. As a result, not many people could be seen smoking marijuana in the open. Officers often followed cars that left the camping grounds. Motter said by Saturday afternoon, his officers had made three DUI arrests and issued 20 traffic citations.

However, Motter said he didn't think the presence of the police force affected the festival's turnout.

Nor did it seem their presence affected the mood of the festival. Although people couldn't smoke marijuana in the open, they still walked around eating coarse brownies. Even though the topic often switched to Ultimate Frisbee and motorcycles, people still talked about marijuana.

"Even with the cops, there's not a real high stress level for what's going on," Koren Reuter, a camper, said as she watched others building a pot-leaf sculpture in the sand.

Moore said she didn't want people to think she's just another hippie. She said in addition to attending events like the festival, people supporting the marijuana legalization movement need to contact their state and local governments.

Unfortunately, Moore said, if the festival didn't raise enough money, she will have to close her store in Wichita. But Moore said she didn't have all bad news.

"I'm going to be Freedom Fighter of the Month for High Times (magazine) in December," she said.

Above: Law enforcement officials make their presence well known at the festival by parking a van near the entrance to the festival sight. Left: Festival-goers work on a sand sculpture of a marijuana leaf on Saturday afternoon. The weekend event, which focused on educating people about marijuana, did not draw as many people as expected.d.

Red Cross uses Union as shelter

CHRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

With the assistance of various departments on campus, the Red Cross used the K-State Union as a disaster center and shelter for victims of the flood that affected Manhattan and surrounding areas in late July.

Kris McLean, Mass Care assistant officer in charge of Kansas, referred to the Union shelter as the Taj Mahal of shelters.

The prime objective of a shelter is to meet the necessities of its clients, McLean said. However, KSU and the community cooperated to provide additional services such as movies and free bowling.

"I have not witnessed such an outpouring of love in my life, and I have been working disaster relief for a long time," McLean said.

The Union bowling lanes, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Natatorium were made available to victims. A special showing of "Free Willie" was conducted for the victims. Child care was provided for nursery-age children, and activities were arranged for older children.

"The success of a Red Cross shelter depends on how comfortable we can make the people, and this shelter was very successful," McLean said. "We couldn't have done it without the cooperation of KSU and the community."

The shelter housed a total of 3,009 people between July 18 and Aug. 3, when the shelter had to be moved to Pottorf Hall in CiCo Park as the Union prepared for the return of students.

At the height of the Union's stint as a shelter, 547 people spent the night in the Union Ballroom. The Red Cross didn't record the exact number of flood victims who used the various services offered at the Union, but the Stateroom and Union Station served about 30,000 meals to flood victims.

Jack Sills, Union director, said having the Union open 24 hours a day required making some adjustments. Janitorial and security staffs had to be stepped up to meet the victims' needs.

The added activity amounted to more expense for the Union, but the Red Cross reimbursed the Union for some of the cost, Sills said.

"There were costs, but we did not lose money," he said.

Charles Beckom, campus police chief, said people who have been dislocated are very vulnerable.

"People came in sometimes carrying all the belongings they had left," Beckom said. "To become a victim again by having their possessions stolen can have even more of an impact."

Officers were at the Union to help keep victims safe but were also used as a sounding board, Beckom said.

"People tend to think officers have the answers for everything. They usually don't," he said. "But for many people, the officers were someone to talk to. The officers became quickly acquainted with the people staying there. They could see when the stress was becoming too overwhelming for some people and referred them to counselors."

Beckom said police officers' ability to respond to other calls on campus was not affected by their work at the Union.

About 300 volunteers came from Manhattan, K-State and all over the United States to help flood victims.

Tom Rawson, vice president of finance and administration, nurses from Lafene Health Center and volunteers from across campus volunteered time at the Union, Sills said.

"It was amazing where the volunteers came from," Rawson said. "Even victims came up and said,' What can I do?'"

Houses must be raised above flood level

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RUSHVILLE, Mo. — More than 300 northwest Missouri flood victims from Buchanan County showed up Sunday night at a Rushville church — but not to hear a sermon.

They came to lodge complaints and to get specific answers about provisions in a county zoning ordinance. The ordinance will require most of them to spend extra money to raise their flood-damaged homes a foot above the floodwaters' reaches.

"I can't afford to go in there, at my age, and raise my place up," said one elderly Sugar Lake woman. "What am I supposed to do, just forget it?"

"I hate to be the bearer of bad news, but that's probably true,'' W.A. Landis, Buchanan County planning and zoning director, said.

Landis said the federal government requires counties that participate in the National Flood Insurance Plan to enforce the ordinance provisions. They apply to homes that sustained more than 50 percent damage and to all new construction in flooded areas.

The federal government subsidizes flood insurance premiums for residents who live in counties such as Buchanan participating in the plan. One of the conditions is that flood victims elevate the foundation of their houses.

The zoning code provisions — on the books since 1978 — became effective when the county was declared a federal disaster last month.

Home and business owners who must comply will be required to hire a surveyor.

Merchandise raises money for victims

"I don't think we're in Kansas anymore."

MEGANNE MOORE
Collegian

Local business owners have channeled dollars raised by flood merchandise to area victims.

Proceeds from the merchandise, including T-shirts and videos, go to the American Red Cross and the Manhattan Neighbors in Need Fund.

Dave Dreiling, owner of It's Greek to Me, said they have sold close to 5,000 shirts at his store in addition to the Union Bookstore and outlets in Topeka and Lawrence. Proceeds from the T-Shirt sales are going to the Red Cross.

"We've received a lot of calls for the shirts to sell statewide. I think the demand will increase with the return of the students to Manhattan," he said. "I'd say it's our top-seller right now."

Student interest in the shirts stem from the design, which depicts the state of Kansas half-full of water with Willie the Wildcat and the Kansas Jayhawk floating on an inner tube

A quote between the two reads, "I don't think we're in Kansas anymore."

"We were trying to incorporate the same quote from Dorothy in 'The Wizard of Oz' when we were coming up with an idea for the design," Kay Farley, manager of the Union Bookstore, said.

Farley and Kathy Yates, supplies manager for the bookstore, created the design in late July because of their personal experience with flood victims.

"We experienced the flood first-hand because the victims were staying in the Union and we decided we wanted to do something to help them out," Farley said. "We talked to some people at Iowa State for feedback before we came up with the design."

Farley and Yates were trying to find a way they could help flood victims without a lot of money being spent on shirts.

Iowa's shirts sold for $16 each while the Manhattan shirts sell for $10 a piece with all proceeds going towards the Red Cross, Farley said.

About $9,000 to 12,000 has been raised in T-shirt sales to date, Dreiling said.

If wearing a commemorative flood T-shirt does not sound appealing, a 90-minute video of the flood is also currently available at TCI Cable Channel 6.

The mini-documentary has an introduction by Pat Collins, director of the Riley County Emergency Preparedness, beginning with footage of the 1951 flood.

"The rest of the video covers the June 30 tornado, the rise of Tuttle Creek and a day-by-day account of the flood including press conferences and evacuations that we put together as an historical document for the community," Jerry Marrow, program director of TCI Cable Channel 6, said.

Marrow said they have sold out of 600 copies and have ordered 300 more.

The video is $13.95 with all proceeds benefiting the Manhattan Neighbors in Need Fund, which was formed to raise funds for local flood victims.

As of August 21, a total of $333,712 has been raised to aid local victims who are not eligible for government sources of money.

In addition to the merchandise available, a commemorative edition of the flood by the Manhattan Mercury includes stories and accompanying photos on a day-to-day and weekly synopsis of the flood.

"This edition is not intended for profit. It is just a wrap-up of the flood— a commemorative edition that we had responding to readership requests," Stephen Stallwitz, advertising director for the Mercury, said.

The special edition is available for 50 cents each and has sold 1,248 individual copies and more than 4,000 Sunday papers were sold — double the normal newspapers sold from news racks on a Sunday.

Although the money spent on the special edition is not benefiting the victims, Stallwitz said they broke even on the edition.

VINCENT P. LaVERGNE/Collegian

Classy Cats Mindi Gibbs (left), junior in marketing, Lisa Buckley, sophomore in Marketing, and Christine Welsh, junior in business, put in extra hours practicing through a routine with the rest of the squad at Memorial Stadium Tuesday afternoon. The Classy Cats will perform the routine at K-State's first home football game. Through a first place performance at a dance camp in Lincoln, Neb., the Classy Cats received a bid to compete at the national drill-team competition.

Classy Cats take it to Texas

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

K-State's Classy Cats will be dancing in the Lone Star state this January.

The Classy Cats, K-State's 13-member pom and dance squad, received a bid to the 1994 National Cheerleading Association championships in Dallas by placing first in the home routine at the NCA camp. The camp was July 31-Aug. 3 in Lincoln, Neb.

The squad beat out 14 other Division I schools from across the United States and one squad from Japan to qualify for nationals.

Synchronization, appearance, crowd appeal, music, style and difficulty were the criteria the four judges used to determine qualifiers.

The last time K-State's dance team qualified for nationals, in 1991, they were known as the Pridettes during football season and the Classy Cats during basketball season. The name was permanently changed to Classy Cats three months ago to avoid confusion.

Squad members are optimistic about their chances at nationals this year.

"We have a good squad of girls, willing to work hard. I have a feeling we'll place in the top five," said Jeanette Johnson, a Classy Cats captain and senior in psychology and business.

At nationals, the Classy Cats will compete against 10 other Division I schools and will receive free room, food and airfare if they place first as national champion.

The squad will also receive national recognition, as the competition will be televised on PRIME Sports Network.

In preparation for nationals, which will be the first week of January, squad members are practicing two hours a day, four days a week and may add an additional day as January approaches.

They receive one hour of college credit for their work.

"People don't realize how much hard work and time we dedicate to this dance team," said Omi Borrero, a Classy Cats captain and junior in public relations. "It's an honor to go to nationals."

In addition to placing first in the home routine, the squad received a number of other honors at the NCA camp.

Some of the honors were a second-place trophy for most collegiate and a bid to attend United Performing Association, a weekend dance competition in Minneapolis, Minn.

"They're athletes. They work hard, spend lots of time, and the hard work has paid off," Turner said.

"We want to go to Dallas and represent K-State and get K-State on the map for a pom squad," she said.

Flood victims swamp offices with claims

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Despite receding waters, the Great Flood of '93 is unleashing a second wave of despair as flood victims overrun state and federal aid offices with damage claims.

Estimates of potential property losses in nine affected states already have surpassed $12 billion, and the numbers continue to climb. Much of that, it turns out, may be uncompensated private losses.

Unlike the string of hurricane, hail, tornado, snow and fire disasters across the country in recent years, the Midwest flooding isn't causing much concern in boardrooms where insurance company executives decide whether to raise premiums.

"My guess is that the floods by themselves will have an insignificant effect, if any, on insurance rates for the simple reason that not much of the property was insured," says David Chartrand, regional representative for the Insurance Information Institute in suburban Overland Park, Kan.

The latest projection of claims to private insurers due to flooding is only $655 million, says Jim Welsh, claim consultant for Property Claims Services of Rahway, N.J., which tracks private insurance claims. That's well below the billions paid out for hurricanes Andrew, Hugo and Iniki, for instance.

Therein lies the rub: Because of the high and almost certain risk involved, private insurers won't touch flood coverage.

"It's like selling insurance for people who already have terminal cancer," says Chartrand. "Flooding defies the normal ways of insurance where you spread risk across a wide spectrum. The only people who will buy flood insurance are the people with high risk."

To fill the vacuum, the federal government began offering policies in the 1960s, but few people living in flood plains purchased them. In fact, only one in nine homeowners who should have insurance in the Midwest actually buys it, according to Federal Emergency Management Agency figures.

The low participation rate forces up the cost for those who do buy coverage and requires federal bailouts for those left uninsured.

Earlier this month, Congress passed a $5.7 billion aid package for victims in flooded areas. Even before the ink was dry on President Clinton's signature on the bill, though, Missouri Gov. Mel Carnahan and others were saying more money would be needed.

Valerie Gibson, a spokeswoman for the Missouri Department of Insurance, said private insurers did not have much exposure in that hard-hit state.

"The only way a private insurance company would be involved in flood-related claims would be if they wrote mobile home coverage or if they insured an auto dealership that was flooded," Gibson said.

Homeowners whose autos were damaged by flooding may be able to make a claim under a comprehensive policy, she adds.

City Commission stalls on K-177 bridge project

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission did not take action Tuesday night on a Kansas Department of Transportation project to build a new bridge over the Kaw River for highway K-177.

The project contains plans to build new off-ramps on land currently owned by the city. The land is now being leased to the Manhattan Town Center.

As a part of the bridge plan, the Kansas Department of Transportation would need to acquire land near the Town Center for an off-ramp for the bridge.

Normally, the city would automatically give land to KDOT for construction purposes.

However, the city's agreement with the mall requires it to maintain access roads and parking for the mall that would be annexed for the bridge project, Bill Frost, city attorney, said.

"It was our feeling that we did not have the funds to contribute the land," Frost said.

The city proposed an agreement with KDOT that would require a trade of land for the project.

KDOT would acquire the land it needs for the bridge, and the city would get land that is now part of the highway to maintain the access roads and parking for the Town Center.

The transfer would include property with equal values, Bruce McCallum, public works director, said.

The transfer was needed because KDOT cannot own property that is not used for highways, Frost said.

The city will be responsible for the cost of moving utilities and lighting for the Town Center parking lot, which is estimated at $375,000, Frost said.

Frost said KDOT would reimburse the city for costs up to $600,000 associated with the project. Frost said he hoped a finished agreement with KDOT would be ready for the city commission soon.

Architects reveal current design for art museum

Building to have security, humidity, temperature controls

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

Plans for the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum are progressing.

The principal architect, Arthur Andersson, unveiled the current design of the art museum at a fundraiser Aug. 23 in Topeka.

"The design is beginning to take shape," said Ruth Ann Wefald, chair of the Art Museum Steering Committee.

The building will be in the southeast corner of campus near Higinbotham Gate.

"We want to create a design that blends with the other buildings on campus," Jessica Reichman, curator of the art museum, said. "It's a wonderful gate to the community as well as the campus."

Once the $5 million needed to build the museum is raised, the construction can begin.

About 80 percent of the goal has been reached, Reichman said.

The new building will have adequate security for the art as well as temperature and humidity control.Currently some of the art is being displayed throughout buildings on campus. The rest is in storage, Reichman said.

Thomas Hart Benton and John Steuart Curry are among the artists whose works are in the K-State collection.

The museum is being named for Marianna Kistler Beach. She and her husband, Ross, graduates of K-State, donated $2 million to the project.

Water, sewer systems need flood repair

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The city is repairing an estimated $1.5 million in damage to the city's water and sewer systems caused by last month's flood, Jim Pearson, city manager, said.

Because some of the damaged areas are still under water, exact figures are not known, Pearson said.

The city commission last week approved $1 million for emergency repairs.

"We will not need to raise new revenue through taxes," Pearson said.

Part of the money for repairs will come from the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The rest will come from city reserves and operating budgets.

Pearson said it may take months before repairs are complete.

The city is trying to maintain systems until repairs can be made.

Repairs have resulted in service being disrupted to some residents and businesses, Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said.

"There are some businesses that have had traffic cut off in front of their buildings for three to four weeks," McCallum said. "These businesses are really feeling the effects of having traffic cut off."

The city has hired several contractors and used overtime to tackle the emergency repairs, McCallum said.

McCallum said sewers in 21 different locations need repairs.

Sewer problems have also led to problems with the buckling of pavement and sidewalks, he said.

General maintenance has been suspended until emergency repairs can be made.

A $400,000 street repair project was 75 percent completed when rain and flooding caused delays.

Despite delays, the project should be completed before winter, Pearson said.

Jackson accused of child molestation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Jackson's security consultant said a police investigation of the pop star was prompted by child-abuse allegations from blackmailers who tried to extort $20 million.

Police and prosecutors confirmed Monday that a complaint was being investigated, but refused to elaborate.

"We have to be sensitive to everyone involved," Police Cmdr. David Gascon said. "We intend to be very professional in the way we conduct this investigation."

Gascon said the investigation began Aug. 17. He would not confirm a report by KNBC-TV that search warrants were served Saturday on Jackson's Century City condominium and his Neverland ranch near Santa Ynez, Calif.

The investigation was prompted by an extortion gone awry, said Anthony Pellicano, a private investigator who said he has worked with Jackson for four years.

Pellicano told reporters that people he would not identify, who knew Jackson, tried to extort $20 million by alleging that he had abused a child.

"When we would not pay, a phone call was made to Child and Family Services, which started this investigation."

Pellicano said Jackson gets 25 to 30 extortion attempts a year.

Jackson was in Thailand launching his "Dangerous" world tour with concerts Tuesday and Wednesday. Contacted in Bangkok, Jackson spokesman Lee Solters declined to comment about the allegations.

Duane Bole, locksmith at Bee Safe Lock & Key in Santa Maria, said he went along on the search of Jackson's ranch, about 120 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

Bole said he signed a statement promising not to discuss the search or anything he saw at the ranch.

In his February television interview with Oprah Winfrey, Jackson said he surrounds himself with children to make up for a friendless, workaholic childhood.

Man sinks into moms grave, stuck for hours

NEWTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A man planting mums on his mother's grave was trapped for two hours when the ground gave way and he sank knee-high.

Kenneth McLaughlin, 29, said he tried repeatedly to free himself, but the leg that sank into soft ground Saturday became stuck under the base of his mother's headstone.

Help arrived after two hours, said McLaughlin, a security guard.

"I screamed and shouted for help, but nobody came. I was really upset," he said.

McLaughlin was rescued by a bicyclist, who called for help. A police officer used a flower pot near the grave to shovel a two-foot hole and free McLaughlin.

"One thing's for sure," McLaughlin said, "I don't think I'll go back there alone for a while."

What face should I put on this fake $20 bill?

(AP) ATTENTION ASPIRING COUNTERFEITERS: If you're passing funny money, it may be comforting to know that only 6 percent of all Americans know who is on a $1, $5, $10 and $20 bill. So says a poll by the Plus System Inc., a leading network of automated teller machines. The poll also shows that nearly seven out of 10 Americans wouldn't mind seeing a new face on their bills, and not necessarily a human face. The top picks, in order: an American eagle, Statue of Liberty, John F. Kennedy, President Clinton, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Elvis Presley, Ronald Reagan.

Madonna throws party, irritates neighbors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If you live near Madonna, don't expect quiet, especially if she's throwing a birthday party, neighbors say.

Several neighbors summoned police Saturday as a live rap and funk band at Madonna's 35th birthday bash kept them up into the wee hours. Some neighbors have been peeved since the pop diva bought the $5 million Hollywood Hills castle.

"I had to close all the windows of my house to get to sleep," one neighbor, who refused to give his name, told the Daily News of Los Angeles.

The party started to break up at midnight Sunday.

"Captain Kangeroo" says: No spanking

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Children's TV star Bob Keeshan, Captain Kangaroo, came to North Carolina to praise state efforts to reduce spanking in schools.

"I'm opposed to corporal punishment because it doesn't work," said Keeshan, whose morning television show was on the air for 30 years. "It will work temporarily to affect behavior, but it doesn't last."

The state assembly in 1991 repealed a law that blocked bans on corporal punishment. Since then, schools serving about half the state's students have banned paddling.

At 66, Keeshan now resembles the aging, paternal character that it took makeup to create when Captain Kangaroo started in the 1950s.

Iraqi ambassadors defect to Great Britain

LONDON (AP) — Two Iraqi ambassadors defected Tuesday, vowing to help opposition groups bring democracy to a homeland shattered by Saddam Hussein's reign of terror.

Hisham Al-Shawi, Iraq's ambassador to Canada, and Hamed Al-Jubouri, Iraq's ambassador to Tunisia, were granted visitor visas and could apply for political asylum if they choose, the Foreign Office said.

Al-Shawi, Iraq's ambassador to Canada, said he defected with more than $363,000 worth of embassy funds. He pledged to return the money to the first legitimate government in Baghdad.

High-tech drug ring cracked

"The significance of this operation was in the sophisticati on and technology."
MARK MILLER
ASSISTANT U.S. ATTORNEY FOR WESTERN MISSOURI

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — An international drug ring smuggled cocaine to the Kansas City area and western Europe by bonding it to such items as fiberglass bathtubs and suitcases and then extracting the drug in makeshift laboratories, federal officials said.

"The significance of this operation was in the sophistication and technology," said Mark Miller, assistant U.S. attorney for western district Missouri, who will prosecute the case.

At a news conference Monday, Miller and officials from several federal agencies involved in the investigation displayed suitcases that they said had been used in the ring, and pictures of a bathtub that had cocaine bonded to it.

The masterminds of the ring were in Bolivia, but the operation reached into Brazil, Kansas City and western Europe, Miller said.

The indictment was returned by the grand jury July 14 and unsealed Monday, after several people were arrested. The government alleges that those charged held various roles in the conspiracy, including directors, financiers, distributors and couriers.

Each of the defendants is charged with one count of conspiracy to possess with intent to distribute five kilograms or more of cocaine, and one count of conspiracy to import five kilograms or more of cocaine. Some of the defendants face additional charges.

The defendants are part of a complex conspiracy that started in 1984, Miller said.

Originally, the cocaine was smuggled out of Bolivia after it was mixed in shampoos, perfume and other liquid cosmetics. Those substances were smuggled into the United States, Germany and the Netherlands, where the cocaine was chemically extracted, Miller said.

The suspects later began bonding the cocaine to such items as suitcases, briefcases, bathtubs and shower stalls.

Miller declined to detail the process used by the smugglers, but said the people who extracted the cocaine could use basic chemicals and did not need sophisticated laboratories.

"It wasn't something where they just scrape the cocaine off the items," Miller said, "but it used very makeshift labs, not elaborate places."

But the process was sophisticated enough that the items could pass across national borders and through customs without being detected by regular law enforcement procedures, he said.

Once across the borders, it was extracted and converted back to marketable powder. The ring also was capable of smuggling cocaine in bulk, but Miller declined to say if it did.

Breaking the drug ring took hundreds of pounds of cocaine off the streets, said Chris Whitley, public affairs officer for the U.S. Attorney's office. Officials, however, would not estimate the dollar value of the cocaine moved by the ring.

The cocaine that came into the Kansas City area was for distribution here and was not sent elsewhere, Miller said.

The Kansas City-area connections in the case are Larry F. Meyer, 45, of Gladstone; Joseph R. Lasker, 36, of Overland Park; Constantine A. Kyriazis, 39, formerly of Kansas City and now believed to be living in Belize; Marcel Samuel Lambert, 64, of Kansas City, Kan.; and Aldo Mazzarese, 45, Overland Park.

The other defendant is Maynard H. Gilbert, a U.S. citizen living in Bielefeld, Germany.

Pentagon deploys Rangers to Somalia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An elite force of 400 Army soldiers trained to strike sensitive targets with unconventional means will head for Somalia this week. But the Pentagon said the Rangers' mission is not to nab warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

"This is not an effort to go after one man," Kathleen deLaski, a Pentagon spokeswoman, said. "It's an effort to improve the overall situation in Mogadishu."

Even so, the Rangers' special training gives them the kinds of skills in unconventional warfare that would be required to flush out Aidid, who has been waging a hit-and-run war with United Nations forces for months. The U.N. called for Aidid's arrest in June after an ambush blamed on Aidid's militia killed 24 Pakistani U.N. peace keepers, but the warlord has managed to elude capture.

"Capturing Aidid is not the only way to improve security," deLaski said, adding that the Ranger deployment does not represent a change in U.S. policy.

The decision to send more U.S. troops to Somalia stands in contrast to expectations just a few months ago that some U.S. forces would start heading home soon. Some in Congress have questioned the wisdom of extending the U.S. and U.N. mission from ending Somalia's starvation to rebuilding the country.

Dan Goure, a political-military specialist at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said he interpreted the decision to send Army Rangers as a signal that the Clinton administration foresees no quick exit from Somalia.

"We look to be in this for the long haul now — and a very long haul I think it is going to be," Goure said. "It's a signal that you intend to stay."

About 4,000 U.S. troops, mostly logistics specialists, are in Somalia as part of a 25,000-man U.N. peacekeeping force. The intervention began last December with the landing of U.S. Marines in Mogadishu. The U.N. assumed military command last May.

deLaski said 400 Rangers would head out from their base at Fort Benning, Ga., in the next few days.They give a substantial extra punch to the 1,200-man U.S. quick reaction force already in Mogadishu to protect U.N. peacekeepers.

The American contingent has increasingly become a target of Somali guerrilla violence. In the latest incident last Sunday, six Americans were slightly injured when their supply truck hit a remote-controlled bomb on one of the busiest roads in Mogadishu. Four Americans were killed in a similar attack Aug. 8.

David Johnson, director of the State Department's press office, said the security situation in southern Mogadishu, Aidid's stronghold, had deteriorated to the point that restoring economic and political stability had become tenuous.

"A capable and rapidly deployable force was needed on the ground, and the Rangers are ideal for this mission," deLaski said.

Rangers are light infantry trained to conduct special military operations in all types of terrain and weather. They can infiltrate a target area and conduct a quick, intense assault, as they did in Operation Just Cause in Panama in 1989, or they can parachute into an area and rescue friendly forces.

An Army reference pamphlet on its Special Operations Forces says one of the Rangers' capabilities is to conduct strike operations such as raids against targets behind enemy lines, including nuclear storage sites, missile sites or key enemy military-political personnel or resources.

They are trained to fight at night and in close-quarters conditions such as in cities.

deLaski said the Rangers from Fort Benning will be equipped with personal weapons such as M-60 machine guns and M-16 rifles, as well as 60mm mortars and antitank rifles. She declined to say more about their weaponry, although other officials said they often work in tandem with specially equipped helicopters and other aircraft.

CAMPUS

UNICORN database answers inquiries

JEFF GAMBER
Collegian

Important campus information is available on a database in the campus mainframe called UNICORN.

UNICORN, which stands for University Central Online Resource Network, is a computerized database which runs on KSUVM, the campus mainframe.

UNICORN has become very popular since it was introduced two years ago, Neil Erdwien, application support specialist, said.

"The most popular information is the weather. It's got the weather forecast, current conditions. ... the most popular file in all of UNICORN is the Manhattan local forecast," he said.

"The next most popular topic is the calendars and events section that lists upcoming events — mostly K-State related."

In addition to up-to-date weather information, UNICORN offers calendars of K-State and local events for the year, information on university policies and procedures, hours for campus buildings, a line schedule and closed-class lists.

An average of 1,500 files a day are accessed through UNICORN, and that the number has been increasing, Erdwien said.

The UNICORN menu will be updated this fall in order to make the information easier to find, he said.

In addition, Erdwien said he plans to add the graduate portion of the course catalog and other features later this fall.

Richard Heflin, graduate student in mechanical engineering, said the closed-class lists and line schedule are particularly useful this time of year.

"The most useful feature I see is that it contains the closed-class list each semester and an entire class line schedule, so at anytime you can log onto the mainframe and determine what classes are currently open," he said.

Heflin also said UNICORN is user-friendly.

"It's relatively easy to use. It doesn't take much work, and you have several things at your fingertips," he said.

UNICORN is open to anyone, and the user is not required to have an account on the mainframe.

"It's available to anybody affiliated with K-State," Erdwien said.

"It can be accessed from any of our labs, office computers, or by people at home who can dial up K-State with a modem."

Tickets least of the problem

K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has received harsh feedback lately for offering free football tickets to flood victims.

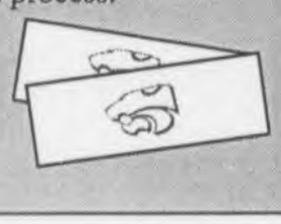
It is time for critics to get off the athletic department's back and give them credit for trying to help.

Can enough really be done for the people who got caught in the high waters?

You can offer the people food or money, but why not also give them a break from stress with an afternoon outing at a K-State home football game.

The tickets are for non-conference games, so it isn't like students or alumni won't be able to see the University of Kansas, the University of Missouri game or other big games.

The free tickets are based on family season-ticket sales on the non-conference home games, which the athletic department will match.



The athletic department went about the give-away by offering K-State supporters the chance to provide a little relief to flood victims by buying season tickets.

The Olathe Daily News and the Manhattan Mercury have criticized the offer.

Max Urick,K-State's athletic director, and company are standing strong and plan to continue with the giving away of the tickets.

What is wrong with full stands for the first few games? The football team might appreciate the support at the beginning of the new season.

Also, K-State just might get a few more fans in the process.

Six little hints for a better year

I remember the details of my first year at this University the way you would remember the details of a bad accident.

Every memory is hazy and blurred, the real and the unreal swirling together in such a way that to this day I am still unsure what may have actually happened and what may have been a hallucination inspired by too much junk food, too little sleep and a drug habit I am still recovering from.

Not that my entire freshman year is a scene out of Pink Floyd's "The Wall." Amid the rubble of those memories, the feelings I felt are still clear enough to make me twinge five years later. Ah, the exhilaration...the abject terror.

I had it written all over my face, too. I have been seeing that look a lot lately on other faces, and it makes the twinges come back full force. I hate that. So I went against my very nature and did something helpful.

I asked students, professors, parents and perfect strangers what advice they would give someone their first year out to make it a little easier. Here's what they came up with:

1. Carry your student ID, fee receipt, driver's license, butt print and elevator pass everywhere you go. You never know when you may have to prove you do exist, and believe me, even if you are standing in front of them stark naked, singing, there are University personnel who will not believe you are breathing and enrolled if you don't have those little pieces of cardboard and plastic with you. As a precaution, it might also be wise to have your Social Security number branded on your forehead.

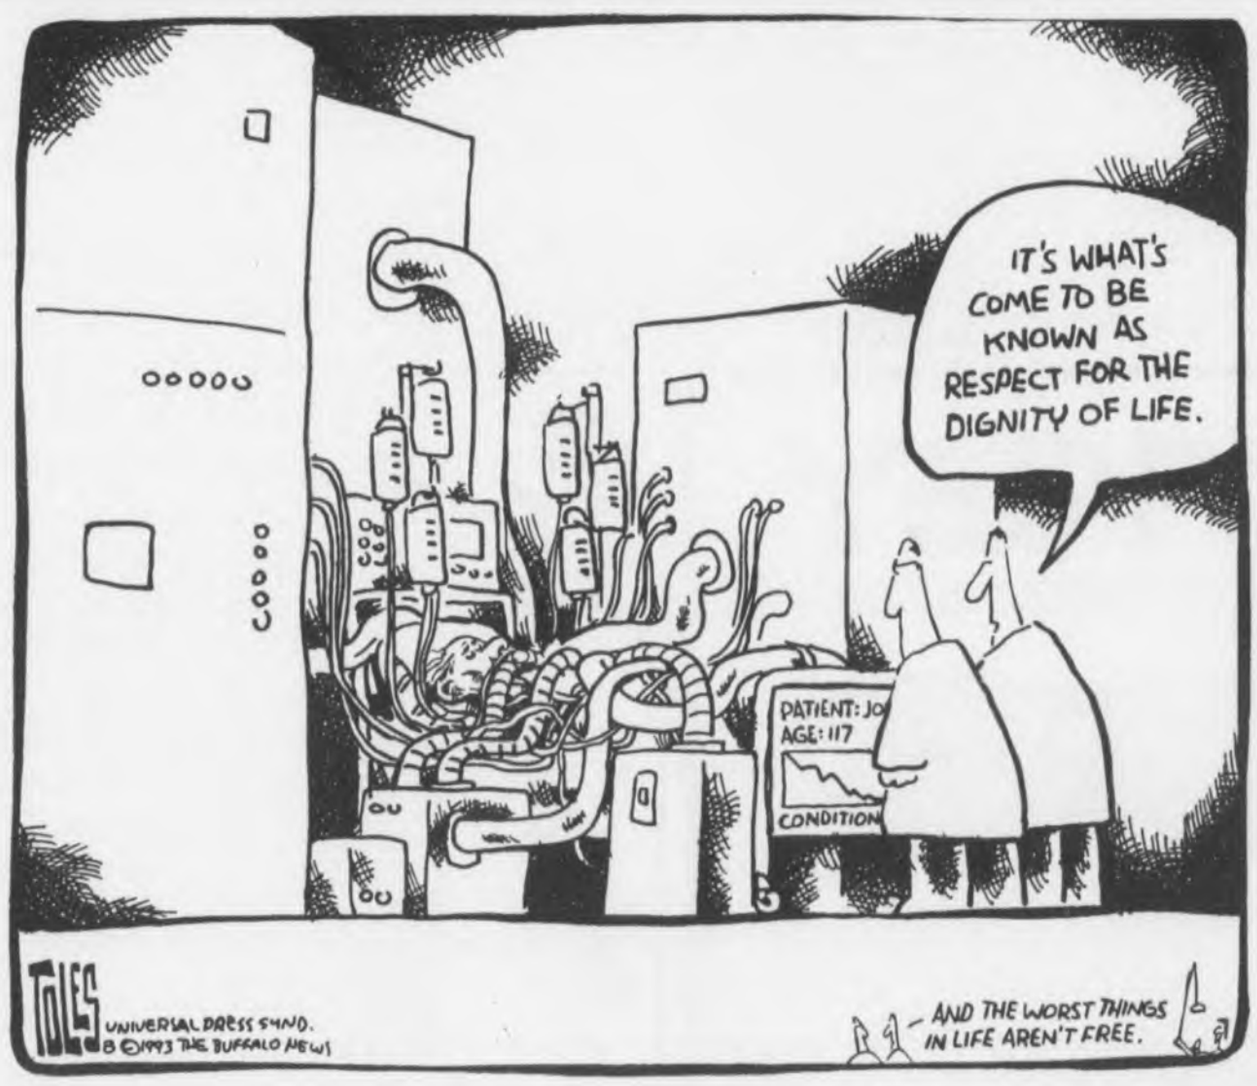
ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

2. Buy a planner and use it. Those little things are worth their weight in gold. And make sure you write your assignments down in the right days and in handwriting that you should be able to read at 50 paces.

You may deny it, but there will be a time when you'll have a five-page essay due, and you won't have any idea if it is supposed to be over Eleanor of Aquitaine or Elvis Costello because you were in a hurry writing it down.

3. Be nice to your professors, and I do not mean in an Eddie Haskell sort of way. Smile when you see them, say hello and always try and remember their names. I think they are the lowest-paid professors in the Big Eight, and contrary to popular belief they are not being paid to care about whether or not you understand their material.

Lucky for us, a great many of them do care, or else they wouldn't be here taking all the crap they do. The least we as students can do is be nice. That goes for groundspeople, custodians, campus cops and countless others.



4. Walk when you can because parking here sucks.

5. Budget your finances. Financial Aid is an awesome thing, but it does not last long, and believe me when I say you do not want to be living on beer nuts 'til Christmas.

6. Get involved. Not just with the University, but in the community. We are only here for a short while (some of us longer than others). There are others who live here a lifetime. They raise families here.

In short, while we are here, it is important we be as much a part of this community as we can. Living isolated in our own world doesn't help anyone.

Fate of KU's climate program up in air

Editor,

With all the record-breaking weather across the United States this year, it is peculiar that the Kansas Board of Regents is considering the elimination of the bachelor of arts and the master's programs in atmospheric science at the University of Kansas.

No other duplicate program exists at any Kansas college or university. It seems odd that a program of such importance to an agricultural state would be suggested for elimination.

The state of Kansas and all aspects of its industry, commerce and recreation are exceedingly dependent on weather and climate information and forecasting. Unfortunately, because of Kansas' centralized location and climate, severe weather is a constant hazard.

The abolition of the bachelor of arts and especially the master's degree programs in atmospheric science would deprive Kansans of continuing research of storm detection and generalized weather-forecasting techniques so essential to agricultural-related businesses.

All Kansans should be able to study atmospheric science in their own state — a state perfect for the study of weather and its related subjects.

▶ GUN SMARTS

Ed Board shooting straight with ideas

Editor,

I would like to commend the editorial board for its neo-conservative editorial "Gun smarts, not gun control, is the issue" in the Aug. 23 Collegian. In six years of reading the Collegian, this is the first editorial that I have seen addressing the root of gun violence: the devaluing of human life, the lack of moral and ethical education and the failure of our criminal justice system.

I would, however, like to point out a common fallacy promoted by the anti-gun crowd: the lack of restrictions on fully automatic assault weapons. Your editorial states, "Restrictions are needed, however, for nowhere does anyone need a fully automatic assault rifle for home defense."

True. But you and others fail to realize that "fully automatic assault weapons," as defined by the U.S. Department of Defense, have been strictly controlled by federal law for over 60 years. In fact, according to the U.S. Department of Justice there are over 20,000 gun control laws already on the books.

The 0.5 percent of violent gun crimes committed with "assault weapons" are done so with weapons obtained illegally because a law-abiding citizen cannot purchase such a gun. Simply enforcing the gun-control laws that already exist would provide much needed relief.

The message of your editorial, though somewhat obscured, is that gun control is not the answer. As best stated by Christopher W. Dunn in a July 27, 1993, letter to the editor, "The answer to our ills is not gun control. It is self-control."

Wetlands policy closes loopholes, expands federal protection

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House today announced its effort to defuse longstanding conflicts over preserving the nation's wetlands through a policy that expands protection, but also gives landowners some flexibility they long have sought.

The plan will close loopholes developers have used to build parking garages and shopping malls on wetlands.

But it also exempts from federal protection 53 million acres of wetlands that were drained and converted to farm use before 1985.

The policy change was announced with little fanfare, and no formal statements by President Clinton or Vice President Al Gore. Instead, the White House Office on Environmental Policy distributed a press release and a description of the 40 changes to the wetlands policy.

Noting the nation has lost half its wetlands outside Alaska since the time of European settlement, the plan endorses a short term goal of no-net-loss of wetlands, and a long term effort to increase wetland acreage.

The plan was developed by a White House-directed task force involving nine federal agencies that attempted to address landowners' complaints about cumbersome, restrictive and conflicting government regulation of wetlands.

"By bringing together the interested parties, we've moved beyond polarization and paralysis and arrived at a plan that is flexible and effective," Kathleen McGinty, director of the Office of Environmental Policy, said in a written statement.

The plan stresses giving farmers and other landowners greater administrative avenues, short of going to court, when they want to appeal a government denial of their permit requests to develop wetlands.

The same appeal process is not granted to environmentalists or others who want to challenge the granting of a permit.

The National Wildlife Federation and the National Audubon Society were immediately critical of some provisions they said could weaken wetlands protections.

"The package is a net loss for America's wetlands," said Jan Goldman-Carter, an attorney for National Wildlife.

The White House, however, quoted dairy farmer Gerald Digerness, president of the National Association of Conservation Districts, commending the policy as "fair, flexible and technically feasible."

The White House statement said the plan breaks the gridlock caused in the past by warring federal agencies.

The policy does not attempt — as President Bush had tried unsuccessfully — to redefine what a wetland actually is.

The Clinton policy stresses the need to protect the millions of acres of wetlands. Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Carol Browner said U.S. wetlands are being lost at a rate of 300,000 acres a year, and the new plan will be "fair to landowners at the same time that it protects our water quality and wildlife."

There are an estimated 100 million acres of wetlands in the United States, not counting 170 million acres in Alaska.

The swamps, marshes and other wetlands support crucial wildlife and biological systems, and are key to flood control, filtration of ground water and maintenance of water quality, as well as ecosystem protection.

The new policy kills a rule left hanging from the Bush administration that would have lifted federal protection from 1.7 million acres of Alaska wetlands, 1 percent of the state's wetlands. Exempting the Alaska acres would have freed them for development and left significant adverse environmental consequences, the policy concluded.

While rejecting the Alaska exemption, the administration is backing some other Bush-era approaches to wetlands, including "mitigation banking" by which a wetland may be developed if another wetland is created elsewhere.

Flood, Anderson fire destroy home, belongings

CORI CORNELISON

Some people just can't win.

Jan Hedrick, computer specialist and office manager of News Services in Anderson Hall, moved irreplaceable photographs and other valuables to the basement of Anderson as she prepared to evacuate her home during the flood.

Hedrick said she thought her belongings would be safe, but the Aug. 20 fire in Anderson proved her wrong.

"When I heard over the radio the other morning there had been a fire up here, I had forgotten about the pictures being up here, but it could have been worse," Hedrick said.

Many of Hedrick's belongings, including her daughter's doll collection, suffered water damage when the building's sprinkler system was activated.

"The sad part of it is that I go home at night and try to work down there cleaning up some of the mud and stuff, and we worked there all day yesterday and then come up here and clean all day," Hedrick said.

"Since the flood is over with, you don't see anyone to help, and it's very frustrating," Hedrick said.

Evacuation of furniture from the mobile home park began July 18 out of fear that Tuttle Creek Reservoir might break out of its bed, she said.

Hedrick said they slept on a mattress in their home until they were forced out July 22.

"They told us to get out and get out now," she said.

"We don't know when we're going be able to get back in," Hedrick said. "Time is creeping away."

Hedrick said they are waiting in the hope that their home will soon be restored.

"It'll never be the same."

Study suggests jobs program unneeded

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A government study of a federal jobs program in Alabama suggests it is unneeded and may have wasted $4.5 billion nationally from 1980 to 1990.

"We recommended that (Labor Secretary Robert B. Reich) ask Congress to consider whether the program should be eliminated," Gerald W. Peterson, the Labor Department's assistant inspector general, wrote in a memo accompanying the report.

The targeted jobs tax credit program was designed to entice businesses into hiring the economically disadvantaged by offering federal tax credits up to $2,400 based on wages paid to eligible employees.

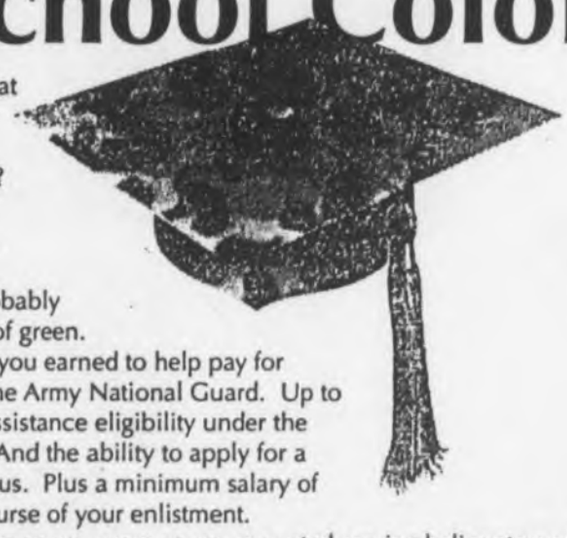
From 1980 to 1990, these credits totaled $4.5 billion, the report said.

But according to the study of program operations in Alabama in fiscal year 1991, employers said they would have hired 95 percent of the new workers without the federal incentive.

The study, which was released Monday, found that most of the jobs involved were low-skilled, low-paying, entry-level positions. Almost half were in the service sector including the fast-food industry and commercial janitor companies.

Peterson said the cost of Alabama's program exceeded benefits by about $7.7 million.

"In other words, for each dollar in tax credits employers claimed, only about 10 cents in economic benefits resulted," he claimed. "The poor return in Alabama may be indicative of the nation, as many of the employers are large national and international corporations."



"Participating employers who used the targeted jobs tax credits are often corporations which require a steady steam of workers to fill large numbers of high-turnover jobs," Peterson said. "Federal subsidies for hiring targeted individuals were unnecessary because the educational and skill level requirements of available jobs matched those of the target groups."

The inspector general's office plans to conduct a nationwide audit of the program, which Congress recently extended through the end of 1994. The study said the congressional Joint Committee on Taxation estimated employers will claim tax credits of $282 million during the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?

If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.

There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.

Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.

All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

High default rates place student loans in jeopardy

900 colleges face penalties, Alaska worst offender

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government identified more than 900 colleges and trade schools Tuesday that stand to lose their participation in the federal student-loan program because their students too frequently default on loans.

Among states, Alaska had the worst repayment rate. The Department of Education said more than 40 percent of the student loans in that state on which payments came due during the reporting period were in default. North Dakota, with a 6.9-percent rate, had the best record.

The national average was 17.5 percent.

Student Loan Finance Corp. of Aberdeen, S.D., had the worst bad-loan record of any bank, with 88 percent of the loans it originated in default. More than 68 percent of the loans originated by the Greenwood Trust Co. of New Castle, Del., were in default.

A 1989 law designed to drive down the number of defaults has allowed the Education Department to drop schools with default rates of at least 30 percent for three consecutive years. The current figures represent defaults in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Those with default rates greater than 40 percent can be cut off from all federal-aid programs, including the Pell Grant program.

Under federal law, schools included on the list will automatically be barred from participating in the loan program unless they appeal either to the Department of Education or to the courts. If they do appeal, no action is taken until the appeal is exhausted, but very few schools ultimately win. Last year, 280 schools appealed.

The biggest trouble spots in the Federal Family Education Loan Program, formerly called the Guaranteed Student Loan program, were by far one- or two-year, profit-making career schools.

David Longanecker, an assistant education secretary, said while the schools are disproportionately represented, he did not believe the answer is to eliminate all schools that provide some certain kind of training.

However, he said, the government should develop strict performance standards to make sure that students attending those schools are properly trained in fields where they can get jobs.

In 1991, taxpayers lost an estimated $3.6 billion on bad student loans. Federal education officials estimate that the amount dropped to $2.9 billion in 1992 and will be about $2.5 billion this year.

The department announced last month that overall default rates were decreasing because of the tougher collection methods.

The number of defaults declined from 22.4 percent in the 1990 fiscal year to 17.5 percent in 1991, the latest year for which figures are available.

Last year, about 1,000 schools were handed suspensions, which can last a year or more depending on the school's corrective actions.

The government bases a school's default rate for a particular year on the number of borrowers scheduled to begin paying on their loans who defaulted either in that year or the following year.

The government pays the interest on the loan while the student is in school. If the student defaults, one of 47 guarantor agencies repays the lender and then tries to collect. If they are unsuccessful, the government pays off the loan.

Schools, faced with the loss of an important — sometimes primary — source of revenue, have been using collection agencies to go after the delinquents.

But some schools have challenged in the courts the department's method of determining default rates for individual schools. At least four cases are pending.

Independent store owners sue for$1.1 million, lawyer claims healthy competition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONWAY, Ark. — Three small pharmacies suing Wal-Mart for alleged predatory pricing are just feeling the pinch of healthy competition from the world's largest retailer, Wal-Mart's lawyer said.

The independent store owners claim Wal-Mart prices goods below cost in an effort to drive smaller competitors out of business, a practice banned by the state's Unfair Practices Act.

But Wal-Mart attorney Peter Kumpe said in opening statements that the only problems the small pharmacies have had are from normal, healthy competition.

The non-jury trial began Monday in Faulkner County Chancery Court.

"Wal-Mart's prices have had a negative effect on our store, a very negative effect. I lost customers," said plaintiff Dwayne Goode, owner of American Drugs Inc. of Conway.

Jim Hendrickson, owner of Baker Drug Store in Conway, said he has lost nearly 2,000 prescriptions a year since the local Wal-Mart opened its pharmacy in 1987.

Matthew Adlong, an attorney for the plaintiffs, said in his opening statement that Wal-Mart's policy has only one rationale:

The Bentonville, Ark.-based company has admitted to selling some products below cost, but president David Glass said Wal-Mart isn't seeking to drive anyone out of business.

He said individual stores can lower prices on some items, based on local competition.

Wal-Mart lost a similar case in 1986 in Oklahoma and was forced to raise prices there.

The retailer became No. 1 by offering the lowest prices possible, but along the way it has been blamed for the demise of some long-established merchants in small cities around the country.

Recently, the company's plans to move into the Northeast was criticized by retailers who feared they would be forced out of business.

With $55.5 billion in 1992 sales and more than 2,300 discount stores and warehouse club outlets, Wal-Mart's volume allows it to get lower prices from suppliers.

The plaintiffs are seeking $100,000 in actual damages, $1 million in punitive damages and attorney fees and costs.

Mauling of boy in KC brings critics

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY— A paramedic trying to treat a little boy who had been mauled by dogs was in a near panic and did not know how to operate heart-shock equipment, two firefighter eyewitnesses say.

The eyewitness accounts cite concerns about the care that 6-year-old Reggie Walker received from the crew of the private Medevac Ambulance service after he was mauled by two rottweilers on Aug. 11.

Among those concerns was the paramedic's inability to insert an intravenous line for fluids and a tube to help the boy breathe.

In a statement released Monday, the two firefighters reported what they observed on the scene while emergency treatment on the boy began.

The child was pronounced dead shortly after 6 p.m. at Bethany Medical Center, about an hour after the attack near his house. Wyandotte County coroner Alan Hancock has called for an investigation into the treatment the boy received before arriving at the hospital.

Thomas Little, president of Medevac, said he was unaware of the firefighters' reports.

"These appear to be strictly observations of other people, and I don't know how valid they are," he said.

The city last week declined to release the statements of three firefighters who were at the scene or to let the Kansas City Star review a taped 911 call reporting the attack.

In his report, acting fire Capt. Christopher Dusil said the man working as a technician on the Medevac staff appeared to be the leader.

The female crew member was in a near-panic situation for much of the trip to Bethany, and Dusil and another firefighter made several attempts to calm her down, his report said.

Firefighter Kevin Nelson said the paramedic could not operate a defibrillator to jump-start Reggie's heart in the ambulance.

"She said she wasn't familiar with that piece of equipment on the truck," his report said. "She said she never did use that one before. So then she got a little upset."

Several of the boy's family members have questioned whether the 18 minutes the ambulance workers spent at the scene was too long given the seriousness of the boy's head injuries.

New players vying for positions

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

As K-State's performance steadily improves on the field, so too does its performance in the recruiting game.

Several freshmen, community college and university transfer players could make instant and lasting impressions on the Big Eight Conference this season.

The biggest of those impressions could be made by 6-foot-4-inch, 265-pound offensive tackle Bryan Campbell.

Campbell has one year of eligibility remaining after playing two seasons at Colorado and one at Cal-State Fullerton.

While at Colorado University he played in the Orange Bowl twice, including the 1990 season when CU captured a share of the national championship.

"Playing in a bowl game isn't much different from playing in a regular game, but playing in front of 100,000 people makes all the hard work that goes into a season seem worthwhile," Campbell said.

Campbell is currently competing with Barrett Brooks for playing time at the tackle position.

"My main goal is to become a starter on the team and contribute as much as possible," Campbell said. "This (offensive) line is good and has the potential to take this team to a bowl game."

Among the top freshmen joining the Wildcats this season is DeShawn Fogle.

Fogle played for Chapman High School, where he compiled 1,729 yards on 274 carries at running back. However, he will be performing on the defensive side of the ball at linebacker for the Cats.

"The biggest adjustment I have had to make has been the difference in the level of play in high school and college," Fogle said. "The players in college are bigger, stronger and faster than in high school."

Although it is not likely Fogle will see any significant playing time at linebacker this season, he may have an opportunity to break through on special teams.

Like Fogle, community-college transfer Scott Huen said he is finding the transition to Division I football difficult.

"(Jim) Hmielewski helps me on my assignments and shows me some of the tricks that he uses to get an advantage on quicker players," Huen said.

Huen came to K-State from Hutchinson Community College, where he earned all-Jayhawk Conference honors during his sophomore season as well as being voted co-offensive player of the year for the Blue Dragons.

"I realize that I won't play very much. I just want to be prepared to do my job in case I am needed," Huen said.

Freshman Chad Romano is currently in the middle of a three-way battle to replace graduate all-American Sean Snyder at punter.

Romano was highly recruited out of Newman High School in West Palm Beach, Fla. He averaged 40.9 yards per punt and made six field goals with a long of 41 yards.

As a junior he averaged 40.3 yards per punt and was four for five on field goals.

Plan opens 'floodgate' of controversy

As much as we have all seen or heard over the past few months about flooding across the Midwest and, more specifically, the state, it's rather ironic that the man who was hired before "The Flood of '93" to head K-State's athletic department finds himself in a flood of controversy.

K-State's new athletic director, Max Urick, sent a letter Aug. 2 to K-State supporters asking them to lend a hand to flood victims, but not by sandbagging or by donating to the Red Cross.

"Perhaps the most intriguing part of the last month was the sight of communities pulling together for the common good to fight off rising waters," Urick wrote. "These courageous people deserve special attention, so Kansas State University is offering a unique way to say thank you and help relieve the stress of the past month.

"The majority of our support comes from Kansas residents, so we would like to provide some assistance back to those harmed by the flood by offering you the opportunity to purchase a season ticket or a family season ticket for victims of the flood."

Troy COVERDALE

That plan has opened the floodgates of controversy (pardon the pun) and has brought the K-State athletic department under fire.

Bruce Buchanan, publisher of the Olathe Daily News and a K-State graduate, wrote, "Most of us thought the victims of recent flooding in Kansas had suffered enough, but the director of athletics at Kansas State University has found a way to make them suffer even more."

Even the Manhattan Mercury got in the act, saying it would have been better for the K-State athletic department to give away tickets or to find a corporation willing to buy tickets for flood victims.

I'll give credit where credit is due — at least Urick had intentions of helping flood victims.

I haven't seen anything from the Mercury's parent company, Seaton Publishing, saying they're willing to pay for tickets for flood victims to attend K-State games. Or what about giving free newspaper subscriptions to flood victims?

Of course not — they'd lose money on that deal.

Just like K-State athletics would by donating a certain amount of tickets to flood victims. Not exactly an option when the athletic department's coffers remain in the red.

And what have you heard from Urick since the flood of criticism began? Nothing. He's standing behind his plan and doesn't see any reason to comment to those who saw an easy target to take aim at.

Urick came up with an idea, is working on it wholeheartedly and has good intentions behind it.

That's better than watching a plan take shape and then commenting on how you would make it better without following through.

Copper Bowl coming to Big Eight

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

The Big Eight Conference reached an agreement July 26 with the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl, guaranteeing the fourth-place team a bowl bid for the 1993 season and giving K-State another shot at playing football over the holidays.

While the conference champion is participating in the Orange Bowl, the second-place team will be going through the bowl coalition process.

Along with the previous acquisition of the Jeep Eagle/Aloha Bowl for the third-place team, the Big Eight will be represented in four bowls in 1993.

The bowl coalition is a group of bowl committees that help determine the national champion. The second-place team would be placed in the second tier of the bowl coalition.

The fourth-place Big Eight team will face the third-place team from the Western Athletic Conference under the current agreement with the Copper Bowl, played in Tucson, Ariz. Each team will receive a payout of $700,000.

Larry Brown, executive director of the Copper Bowl, said the Big Eight has always been represented very well in the bowl games. Since the bowl had not been host to a Big Eight team in previous years, there was incentive to be drawn to the Big Eight, he said.

"The Big Eight is a strong conference and always has been," Brown said. "It has a tighter cluster of teams than that of many other conferences. Plus, we have good weather, and the teams that play here have a good time."

However, Brown said the committee selects the fourth-best team and not necessarily the fourth-place team.

"In other words, if the fifth-place team had a better record than the fourth-place team, we'd choose them instead, based on their record," Brown said.

And just what will the Copper Bowl do for the Big Eight?

Tim Allen, assistant commissioner of the Big Eight, said the obvious answer is prestige. But he said there will definitely be an increase in recruiting and finances due to the extra game.

"The future is impossible to predict in college football, but the Big Eight is on the upswing," he said. "The competition in this conference will be extremely fierce, and you'll see a lot of closer scores."

CONFERENCE DESTINIES

The Big Eight Conference has agreed to participate in these four bowl contests after the 1993 regular football season.

▶MANHATTAN RECREATION LOOKING FOR VOLUNTEERS

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is looking for volunteers to coach its fall sports programs. Volunteers are needed to coach flag football, volleyball and soccer teams.

"We roughly have 22 football teams, 20 volleyball teams and 40 soccer teams," recreation supervisor Mike Buchanan said. "We need at least one head coach per team.

"We need people that like kids, know a little bit about the sport and are willing to commit. There isn't really an age limit, but college-age students are ideal. We just require the volunteers to be mature," Buchanan said.

All of the teams in the fall sports program are divided by grade levels. The football division consists of grades four through seven, the volleyball division runs from grades five through eight, and the soccer division involves grades two through eight.

Most games are played on Sunday afternoons, but there will be some games on Saturday mornings and on weekday evenings. The football and soccer games will be played at Frank Anneberg Sports Complex, and the volleyball games are played at City Auditorium.

"Volunteers are needed as soon as possible because we kick the season off in the first week in September," Buchanan said.

"There is also coaching training available to those who are interested," he said. "People just don't realize that this is going on."

Those interested in volunteering can contact either Buchanan or Sue Hageman at 587-2757. The parks and recreation department is located at 1101 Fremont St.

▶MCRAE AND MONTGOMERY GET IN SHOUTING MATCH

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — After pitcher Jeff Montgomery gave up the winning run Monday in the 10th inning of a 3-2 loss to Minnesota, manager Hal McRae and he got into a loud shouting match heard by writers waiting outside the closed clubhouse.

If McRae were to pick a target, Montgomery seemed an odd one. The right-hander, who leads the league in saves with 38, has clearly been one of the team's most important players.

Jose Lind failed to get down a bunt with runners on first and second and nobody out in the seventh, and Gary Gaetti struck out to end the game with the tying run at second.

Montgomery, who has become the premier stopper in the American League, has always maintained an even keel whether the outcome was success or failure. It has been mostly success — Montgomery has blown only four save opportunities and has saves in 27 of his last 28 chances.

It was suggested that McRae was angry because Montgomery had asked before the 10th if it was time to warm up. "You work for me, I don't work for you," McRae could be heard shouting during the argument.

After a series of exchanges, McRae apparently threw something, and the sound of glass breaking was heard.

Smokers can't give up habit

10.5 percent of students

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Although fewer K-State students are smoking, those who continue to smoke will have a hard time quitting.

In 1990, Lafene Health Center conducted a survey of 800 students. Only 10.5 percent of those students surveyed used tobacco, and of that number 8.8 percent smoked cigarettes, said Bill Arck, director of the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service.

However, Patrick Crain, sophomore in philosophy and pre-law, and a smoker of eight years, said he likes tobacco and would not give smoking up. It's a part of his lifestyle now, he said.

Students who began smoking as adolescents will have a more difficult time if they ever choose to quit, Arck said.

"Students who have been smoking for one to two years will have an easier time quitting because the physiological changes are not as great, and their bodies will react more favorably," Arck said.

According to the pamphlet "What do you know about ... Nicotine," ingesting nicotine by smoking, chewing or dipping stimulates the central nervous system.

The pamphlet, available at Lafene, also said nicotine is highly addictive.

"Trying to get someone to quit smoking is much more difficult than asking a heroin addict to stop shooting up," said Cindy Burke, director of health education and promotion at Lafene.

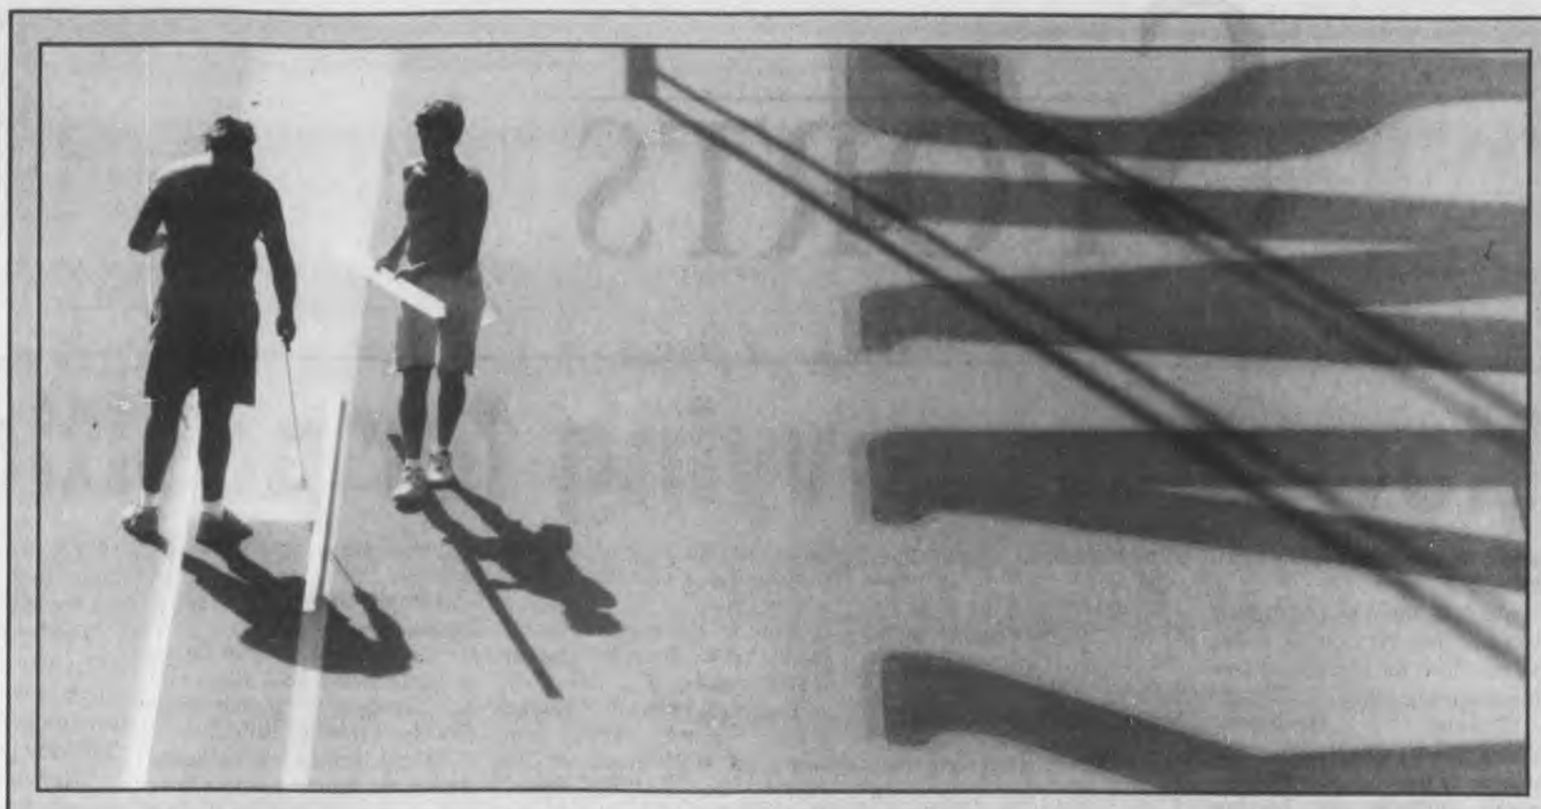
Students periodically stop by Lafene and ask how they can quit smoking, she said.

Health education and promotion has many pamphlets on the current, successful methods smokers choose to help them quit.

Burke said student smokers may pick up information on Nicoderm (nicotine transdermal system), or a new book called "The No-Nag, No-Guilt, Do-it-Your-Own-Way Guide To Quitting Smoking" by Dr. Tom Ferguson.

"Physicians at Lafene are more than happy to work with students to educate them and help them get over the hump when they decide to quit smoking," Burke said.

Until a year ago, the American Lung Association sponsored an eight-week stop-smoking support-group class.



Due to a lack of interest, the class was discontinued, Burke said.

Mike Bergen, sophomore in elementary education, said he has smoked for 14 years and has tried to quit several times.

Bergen said he used the Nicoderm patch, but it only lasted a day. He said he also tried to quit cold turkey, but four hours later he was smoking again.

He said he hasn't given up, though.

"I'm thinking about trying hypnosis," he said.

Wet paint at Wagner

Mike Tosto and Tom Shelton, both employees of the Balsam Corporation in St. Louis, Mo., paint in the south end zone of Wagner Field Tuesday afternoon. According to Tosto, at least 80 gallons of paint are required for the job, which will take a few days. The two arrived in Manhattan Sunday and plan on leaving after they finish the job later this week. Tuesday afternoon was beautiful painting weather, according to Tosto. "The hotter the better," he said.

▶ AMOCO TESTS SELF-CLEANING TOILETS

CHICAGO (AP) — Here's an idea sure to make many long-distance travelers flush with excitement: a self-cleaning restroom that promises to take the revulsion out of gas station pit stops.

Prototypes are being tested at Amoco stations in the Chicago suburb of Bolingbrook and in Indianapolis. A third is scheduled to open in a Warrenville gas station in a few months, says Self Cleaning Environments of Santa Monica, Calif., which makes the $23,000 product.

Employees and customers have, literally, breathed a sigh of relief when they stepped into the 3-by-7-foot facilities.

"Nasty, disgusting, grungy," Susan Babis, an 18-year-old employee at the Bolingbrook station, said of the toilet before the self-cleaning prototype was installed.

Josie Pippins, a 39-year-old customer from Columbus, Miss., said she liked the automatic flushing because "you know it's going to be clean."

Chicago-based Amoco will evaluate tests of the self-cleaning toilets, which customers can use free of charge.

New players vying for positions

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

As K-State's performance steadily improves on the field, so too does its performance in the recruiting game.

Several freshmen, community college and university transfer players could make instant and lasting impressions on the Big Eight Conference this season.

The biggest of those impressions could be made by 6-foot-4-inch, 265-pound offensive tackle Bryan Campbell.

Campbell has one year of eligibility remaining after playing two seasons at Colorado and one at Cal-State Fullerton.

While at Colorado University he played in the Orange Bowl twice, including the 1990 season when CU captured a share of the national championship.

"Playing in a bowl game isn't much different from playing in a regular game, but playing in front of 100,000 people makes all the hard work that goes into a season seem worthwhile," Campbell said.

Campbell is currently competing with Barrett Brooks for playing time at the tackle position.

"My main goal is to become a starter on the team and contribute as much as possible," Campbell said. "This (offensive) line is good and has the potential to take this team to a bowl game."

Among the top freshmen joining the Wildcats this season is DeShawn Fogle.

Fogle played for Chapman High School, where he compiled 1,729 yards on 274 carries at running back. However, he will be performing on the defensive side of the ball at linebacker for the Cats.

"The biggest adjustment I have had to make has been the difference in the level of play in high school and college," Fogle said. "The players in college are bigger, stronger and faster than in high school."

Although it is not likely Fogle will see any significant playing time at linebacker this season, he may have an opportunity to break through on special teams.

Like Fogle, community-college transfer Scott Huen said he is finding the transition to Division I football difficult.

"(Jim) Hmielewski helps me on my assignments and shows me some of the tricks that he uses to get an advantage on quicker players," Huen said.

Huen came to K-State from Hutchinson Community College, where he earned all-Jayhawk Conference honors during his sophomore season as well as being voted co-offensive player of the year for the Blue Dragons.

"I realize that I won't play very much. I just want to be prepared to do my job in case I am needed," Huen said.

Freshman Chad Romano is currently in the middle of a three-way battle to replace graduate all-American Sean Snyder at punter.

Romano was highly recruited out of Newman High School in West Palm Beach, Fla. He averaged 40.9 yards per punt and made six field goals with a long of 41 yards.

As a junior he averaged 40.3 yards per punt and was four for five on field goals.

As much as we have all seen or heard over the past few months about flooding across the Midwest and, more specifically, the state, it's rather ironic that the man who was hired before "The Flood of '93" to head K-State's athletic department finds himself in a flood of controversy.

K-State's new athletic director, Max Urick, sent a letter Aug. 2 to K-State supporters asking them to lend a hand to flood victims, but not by sandbagging or by donating to the Red Cross.

"Perhaps the most intriguing part of the last month was the sight of communities pulling together for the common good to fight off rising waters," Urick wrote. "These courageous people deserve special attention, so Kansas State University is offering a unique way to say thank you and help relieve the stress of the past month.

"The majority of our support comes from Kansas residents, so we would like to provide some assistance back to those harmed by the flood by offering you the opportunity to purchase a season ticket or a family season ticket for victims of the flood."

Troy COVERDALE

That plan has opened the floodgates of controversy (pardon the pun) and has brought the K-State athletic department under fire.

Bruce Buchanan, publisher of the Olathe Daily News and a K-State graduate, wrote, "Most of us thought the victims of recent flooding in Kansas had suffered enough, but the director of athletics at Kansas State University has found a way to make them suffer even more."

Even the Manhattan Mercury got in the act, saying it would have been better for the K-State athletic department to give away tickets or to find a corporation willing to buy tickets for flood victims.

I'll give credit where credit is due — at least Urick had intentions of helping flood victims.

I haven't seen anything from the Mercury's parent company, Seaton Publishing, saying they're willing to pay for tickets for flood victims to attend K-State games. Or what about giving free newspaper subscriptions to flood victims?

Of course not — they'd lose money on that deal.

Just like K-State athletics would by donating a certain amount of tickets to flood victims. Not exactly an option when the athletic department's coffers remain in the red.

And what have you heard from Urick since the flood of criticism began? Nothing. He's standing behind his plan and doesn't see any reason to comment to those who saw an easy target to take aim at.

Urick came up with an idea, is working on it wholeheartedly and has good intentions behind it.

That's better than watching a plan take shape and then commenting on how you would make it better without following through.

Copper Bowl coming to Big Eight

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

The Big Eight Conference reached an agreement July 26 with the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl, guaranteeing the fourth-place team a bowl bid for the 1993 season and giving K-State another shot at playing football over the holidays.

While the conference champion is participating in the Orange Bowl, the second-place team will be going through the bowl coalition process.

Along with the previous acquisition of the Jeep Eagle/Aloha Bowl for the third-place team, the Big Eight will be represented in four bowls in 1993.

The bowl coalition is a group of bowl committees that help determine the national champion. The second-place team would be placed in the second tier of the bowl coalition.

The fourth-place Big Eight team will face the third-place team from the Western Athletic Conference under the current agreement with the Copper Bowl, played in Tucson, Ariz. Each team will receive a payout of $700,000.

Larry Brown, executive director of the Copper Bowl, said the Big Eight has always been represented very well in the bowl games. Since the bowl had not been host to a Big Eight team in previous years, there was incentive to be drawn to the Big Eight, he said.

"The Big Eight is a strong conference and always has been," Brown said. "It has a tighter cluster of teams than that of many other conferences. Plus, we have good weather, and the teams that play here have a good time."

However, Brown said the committee selects the fourth-best team and not necessarily the fourth-place team.

"In other words, if the fifth-place team had a better record than the fourth-place team, we'd choose them instead, based on their record," Brown said.

And just what will the Copper Bowl do for the Big Eight?

Tim Allen, assistant commissioner of the Big Eight, said the obvious answer is prestige. But he said there will definitely be an increase in recruiting and finances due to the extra game.

"The future is impossible to predict in college football, but the Big Eight is on the upswing," he said. "The competition in this conference will be extremely fierce, and you'll see a lot of closer scores."

CONFERENCE DESTINIES

The Big Eight Conference has agreed to participate in these four bowl contests after the 1993 regular football season.

▶MANHATTAN RECREATION LOOKING FOR VOLUNTEERS

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is looking for volunteers to coach its fall sports programs. Volunteers are needed to coach flag football, volleyball and soccer teams.

"We roughly have 22 football teams, 20 volleyball teams and 40 soccer teams," recreation supervisor Mike Buchanan said. "We need at least one head coach per team.

"We need people that like kids, know a little bit about the sport and are willing to commit. There isn't really an age limit, but college-age students are ideal. We just require the volunteers to be mature," Buchanan said.

All of the teams in the fall sports program are divided by grade levels. The football division consists of grades four through seven, the volleyball division runs from grades five through eight, and the soccer division involves grades two through eight.

Most games are played on Sunday afternoons, but there will be some games on Saturday mornings and on weekday evenings. The football and soccer games will be played at Frank Anneberg Sports Complex, and the volleyball games are played at City Auditorium.

"Volunteers are needed as soon as possible because we kick the season off in the first week in September," Buchanan said.

"There is also coaching training available to those who are interested," he said. "People just don't realize that this is going on."

Those interested in volunteering can contact either Buchanan or Sue Hageman at 587-2757. The parks and recreation department is located at 1101 Fremont St.

▶MCRAE AND MONTGOMERY GET IN SHOUTING MATCH

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — After pitcher Jeff Montgomery gave up the winning run Monday in the 10th inning of a 3-2 loss to Minnesota, manager Hal McRae and he got into a loud shouting match heard by writers waiting outside the closed clubhouse.

If McRae were to pick a target, Montgomery seemed an odd one. The right-hander, who leads the league in saves with 38, has clearly been one of the team's most important players.

Jose Lind failed to get down a bunt with runners on first and second and nobody out in the seventh, and Gary Gaetti struck out to end the game with the tying run at second.

Montgomery, who has become the premier stopper in the American League, has always maintained an even keel whether the outcome was success or failure. It has been mostly success — Montgomery has blown only four save opportunities and has saves in 27 of his last 28 chances.

It was suggested that McRae was angry because Montgomery had asked before the 10th if it was time to warm up. "You work for me, I don't work for you," McRae could be heard shouting during the argument.

After a series of exchanges, McRae apparently threw something, and the sound of glass breaking was heard.

Drop/Add allows changing classes

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Despite closed class lists, Drop/Add gives students the chance to quit or join classes after the semester begins.

Drop/Add forms can be obtained at the Enrollment Center in Willard Hall 210. Students must first obtain an instructor's permission to enter closed classes, and students wanting to enroll in open classes only need instructor permission after the first week of classes.

After Aug. 27, dropping or adding a class does not require an appointment.

Most students drop or add classes because of the time or day the class meet. Some class changes are based on students changing majors or successfully completing courses they had enrolled in again if they had failed, Don Foster, university registrar, said.

"By the time the semester is over, about one-half of the students have participated in the process," he said.

After speaking with her new advisor about the classes she should take, Dutt said she still had a two-day wait for her appointment to enroll.

"I don't know if I should go sit in on classes or not, since I don't even know if I'll get in," Dutt said.

Dutt said she is still happy with her decision to change majors despite the wait to add classes.

"I just would have gone about switching differently instead of waiting for the beginning of school," she said.

Adult Student Services works to inform non-tradional students

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

For Adults Only — if you have seen these posters around campus and wonder what they mean, you need not look any further.

Adult Student Services offers many programs such as child-care information, financial-aid information, scholarship information and networking for non-traditional K-State students.

"It is easier to make it a one-stop shop for people to start the process of entering and enrolling at the University," said Nancy Bolsen, director of Adult Student Services.

Bolsen said she believes there are a lot of non-traditional students attending the University who could benefit from the help of the center's services.

"If we can't help the students here, we will refer them to the proper place," she said.

The center provides a list of licensed centers, licensed and registered day-care homes, and information on public schools for students' child-care needs.

"We try to choose a center that matches the needs of the parent," Bolsen said.

The center offers various financial-aid information.

Scholarships for graduate and undergraduate students must be applied for after Nov. 22 of the previous year.

Other financial-aid options are also available.

A student needs to have six hours to qualify for a part-time Pell Grant.

Adult Student Services also helps students find jobs and volunteer opportunities and identify other adults in situations similar to theirs.

Emergency student locator is another service offered.

This assists the office in finding the student on campus if a emergency comes up. Usually students with young children, older relatives or pregnant spouses use this service.

Adult Student Services is set up to assist non-traditional students with any questions or concerns they might have.

"We listen a lot — not really counsel or advise — but listen to the students," Blaine said.

Most financial aid based on students' need

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

With the rising cost of education, financial aid is something students cannot afford to overlook.

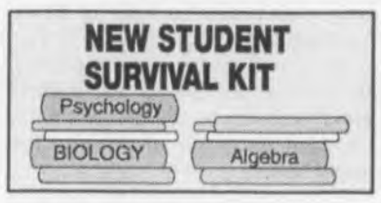
"This is the first year every student can qualify for assistance, regardless of need," Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance, said. "This is in direct response to concern from middle-income families."

Most financial aid is based on need as determined by a federal government formula.

The formula looks at family income and assets and now excludes the home and farm if occupied.

This formula assumes the average cost for a Kansas resident to attend K-State is $8,106. This includes room, board, books, tuition, fees and personal funds.

Moeder said this new formula now makes it easier to qualify for financial assistance because homes and farms were previously considered assets and suffered from inflated real-estate values that reduced the apparent need of students.



There are three basic forms of aid: loans, grants and work study. Students who do not show a need are eligible for low-interest loans.

Loans consist of two types, the Federal Stafford Loan and the Federal Perkins Loan.

The Federal Stafford Loan program provides subsidized and unsubsidized loans.

Subsidized loans are based on need. The federal government pays the interest on these loans until six months after graduation, when the student begins repayment.

Any student can take out unsubsidized loans, and interest is paid quarterly by the student while they are in school.

The Federal Perkins Loan program provides a limited amount of funds for universities to distribute to students, based on need as determined by the free application for Federal Student Aid. Interest payments begin nine months after graduation.

"Any student who finds themselves in an unusual financial circumstance can qualify for an emergency loan," Moeder said. "These are available for the first eight weeks of classes and are repayable in 30, 60 or 90 days."

Grants are awarded to students with the greatest financial need. The two types are Pell Grants and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, neither of which needs to be paid back.

Pell Grants are funded by the government and are awarded only to students who have not received a bachelor's degree.

"I've had no real problems and have learned the sooner I get the packet in, the better my chances are of getting the aid on time," he said.

SEOG funds are limited to those with exceptional financial need.

Retired postal worker wins big

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

A Manhattan man is the fifth person to win the Cash Lotto jackpot this August.

Keith Murphy, a retired postal worker, won $50,000.

Tuesday Murphy received an oversized souvenir check from Kansas Lottery officials, and publicity photographs were taken for the newsletter the lottery publishes.

His luck began when his numbers were drawn in the Wednesday, August 18 drawing he said.

"It's still hard to believe," Murphy said. "I was very surprised and happy. You always read about people winning and now my friends said they are happy to know someone that has won."

Murphy plays the lottery every week, and said he is going to continue to play.

"I'm going for number two now," Murphy said.

Murphy said he purchased his ticket at Shop Quik, 2028 Tuttle Creek, in Manhattan.

Lottery officials said Shop Quik supervisor, Mick Wunder, will receive an incentive check for $250 for selling the winning ticket to Murphy.

Jane Elliott, public information officer for the Kansas Lottery, said lottery officials will present Murphy and Wunder with their checks in about 10 days.

Murphy said he plans on spending his winnings by going on a trip, giving each of his children a gift, and then investing the remainder.

Arts funding eliminated because of 'gay agenda'

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARIETTA, Ga. — The county commission that condemned homosexuality voted unanimously Tuesday to eliminate arts funding, with one commissioner saying the arts were helping a gay agenda creep into the county.

The 5-0 vote deletes $110,000 that had been earmarked for county arts programs. It came after a raucous public hearing attended by more than 200 people, and at which dozens spoke out.

"The public would think we're are a bunch of hicks with no culture, a bunch of uneducated rednecks, if arts funding is eliminated," Diane Conley said.

But Jack Gibbs drew a standing ovation when he condemned the precipitous decline of today's arts.

"It's as if everyone in the arts community has taken a loyalty oath: Thou shalt not call trash trash and sleaze sleaze," Gibbs said.

The issue was discussed after some residents complained about a production at the Theatre in the Square of the acclaimed off-Broadway play "Lips Together, Teeth Apart," which discusses AIDS.

Theater patrons voted it the season's best play.

Commissioner Gordon Wysong said he supported the funding cut because he believes a gay agenda is creeping into Cobb County, and the play was partly responsible. He acknowledged that he never saw the play.

Two weeks ago, the commission voted to declare homosexuality incompatible with community standards.

But Commissioner Bill Cooper said the anti-gay resolution had nothing to do with cutting funding for the arts.

"The gay issue and the issue of arts funding are separate and distinct," he said. "To tie the two together is to do a disservice to both."

More than 200 people filled the meeting room for the pre-vote hearing, while dozens more watched on TV monitors outside.

Library design-process almost complete

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Sixty percent of the design process has been completed for a $2.7 million expansion to the Manhattan Public Library.

Brent Bowman of Brent Bowman and Associates Architects is overseeing the project. Bowman is also working on the Farrell Library expansion project.

"We feel that we will benefit directly from Brent Bowman's experience with the Farrell expansion," Fred Atchison, Manhattan Public Library director, said.

The public library is included in the 1996 Capitol Improvement Plan, but Atchison said only $150,000 has been committed.

Seventy-five thousand dollars has been used to purchase 618 Houston, the lot located south and east of the library.

Curt Wood, director of finance for the City of Manhattan, said the first part of phase one is to remove the house located on to lot to make way for a parking lot.

The second part of phase one is to have a design costing no more than $80,000.

In 1969 construction of the Manhattan Public Library, built to satisfy the needs of the community for the next twenty years, was completed.

Expansion plans have been delayed for five years.

Manhattan Public Library issues approximately 8,000 new cards every year, Atchison said. A large portion of the new cards go to K-State students, he said.

Atchison said he hopes the expansion will solve needs such as enlarged parking, more employee and library user areas and additional all-purpose space.

Space problems are evident in the children area, Atchison said, where childrens' books now occupy the space once used to present videos.

An additional floor may also be added. The project will extend the present structure to the east to fulfill the future needs of the community.

The design plans for the library expansion include a green area to compliment the lawn of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The area will serve as a visual indictor to west-bound motorists that they are entering the business district, Bowman said.

"If we're going to keep doing the job — we need the additional resources available," Atchison said.

MILITARY

Alcohol abuse a serious military problem

Many attempts to reduce heavy drinking have failed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO (AP) — Years of efforts to reduce heavy drinking in the military have largely failed, and alcohol abuse remains a serious problem, says a study of American service personnel.

The prevalence of heavy drinking is down to about 15 percent from 22 percent in 1980.

But virtually all of the drop is due to an influx of older, better-educated recruits who are more likely to be married, said Robert Bray, who directed the research project for the Pentagon.

Such people are less prone to heavy drinking, he said. Once their impact is removed, heavy drinking rates stayed almost the same since 1980, he said.

Heavy drinking was defined as having five or more drinks on a single occasion at least once a week during the prior 30 days.

Bray, of the Research Triangle Institute in Research Triangle Park, N.C., presented the work Monday at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association with colleagues from the institute and Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass.

The data shows the military has been unsuccessful in fighting heavy drinking, said Cmdr.

Ralph Bally, senior policy analyst for alcoholism and mental health isssues in the office of the assistant secretary of defense for health affairs.

"Where we're at right now is getting military leadership aware of this continuing problem, so we can then devise more specific intervenion programs," he said in an interview.

The new study included 16,395 active duty personnel serving around the world who filled out anonymous questionnaires in April and May of 1992. Participants were chosen to give a representative sample of personnel in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force.

Results were compared with the outcome of similar studies done in 1980, 1982, 1985 and 1988.

The new study found 7.6 percent of personnel had experienced serious consequences of heavy drinking within the prior year.

These included being court-martialed, kept off duty at least a week because of illness, hurt in an accident or arrested for driving while intoxicated.

The number was down from 17.3 percent in 1980, said James Luckey of the institute.

In addition, 16.4 percent of personnel said their job performance had suffered because of alcohol, down from 26.7 percent in 1980.

The military rate of heavy drinking could not be compared directly with civilian rates because of differences in demographic makeup between the two populations.

But when statistical analysis was done to take that into account, heavy drinking by personnel stationed in the United States was shown to be substantially higher than the corresponding figure for civilians, said Mary Ellen Marsden of Brandeis.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You will have a close encounter with a tall, dark stranger. Have a good time, but do the driving yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22) — Mars hangs in your constellation today. You feel aggressive. Go to drop/add and change your whole schedule.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Your worst nightmare comes true tonight. Put on your feety pajamas, grab the remote control and watch TV in a fetal position.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Laughter surrounds you today. No, you're not just paranoid — they really are laughing at you.

CAPRICORN (DEC.22- Jan. 19) — Call a friend you haven't talked to in months. He or she is thinking about you.

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19) — Be a free spirit. Don't expect everything to go according to plan today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Classes are bogging you down. Take a breather, go shopping and max out your credit cards.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Balance your checkbook. The bank will be calling.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your free-time hours are dwindling. Don't forget the people who are important to you.

Benefit concert washes away despair

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Local residents can help flood victims by listening to the blues.

The Vital Vinyl Music Series is hosting a benefit show on Aug. 27 to help recent flood victims.

Nicknamed the Flood Aid Concert, the show will feature Blind Pig recording artist Joanna Connor, along with a final performance from the Manhattan based Barnburners.

All musicians appearing at the show said they wanted to help out as much as possible and are donating their time and effort.

"We just asked her to do it," he said. "She is a great lady.

"Everybody's donating stuff to the concert."

VITAL AID

Advance tickets for the Wareham Opera House show are $5. All proceeds will go to the local organization Neighbors in Need.

"All of the money will stay in the area," Ulrich said.

"We're worried that people are flood-aided-out right now, but these people still need the money."

Don Washington, saxophone player for the Barnburners, said although his band is parting ways, this is a great way to end.

"It's a nice way to say farewell with a benefit concert — to go out trying to help somebody," Washington said.

"It's a nice way to say thank you."

Long distance love losing its luster

Welcome to Cassandra, the Collegin's own advice column about love, lifestyles and relationships.

Dear Cassandra,

I had my first experience with a woman this summer. She was warm, caring, sincere and had a beautiful smile to match her beautiful heart.

She was a bit older than me — more experienced, of course — but the age difference didn't bother me at all.

We just had so much fun together, and she made me really happy.

I probably won't see her again anytime soon — not because I don't want to, but because she's so far away now. A thousand miles separate us.

We've talked of meeting again sometime. But we haven't set up anything definite yet. I already miss her.

It makes me sad, and I'm not sure how to deal with this distance from someone who already means so much to me.

How do I stay sane with school and work and all that stuff while she's so far away?

What would you do?

Sincerely,
The Girl in the Blue Hat

Dear Blue,

It sounds like you had a really wonderful and fulfilling experience this summer with this woman.

I understand your sadness and your sense of loss. It's very difficult to be separated from a person who means so much to you.

But instead of concentrating on the separation, I suggest you think of some more positive thoughts.

Think of how much fun you had together. Think of the good stuff, basically. Write letters, call when you need to — definitely keep in touch.

It's always beautiful when two people meet and can care for each other.

Concentrate on that, and the time you are apart will go by more quickly.

Keep me posted, girl, and keep your chin up.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Woman held on $1 million bail for shooting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Bail was set at $1 million for a woman accused of shooting a doctor outside a clinic where abortions are performed.

Rachelle Renae "Shelley" Shannon is accused of wounding Dr. George Tiller in both arms Thursday outside his Women's Health Care Services clinic. Tiller was treated at a hospital and returned to work the next day.

Sedgwick County District Judge Paul Clark set bail Monday and scheduled another hearing for Sept. 7 for Shannon, 37, of Grants Pass, Ore.

Later, the judge said the weekend shooting death of an abortion doctor in Alabama could make the Wichita case more volatile.

"This is a possible indication some of these groups are using terror as a political tool," the judge told KFDI radio. He refused to talk to other reporters.

Police in Mobile, Ala., have not determined whether Saturday's slaying of Dr. George Wayne Patterson was related to his work performing abortions or another motive.

The judge caught reporters off guard by moving Monday's hearing to another courtroom and holding about an hour earlier than scheduled.

Clark told KFDI he was concerned about pretrial publicity and wanted to avoid large crowds of demonstrators during the hearing.

No police were present, and there was no violence.

No arrests made in doctor's murder

Abortion clinic closes, killing motive unknown

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOBILE, Ala. — The slaying of a second abortion doctor who worked at area clinics means at least one center will have to close, its administrator said.

Police said they don't know if the Saturday evening killing of Dr. George Wayne Patterson was related to his work performing abortions, the result of a robbery attempt or the result of a personal argument.

No arrests had been made.

The 44-year-old doctor was shot in the neck after an argument with a man in a parking lot in Mobile's nightclub district, police and witnesses said.

Patterson was the only doctor at the Family Planning clinic in Fort Walton Beach, Fla., about 90 miles east of Mobile. His slaying means the clinic will be forced to close, said administrator Sandra Sheldon.

"I don't see any hope of reopening," Sheldon said.

"Without the doctor there is no business."

Dr. David Gunn, who sometimes filled in for Patterson, was killed last March, she said.

Gunn was shot to death during an pro-life demonstration outside Women's Medical Services in Pensacola, Fla. Pro-life activist Michael F. Griffin faces trial Sept. 20 for the killing.

"We're just devastated," said Jeanne Singletary, a medical assistant at the clinic. She said another doctor would keep the clinic open.

The Fort Walton Beach clinic was referring patients to Pensacola, about 35 miles west.

One of Patterson's clinics in Mobile, Bay City Women's Clinic, was damaged by arson in 1991. That case remains unsolved, said federal agents who investigated the fire.

Tom Mason, a witness to Patterson's slaying, said the doctor and the gunman shouted at one another near the doctor's car before the shooting.

After Patterson collapsed, Mason said, the gunman opened the car and removed a small item, then calmly walked to his car and drove away. No weapon was recovered.

Also Monday, a Roman Catholic priest who tried this month to run a newspaper ad in Mobile calling the shooting of abortion doctors justifiable homicide was removed from the pulpit.

Archbishop Oscar Lipscomb said he had sent the Rev. David Trosch away for a period of prayerful reflection and relieved him of pastoral duties at St. John the Baptist Catholic Church in Magnolia Springs, where he had been pastor since 1990.

A pro-life activist Rachelle Renae Shannon, of Grants Pass, Ore., was ordered held on $1 million bail on an attempted murder charge in Thursday's shooting of a doctor who performs abortions in Wichita.

Clinton, family cruise with Kennedy clan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAY HEAD, Mass. — It was a scene fit for Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous.

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis — in her trademark sunglasses and scarf — took the Clinton family cruising Tuesday aboard a 70-foot power boat off the cliffs at Gay Head.

Shadowed by a flotilla of journalists and Secret Service agents, Onassis and members of the Kennedy clan entertained the Clintons aboard Relemar, the $1.4-million yacht of her longtime companion, diamond dealer Maurice Tempelsman.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, clad in shorts, vest and straw hat, got a peck on the cheek from Tempelsman.

Onassis, wearing slacks and a red and white striped shirt, visited briefly with the Clintons below deck before the party went up on deck for pre-departure drinks. Upon her return, she had donned a blue sweater and a broad-billed nautical cap.

Try as the Clintons might to keep their vacation a low-key and private affair, a yachting trip with Onassis was guaranteed to create a commotion, even on an island supposedly blase about all the power players and celebrities who make Martha's Vineyard their summer playground.

Tempelsman, who was at the helm, struggled with the wind as he tried to maneuver the 70-foot yacht to the pier as the party returned to Mememsha.

Clinton and the others applauded as Tempelsman brought the boat to its resting spot.

Dozens of spectators were perched on fishing boats, pleasure boats and jetties to witness the return of the yacht, and they gave Clinton an ovation as he waved to them from the upper deck.

The yacht was never out of sight of land, and the Clintons, Onassis and the others enjoyed a quiet lunch at a secluded anchorage.

Upon his return, Clinton was asked whether he enjoyed the outing. "Wonderful. It was beautiful out there," he said.

Afterwards, Onassis accompanied the Clintons in the president's motorcade to her secluded estate for late-afternoon drinks.

Later, the Clintons and most of those in the boating party went to dinner at the Outermost Inn, a restaurant overlooking the Gay Head cliffs.

Days of anticipation preceded the cruise.

Hundreds of gawkers gathered to watch the party depart Menemsha. Coast Guard cutters laden with Secret Service agents shadowed the yacht, as did a boat of reporters and photographers arranged by the White House press office.

At one point during the cruise, Clinton strode across the upper deck of the two-level yacht to offer a cheery wave to Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers aboard the press boat.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Mars Observer lost in space

No word from satellite, NASA still hopeful

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. — On a day that was supposed to mark NASA's triumphant return to Martian skies, gloomy scientists worried about the fate of the silent Mars Observer spacecraft and its $980-million mission.

"We're obviously disappointed, but we still haven't given up hope completely," said Bill Boynton, a University of Arizona planetary scientist in charge of one of the unruly spacecraft's instruments.

For the fourth day Tuesday, there was no word from the spacecraft.

Engineers radioed commands toward the heavens telling Mars Observer to prepare its propulsion system for entry into Martian orbit Tuesday afternoon in case it failed to do so automatically, said NASA spokesman Jim Doyle.

Mars Observer was to be the first U.S. robot explorer to reach Mars since 1976.

But since its radio transmissions stopped on Saturday, no one knew for sure if the craft would fire its thrusters and start orbiting the Red Planet as scheduled Tuesday afternoon or simply go whizzing past on an expensive trip to oblivion.

They sent new computer commands telling it to switch to a backup clock and make sure its antennas were hooked up and pointed the right way, among other things.

Nobody really could be certain that the spacecraft even existed.

The loss of contact started as the fuel tanks were being pressurized, and there was a possibility they might have blown up.

"We go on the presumption these kinds of problems are caused by simple little things, probably not a whole conglomeration of exotic problems, but one simple little problem," Cunningham said.

If the spacecraft is lost, it would be a great blow to the planetary science community, he said.

Also Monday, controllers at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration were trying to re-establish contact with the nation's newest weather satellite.

The satellite was launched Aug. 9 and had worked fine until communication was lost Saturday, officials said.

Two older weather satellites remain in operation.

Mars Observer was launched Sept. 25 to start its 11-month, 450-million-mile voyage.

It was designed to give scientists their best look yet at the terrain, seasonal change and weather on a planet that has long inspired human imagination.

Recent floods set stage for scams

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Many people received damage to their homes and property in the Flood of '93. The loss makes victims more vulnerable to a second wave of disaster — scams.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency warned in an August press release that flood victims should be wary of scam artists, specifically people offering to file insurance or flood-relief claims for a fee.

"There are people in this city standing in line to help flood victims who will not charge a thing," Bill Kennedy, county attorney, said.

Kennedy said he has not received any complaints about such scams in the area.

Disaster victims also can be vulnerable to construction scams, Kennedy said.

"Good workers and reputable companies will not mind giving references," Kennedy said.

Flood victims can also use the Better Business Bureau in Topeka to check on a business or contractor. The BBB has information on local, state and national companies.

K-State police chief Charles Beckom said to beware of pressure tactics.

"There is nothing that needs to be done today," he said.

Beckom said to also watch out for mailings and 900 numbers.

Mailings are a cheap way for illegitimate companies to send information, Beckom said.

"Haven't we all got something in the mail saying we've won a million dollars?," he said.

People can get swindled by 900 numbers because they forget they are charged fees for every minute they are on the phone, Beckom said.

These calls can go on for several minutes and the bill can add up, he said.

"If a business really wants to provide a service to customers, they'll have an 800 number," Beckom said.

If an individual has been fooled by a scam or suspects a scam, the person should contact the Riley County Police Department or the state attorney general's office.

HOW TO AVOID FLOOD SCAMS

Three guidelines can help safeguard flood victims from scam artists:

- Do not let a contractor force you into turning over an insurance payment.
- Get several references from companies and check at least two.
- Remember that if the deal seems too good to be true, it probably is.

Elwood uses church in place of classrooms

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELWOOD — The school year has begun smoothly for the 195 students in Elwood, even though they are studying in a church instead of a school.

The Elwood School Board met Tuesday at the Wyatt Park Baptist Church in St. Joseph, Mo., where classes are meeting until the flooded school building can be restored.

The high school enrollment was 111 freshmen, 20 sophomores, 15 juniors and 11 seniors. Elementary school enrollment is still down.

End violence, pro-choicers say

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Pro-choice groups asked city officials Tuesday to condemn any violence at abortion clinics and to guarantee free access to the clinics.

Representatives from the National Organization for Women and the National Abortion Rights Action League also asked a pro-life group to cancel plans to picket local clinics this weekend.

About 30 pro-choice supporters had a news conference on the steps of City Hall to ask the mayor and City Council to publicly oppose any violence at abortion clinics. They also are asking for a city proclamation guaranteeing patients free access to the clinics.

"We think the city should take stronger action to protect women's rights to reproductive health care," said Jane Reilly, a spokeswoman for Catholics for Free Choice.

Women, men offered self-defense training

DARBY WALLACE
Collegian

The Women's Resource Center and UFM are offering safety and assertiveness classes this fall for women — and men.

The WRC's first class will be at 5 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 7, in the lobby of Holton 206.

UFM's "Sharp," a self-defense class, is from 8 a.m. to noon Oct. 2 at the UFM building. The cost of the one-time class is $15.

"Our classes have a lot to do with 'head-work,'" Judy Davis, director of the WRC, said. "We do all that we can to encourage women to realize the risks that are out there.

"Our goal is to teach the world to rethink the worth placed on women. They need to realize that they don't have to put up with the abuse, whether it be physical or mental."

Both classes teach self-defense moves, which enable a woman to assertively talk or physically escape an undesirable situation.

Men can benefit from the classes by learning what types of situations women find threatening and just how they can deal or respond positively to those situations.

The classes explore issues such as the expectations in dating or social situations, awareness of gender differences and proper and improper attitudes toward women in the work place.

SELF-DEFENSE CLASSES

- At 5 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 7, in the lobby of Holton 206.
- From 8 a.m. to noon Oct. 2 at the UFM building. Cost is $15.

One in four women has either been raped or suffered attempted rape, according to information released by The Peers Rape Education Program

Of the 84 percent of men who had committed acts that met the legal definition of rape, many of those men said what they had done was definitely not rape.

Davis said almost all of the women who come to the classes are survivors of some type of sexual assault, but there is a fine line between therapy and the classes offered.

"One hour won't change a person's life," Davis said.

"Practice and training for a lifetime is what we can offer."

She also suggested victims of sexual assault seek therapy if needed. Though the class has a story-sharing time, the class should be a preventive measure more than anything, she said.

Putnam Hall is offering a rape prevention seminar for all K-State students at 7:30 p.m.

"I feel this is an important topic to present at the beginning of the year for all students, especially freshmen," Matthew Hinton, organizer of the seminar and sophomore in architecture, said.

"Freshmen are in a new surrounding, so they are more susceptible to the dangers of sexual assault," he said.

"We never turn down an invitation to talk about rape prevention," she said. "It is critically important that 'good men' in the community use their considerable influence on other men to put a stop to the idea that forced sex is OK."

Bush: Threaten when ready to act

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ZURICH, Switzerland — Former President Bush said he couldn't bring himself to commit American soldiers to Bosnia. He said his generals told him it would take at least 250,000 just to keep opposing sides apart.

Bush said in a speech Tuesday to Swiss businessmen he didn't want to criticize President Clinton for his handling of former Yugoslavia and he didn't think he would act differently if he were still in the White House.

But, in an apparent reference to proposed NATO air strikes against Serbs, Bush said, for force to be credible, it's got to be threatened only when someone is prepared to use it.

"I think the United States or any other country makes a mistake when it says, 'We're going to do this,' and then comes back and says, 'Well, we can't do that for one reason or another.'"

"The use of force is a tough call," Bush said. "When I was still president, I asked our military, the same ones that in my view did it right in Desert Storm, 'What's it going to take, in a way of American commitment of troops or air power, to get the job done?'"

"They told me it will take 250,000 American troops just to maintain the status quo, to open the lines, but this will not guarantee that you bring peace, and it will not say when you can get them out of there."

Bush added: "When you commit someone else's son or daughter to battle, in my view no matter how tough the call is, I want to know three things: what the mission is, I want my military leaders to say this is how we're going to accomplish it, then I want to say when and how we are going to get out."

Family found shot to death; son is suspect

NAPOLEON, Ind. (AP) — Five members of a family were found shot to death on a farm, and authorities Wednesday searched for another relative considered the prime suspect.

The bodies were found Tuesday and Wednesday in and around the rural farmhouse of Martha Hardebeck, 73, her sons Jimmy and Marlin, her daughter Betty Powers, and Powers' husband, Virgil, police said.

Three of the victims were found about 10:30 p.m. Tuesday by a daughter of the Powerses who was concerned when they didn't return from visiting the Hardebecks, police said.

The other two bodies were found on the farm Wednesday morning.

State police Sgt. Bob Gray identified the missing relative as George Hardebeck, 31, another of Martha Hardebeck's sons. He is considered the prime suspect, Gray said.

Bosnia accuses world of condoning genocide

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Bosnia accused the international community today of allowing its destruction and warned any peace settlement will crumble unless Serbian genocide against Muslims is halted.

Bosnia came to the World Court to pressure the outside world to halt what it says is an attempt by Bosnian Serbs and neighboring Serbia to destroy Bosnia's Muslims and annex their land.

The embattled Bosnian government wants the court to order a halt to any plans to partition Bosnia-Herzegovina, claiming it smacks of the Nazi dismemberment of Czechoslovakia during World War II.

"Today, we are here to inform you that the genocide continues," Mohamed Sacirbey, Bosnia's U.N. ambassador, told the U.N.'s judicial arm. He said Bosnia is now being forced to negotiate with the perpetrators of this crime, while the threat of ongoing genocide is held as a loaded gun to their heads.

A plan proposed by international mediators would give Muslims about 31 percent of Bosnia, Croats about 17 percent and the Serbs some 52 percent. The three ethnic zones would be linked under a weak central government.

But Sacirbey warned any agreement in Geneva would be null and void on the basis that any signature was coerced under the threat of continuing genocide.

Bosnia has asked for a second emergency ruling from the court to protect it from genocide. The court, which has no enforcement powers, first made such a ruling in April.

Judge reverses Titanic salvage rights

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal appeals court Wednesday reversed a judge's ruling that granted a French-American explorer group exclusive salvage rights to the wreck of the Titanic.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said U.S. District Judge J. Calvitt Clarke Jr. erred when he granted the rights to Titanic Ventures, which explored the wreck six years ago.

The luxury liner sank with 1,503 people aboard after striking an iceberg in the North Atlantic on its maiden voyage in April 1912. The wreckage was not discovered until 1985, about 400 miles south of Newfoundland.

In 1987, Titanic Ventures recovered 1,800 artifacts from the wreck. They are being kept in France and once were exhibited in Scandinavia.

Marex Titanic Inc., based in Memphis, Tenn., sent a salvage crew to the wreck in March but had to turn back when Titanic Ventures got an injunction from Clarke.

Marex claimed Titanic Ventures had abandoned the sunken vessel. Titanic Ventures argued it still had salvage rights and planned to return this summer.

Pro-choice groups ask for end to violence

CLEVELAND — Pro-choice groups asked city officials Tuesday to condemn any violence at abortion clinics and to guarantee free access to the clinics.

Representatives from the National Organization for Women and the National Abortion Rights Action League also asked a pro-life group to cancel plans to picket local clinics this weekend.

About 30 pro-choice supporters had a news conference on the steps of City Hall to ask the mayor and City Council to publicly oppose any violence at abortion clinics. They also are asking for a city proclamation guaranteeing patients free access to the clinics.

"We think the city should take stronger action to protect women's rights to reproductive health care," said Jane Reilly, a spokeswoman for Catholics for Free Choice. "We want women to be free of the threat of violence and intimidation by anti-abortion demonstrators who yell and scream and otherwise harass them."

The pro-choice supporters said they sent a letter Tuesday to the Rev. Joseph Slovenec, director of the Northeast Ohio branch of the pro-life group Operation Rescue.

They asked Slovenec and his organization to cancel planned protests at area abortion clinics Saturday to avoid any violence.The letter referred to the shooting death of Dr. David Gunn in Florida in March and the wounding of Dr. George Tiller in Wichita last week.

Japanese kidnapping, murder raises doubts

TOKYO — In a country where violent crimes are rare, the kidnapping and murder of a young bank teller has riveted many Japanese and caused some skepticism about their nation's reputation for safety.

For days, banner headlines and special TV bulletins have told the pitiful story of Yuki Uchida, 19, a bank teller in the central Japan town of Kofu, who was lured on Aug. 10 into meeting with a man posing as a journalist. Her nearly nude body was found a week later on a riverbank.

Yutaka Miyagawa, a 38-year-old car salesman, turned himself in to police on Tuesday and, according to police, said he had kidnapped Uchida and demanded a $430,000 ransom to pay his huge debts.

Police said the suspect told investigators he strangled Uchida, after she panicked and screamed in his car during the kidnapping, but that he went ahead and demanded the ransom from the bank where she worked.

Turkish youth wounds German tourists

ISTANBUL, Turkey — A youth hurled a grenade at a group of German tourists Wednesday, wounding six of them and their Turkish guide, news reports and police said.

The Turkish news agency Anatolia said one of the tourists was hospitalized with a head injury. Details on the other injuries were not immediately available, but hospital sources said they weren't life-threatening.

The tourists had been on an outing to see Istanbul's Byzantine city walls.There have been a rash of kidnappings of foreign tourists in the southeast.

Williams, Watson acused of attempted murder in Denny beating

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The sound of shattering glass was the last thing Reginald Denny remembered before he was attacked at the flashpoint of the Los Angeles riots, the trucker said Wednesday.

"My right window broke, which was quite startling, an incredible sound," Denny said at the trial of two men accused in the beating televised live via news helicopter last year. But Denny said he didn't remember anything after turning to look at the broken window.

Damian Williams, 20, and Henry Watson, 28, are accused of attempted murder and other felonies in the attacks on eight victims, including Denny, at a South Central Los Angeles intersection.

Answering questions by Deputy District Attorney Janet Moore, Denny said he didn't recall being pulled out of his big-rig gravel truck, being kicked and beaten or being hit over the head with a hammer and other objects.

He recalled waking up six days later at Daniel Freeman Memorial Hospital but said he couldn't see or talk. He was concerned about telling his employer where he was, still thinking it was the same day, he said.

Prosecutors replayed a videotape of the April 29, 1992, beating, which followed the state trial acquittals of four white policemen who beat black motorist Rodney King on March 3, 1991.

Denny, 37, said he was unaware of the King beating verdicts when he inched his truck into the intersection of Florence and Normandie avenues.

"It was scary, actually, because it was a lot of things happening ... cars going the wrong way and just a lot of glass," Denny said of the scene. He said he feared striking pedestrians with his loaded 80,000 pound gravel truck.

"It was just total madness," he said.

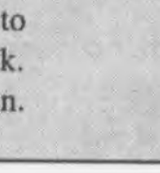
EDITORIAL

Gee, thanks for the notice

The University has a responsibility to its students.

While no rational college student should expect a public school with an enrollment of about 20,000 people to run smoothly 100 percent of the time, it's not too much to ask that a decent list of open classes be made available.

A closed or canceled class list is a key reference tool for enrollment. That's what the University tells incoming freshmen, and they obviously recognize the importance of the lists.



Imagine going to a class you have been enrolled in from last spring and discovering it was closed and you hadn't been informed. That's what happened to some K-Staters this week.

Mistakes do happen. Everyone understands that.

However, it is another thing to reduce students to a Social Security number. This is effectively what the University did when it failed to notify students that certain classes were closed and let students enroll in them under false pretenses.

Treating students and their academic interests with such callous indifference is not acceptable from a university. Students have to have their acts together or they fail. It's time the University assumed the same standards.

Campus progress brings about the end of The Hole

We walked through campus. We stuck our hands through a hole in the side of a cow.

At lunchtime, we ate in The Hole near the library. The Hole was warm. It had benches and creepy ceramic tiles with hieroglyphics and a tree under which there was shade.

The sandwich was good — peanut butter and jelly made by Momma. The Hole was comfortable. Somewhat numbing.

Then suddenly, I was a freshman at college. The Hole was still there. I would walk by and feel nourished, safe.

This week I have come back to school, and The Hole is gone.

Several years ago, there was this nifty flower bed in the middle of the Kedzie-Anderson-Union synapse. It was a dollop of sunshine in an asphalt sea.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

Then one summer They covered the flower bed with bricks. Red bricks. The bricks of industry. What I miss most, though, is the sculpture that once stood near Memorial Stadium. An abstract K S and U. It was white and enigmatic, fixed and fluid by interpretation. A question, like a university.

Three summers ago, the abstract KSU was removed. Replaced with a "Kansas State University" tombstone, resembling the Higin-big-botham Gate.

Someone in Anderson Hall told us They would reconstruct the sculpture somewhere else on campus because it was beloved so.

The truth came out a year later. The abstract KSU fell apart as They removed it from where it stood guard. They used it to fill a hole somewhere.

It was not used to fill The Hole. Someone stole The Hole over the summer.

Hysterectomied.

Filled with dirt. Buried.

The excuse so far has been because They are going to build us a big, pretty library. One They forgot to build many years ago.

They care about art. They care about sculptures. They care about nifty holes.

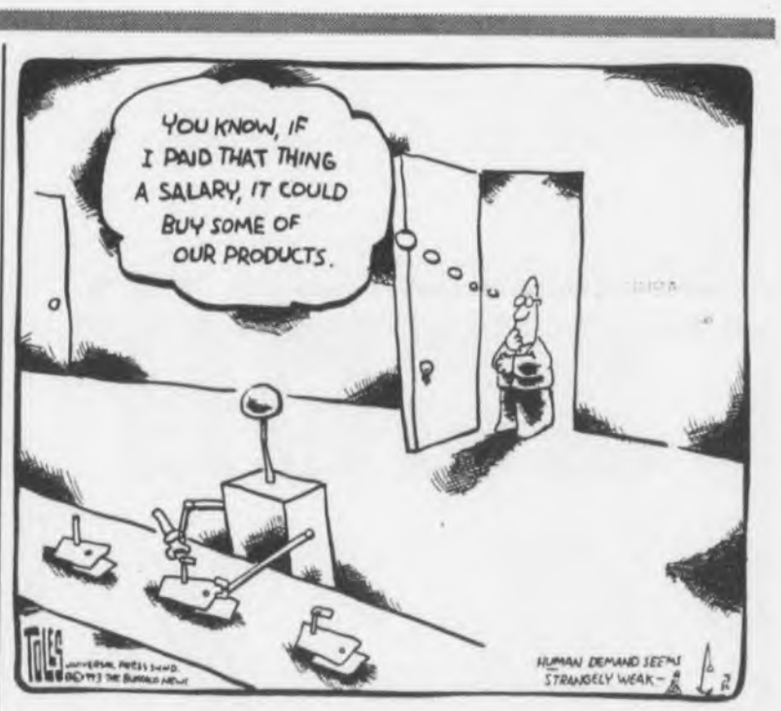
How do I know this?

I know this because They are building us a big, pretty art museum. This will hold the art. The art can go there.

But when They build the big, pretty library They will leave eyesore Denison Hall standing. They will tear down the Art Building.

But you see, don't you? If they tear down the Art Building They will have impetus to build an Art Museum.

"Dear Alumni," They will write. "We have no Art Building because we built a big, pretty library that we forgot to build a long, long time ago on top of the old Art Building. Now we need your money to build a big, pretty art museum.



"The students want this. Well, they need it. We know. We know what the students need. We know what is best for the students, in loco parentis and all that.

"Besides. You don't want all those friends of yours who went to school at the other university making fun of you because you don't have an art museum at your alma mater, now do you?

"Please send money. The debate team says 'hi.' Please send money. How do you like your seats in the new Dev Nelson (Dorothy Bramlage) Press Box? Please send money. The students need an art museum for our art. Please send money."

Professor hot under the collar about classroom

Editor

An open letter to the Administration:

Anderson Hall was struck by lightning last week. Already, the obvious mess has been cleaned up, and the sights and sounds of reconstruction are apparent to anyone who walks by the building.

This semester, all of my classes meet in Seaton 132, an 80-seat lecture room created by removal of the walls between three much smaller rooms. Even though it is a very long and narrow room, with a sloping floor, it is not too bad a room, EXCEPT for its "cooling" system:

-the "rear" air conditioner works;

-the "middle" air conditioner exists, but does NOT work, and it looks as though it hasn't worked for 10 years; and,

-no "front" air conditioner exists, and the windows near the front are open to admit a little fresh air and a lot of traffic noise.

So, for nine hours each week, my students, and presumably students in other classes as well, have to choose where they sit:

-in the back where they can be cool, but where they can neither see nor hear well because of the air conditioner noise and the distance to the front of the room;

-in the middle where they can hope to be cool and maybe see and hear a little; or,

-in the front where they can see, but where they will be hot and where, periodically, the only things they will be able to hear are trucks and lawn mowers passing by!

And I, of course, must stand in the front of the room. Perhaps this is what is meant by "Earning my bread by the sweat of my brow?"

Why is it our University can run for many years without finding a few thousand dollars to make a much-needed and much-used lecture hall functional, but has no trouble reallocating in excess of a million dollars on a few day's notice to repair a small number of administrative offices? Just the interest, alone, on a million dollars would pay for two new air conditioners in a week!

Do we have our priorities right?

Praise The Lord and Get "Nekkid"

Every now and then I run across something in the news that simply COMPELS me to write. The following is one example:

— AP, UPI, Reuters, August 20, 1993, Vinton, La,: A Pentecostal minister from Floydada, Texas, remained jailed in Louisiana Friday on numerous charges after driving a car crammed with 20 naked followers through the city at 90 miles per hour. Police in Vinton, La., said they were surprised when they stopped a speeding Pontiac Grand Am Thursday, and the Rev. Sammy Rodriguez emerged wearing just a towel, only to get back behind the wheel and speed off. But they were downright flabbergasted a few moments later when the car crashed, forcing 20 people - all of them nude - to climb out of the vehicle in a baseball field. None of the passengers was seriously hurt. Rodriguez claimed God told the people to take off their clothes to shed themselves of the devil's influence. The preacher told them he believed the devil was after them, so they left Floydada in a caravan of six cars.

Patrolman Johnnie Vice said, "They got to San Antonio, and God told them San Antonio was a devil town and to take off their clothes."

They abandoned the other cars. He said the carload of people, who were all relatives and ranged in age from 1 year to 65, including three pregnant women and five children, were headed for a church somewhere in Florida.

Vinton Police Chief Dennis Drouillard said, "They were completely nude. All 20 of them. Didn't have a stitch of clothes on. I mean, no socks, no underwear, no nothin'. Five of them were in the trunk."

BRAD SEABOURN

Now, I know many of you are sitting there shaking your head, just as I did when I first read about this, and quietly wondering "WHAT THE HECK ARE THEY SMOKING DOWN IN TEXAS?"

Last Spring, we had David Koresh and the Waco, Texas, Wackos, and now we have a cult from Floydada, Texas, that likes to gather together close relatives and get naked (pronounced "nekkid"), then pack as many as they can into a car and go cruising. ... in the name of Jesus of course.

With thousands of pictures of David Koresh plastered on every magazine, newspaper and TV a few months ago, you would think they could give us just ONE photo of a "nekkid" Pentecostal.

The more I think about this group and their beliefs, the more I realize this may be an excellent religious choice. It reminds me of my undergraduate days, 20 years ago, when I had an opportunity as a fraternity pledge to participate in a "streak" of a nearby sorority house.

And I did.

I ran several laps around the house through a veritable "gauntlet" of screaming women wearing nothing but a red necktie (My wife interjects at this point — ruining a good story I might add — that the necktie was to give the women something to look at. Ha!).

Let me tell you, the "freedom" was exhilarating (which doesn't even begin to describe the emotional state of the young women as they watched). So I can see where tossing off one's clothes, singing a few hymns and drinking a little communion wine among friends could be the ideal prescription for the perfect sexual fantasy. ... I mean religion.

As a matter of fact, I have been so taken with this idea that I want to announce RIGHT NOW the official formation of a new church called THE NEKKID DISCIPLES OF CHRIST. And to kick it all off, I am planning to have a "GET NEKKID FOR JESUS" day at 1 p.m. Saturday in front of the K-State Union. We are going to get BUCK NEKKID, eat, sing and dance, and then — just before we get arrested — pack as many NEKKID bodies as we possibly can into tiny little cars and cruise Aggieville.

It should be an UPLIFTING and HEAVENLY encounter for all. Be sure to bring your Bible.

Of course, like any religion, this one needs lots of MONEY. So, for your shopping convenience, I have arranged to provide a "900" number with NEKKID operators standing by to take your donation.

Please call 1-900-GET-NUDE. Visa and MasterCard are accepted. Have your name, card number, where in Texas you are calling from and the name of the asylum you escaped from ready for our operators to record.

And remember the motto of The Nekkid Disciples of Christ: "Yea, verily, verily, if the Lord thoughteth ye nededeth clothing, thou wouldst have been born swaddled in Levis."

Oh, by the way — I am sure I won't recognize any of you, but you can spot me quite easily. I will be the one wearing nothing but a big smile and a red necktie. HALLELUJAH!

PEOPLE & PROJECTS

■ Lindemuth moves to Alumni publications

Tim Lindemuth became the new director of publications for the K-State Alumni Association in May.

Lindemuth was employed in the News Services office for 16 years before taking his new position. While in News Services, he was a news reporter and the editor of In-View, a bi-weekly publication for faculty and staff. He also wrote scripts for special events.

At the Alumni Association, Lindemuth is responsible for newsletters, brochures and nine periodicals.

"This is an opportunity to learn new things professionally," he said.

The K-Stater, a magazine sent to alumni, and K-Teacher, a newsletter sent to alumni of K-State–Salina, are two of the projects Lindemuth produces.

After earning a bachelor's degree in mathematics from the State University of New York at Potsdam in 1972, Lindemuth went on to earn a master's degree in journalism from K-State in 1977. He has worked for the University ever since.

"K-State has been my second home for 16 years," he said.

Lindemuth is involved with other areas of the University as well. He is a member of Friends of the Library and is the faculty adviser for the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity.

■ Hayter receives ASHRAE service award

The director of K-State's engineering extension programs has received the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers' Distinguished Service Award.

"I was working in the industries it supports," he said. "But I really needed a more technical background. ASHRAE filled that role. It provided information and people I could call on if I needed help."

The annual meeting was in Denver, June 26-30. Hayter was recognized and presented with a certificate by the president of ASHRAE.

The award is given for direct service to the organization.

"It's essentially an engineering technical society," Hayter said. "I've served on a variety of primarily technical committees that publish standards, write handbook chapters and perform research."

Hayter is treasurer for the far-reaching organization.

ASHRAE is established in 120 countries and includes 52,000 members.

At K-State, Hayter has several duties.

He is the director of engineering extension programs, which is within the college of engineering.

"The extension faculty is unique in that they don't teach in the classroom. They work with industry," Hayter said.

The focus is on energy and environmental issues in commercial and industrial areas.

Hayter is also an associate dean of engineering for extension and outreach. He coordinates off-campus activities for the college of engineering.

"I help the people at research centers or department projects communicate and work together," he said.

■ Maes attends Harvard convention

A K-State administrator went to Harvard University this summer to attend an administrative leadership institute.

Sue Maes, associate director of the Division of Continuing Education, attended the Harvard Institute for the Management of Lifelong Education from June 14 to June 25.

The Management of Lifelong Education Institute is designed for academic leaders concerned with life-long education programs.

Diversity, finance, adult learning, marketing, women's issues and leadership in organizations were among the issues studied by 80 participants from all over the world.

Maes attended the institute to get new ideas for leadership education and to share ideas with other administrators.

"I think often, as administrators, we don't take time to sit back and catch up on the current readings in our field and the new ideas in leadership and education," Maes said. "This gave us a chance to sit back, relax and learn, away from the commitments of the day-to-day office," she said.

While at the leadership institute, Maes and other participants discussed case studies that helped them learn how to handle time and resources while making administrative decisions.

Maes implemented ideas gleaned from her experience at Harvard to plan a retreat for the academic outreach staff at K-State.

"I learned how a good institute is run. Being a professional in continuing education, I realize K-State will be doing more in non-credit, summer institutes and learning weekend institutes for professionals," Maes said.

Bob Kruh, K-State's vice provost and dean of continuing education, said, "Sue is an innovator in higher education, adult education and rural education. She is a great asset to our University.

John Daly, associate professor of history, visited Russia during the summer and brought back a banner. It reads: "Proletarians of the world unite."

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

Since John Daly's first trip to Russia in 1975, he has seen amazing progress take place.

"The changes there — five years ago — I didn't think I would see," Daly, associate professor of history, said. "It's a very exciting time."

Daly spent the majority of his five-week stay in Russia this summer at the archives, which was forbidden to noncitizens until the 1991 Soviet reorganization. He also spent six weeks there in 1992.

"I was one of the first foreigners to work in the archives," he said.

Through his recent research, which focused on the history of the Soviet Navy, Daly has discovered facts that refute the stereotypes associated with Russia, which became part of the Commonwealth of Independent States in 1991.

"Russia is not a bumbling technological giant," he said. "The image of them is simply not accurate."

Some of the information Daly had access to indicated Russia had aircraft carriers as early as 1916, about four years before the West, he said.

He also found technically advanced plans, dated as early as 1904, to move 100-ton submarines by rail.

Daly only scratched the surface of the available information. The archives contain over 2 million files, he said.

Russia's secrecy made research like Daly's difficult in the pas and caused self-inflicted wounds, he said.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

"Their history is a lot richer than they acknowledge or the cold war would let us acknowledge," he said.

The Russian federation still has a long way to go, especially when it comes to the older generation's concept of what is happening, he said.

"It saddens you to see these old people, who at the end of their lives, realize their dreams were false," he said.

President Jon Wefald said literacy and capacity for science in Russia is extremely high.

"There is some hope," he said. "The Russian people have the opportunity for political, social and economic freedom."

The Wefalds, who visited the Russian Federation at the same time Daly was doing research, spent time sight-seeing with him.

"John Daly is a foremost historian," Wefald said. "He's going to be able to come up with new interpretations."

Daly feels the University can be instrumental in the changes the Russian Federation faces, he said.

"I think K-State is in a very good position to help Russia's reconstruction," Daly said.

He is currently working towards an academic exchange program involving faculty members.

Moscow State University and the Agricultural Academy of Sciences in Moscow are both interested in features at K-State, including the physics lab, agriculture programs, veterinary medicine and the nuclear reactor.

The Dole-Yeltsin Scholarship Exchange, a student-exchange program, began recently when five K-State students traveled to Russia, and five Russian students arrived here.

If enough student interest exists, Daly is interested in organizing an intercession class that would travel to Russia over winter break, he said.

CAMPUS

Nicholson is coordinator

University of Missouri graduate becomes K-Stater

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Leigh Anne Nicholson just became the campus news coordinator at K-State News Services, and at 24, she's younger than some students.

Her job will involve various duties at K-State.

"I'll write news releases, and I have a calendar that I keep updated. I work with different University committees on things like scripts for ground-breakings and dedications," she said.

"Also, when someone calls the University and wants to know who to talk to, I find out for them."

Nicholson recognized opportunities at K-State that weren't available to her as a reporter, she said.

"Here I get to edit, interview, organize, and meet with people who are a lot more interested in talking to a reporter," she said.

During her college career, Nicholson served as reporter, columnist and assistant city editor at the Columbia Missourian.

She then worked as a city reporter for Florida Today in Melbourne, Fla.

"I missed the Midwest," she said. "You really miss the people here and the fact that they're so open."

Nicholson spent a year in Lawrence covering Haskell Indian Junior College and health-care issues for the Lawrence Journal-World.

"We are very fortunate to have attracted a candidate of Leigh Anne's caliber to this position," Cheryl May, director of news services, said.

Nicholson began work at K-State this summer.

She moved on July 26 during the flood, she said.

"I applied for this job because I really wanted to use some different skills," she said. "I love my job. I love the people I work with. It's everything I expected it to be."

Nicholson received her bachelor's degree in journalism in December 1991 from the University of Missouri.

Introducing KSU Professionals

Welcome to KSU Professionals, a special section focused on K-States's falculty and staff.

The Collegian is written and edited by students, but we realize that students are not the only ones who read it.

In hopes of providing our readers complete coverage of campus news, we created this section to highlight the achievments of falculty and staff.

This section will appear in every Thursday edition of the Collegian .

We hope professionals and students alike will enjoy this section and its subject matter.

Richter saves pets from flooding

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

This summer's flooding not only displaced many families, it also displaced their pets.

As many people relocated to evacuation shelters, they were told pets were not accepted.

Linda Richter, professor of political science, had an idea to help the flood victims and their pets.

After finding animal shelters closed, she contacted a local radio station to let them know she would accept cats if evacuees called her first, she said.

Within an hour she had nearly 80 phone calls from people in need of housing for their pets, Richter said.

"The first call was from a woman who said her kitten was in a car parked in West Stadium," she said.

Richter's husband Bill, professor of political science, volunteered to rescue the kitten.

When he got to the stadium, he found more than one kitten that needed a temporary home.

"I came home with three cats instead of just one," he said.

It wasn't long before the Richters and their family were housing 11 cats and taking care of their own cat, which is diabetic, he said.

The cats were mostly housed in the garage. As they came in they were given a flea collar, litter box, food and a water dish, Linda said.

"We even air-conditioned our garage to keep the animals comfortable, especially one cat that had asthma," she said.

Richters' house quickly became crowded, and they had to enlist the help of friends, family and volunteers, Linda said.

"I went down my list to place animals," she said. "We were very lucky to have people who would take these pets."

The Richters only took cats into their home but were able to find homes for dogs, birds and other domestic pets, Linda said.

The K-State veterinary school sheltered a lot of pets that needed medical attention, and larger animals were moved to fields on high ground, she said.

Seeing people enjoy themselves around young animals was one of the best parts of the of the project — many of the volunteers hadn't been around young pets for many years, and they acted like new parents, Linda said.

"One kitten was only a few weeks old and had to be bottle fed by the family," she said.

The Richters were not the only volunteers who had their hands full. One of their friends cared for an entire litter of kittens and eventually found homes for all of them, Linda said .

People missed their pets terribly, Bill Richter said.

The couple would receive phone calls as late as 11:30 p.m. from evacuees concerned about their pets. They also had two evacuees who would regularly visit their cats, he said .

"He was a very curious kitten and into everything," Linda said. "We had to keep him busy or everything would be broken."

The kitten did not return home for two weeks after the other cats had left, and it was hard for them to let him go, she said.

Expenses were one thing the Richters did not worry about when their temporary shelter was open, Linda said.

"We received large donations from Petland, Hills Petfood in Topeka, and other donations from local residents," she said.

Food would be delivered to the house, and the couple would distribute it to others who were housing animals and then to the pets, Linda said.

Past disasters, like Hurricane Andrew, made Linda consider the problem of pet displacement and animal care before the flood, she said.

After hurricane Andrew, many pets were left to fend for themselves, Linda said.

The Richters advocate an organized system for dealing with pets in an emergency situation, Linda said.

"We need a system that could be activated on a moment's notice," she said.

The couple suggests that 4-H or environmental groups organize activities and work in conjunction with the Red Cross, Linda said.

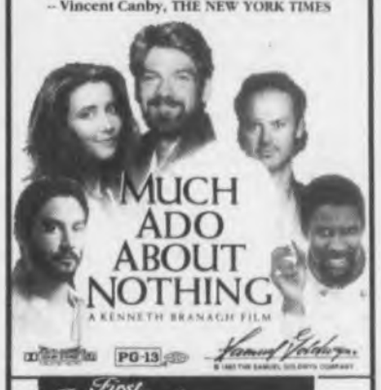
ROWLETT FILLS NEW POSITION

Jane Rowlett, previously the director of affirmative action, is now the director of unclassified affairs and University compliance.

Her position was created after reviewing the duties of the Office of Affirmative Action, Human Resource Services and the attorney's office.

"My office will be in charge of unclassified (faculty/staff) affairs," Rowlett said.



This will include any issues related to filling unclassified positions, dismissals, coordinating the annual distribution of unclassified contracts, the annual review of unclassified evaluations and annual unclassified salary recommendations.

She will also serve on the faculty handbook committee and maintain a central record-keeping system for filling unclassified positions.

Rowlett's duties are in accordance with University compliance and will include

Defensive line lacks experience

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

John Butler helps a teammate get loose before an afternoon practice. Butler, a senior co-captain, will be the only returning starter for the Cats' four-man defensive front.

Butler's hard work paying off

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

Ask senior defensive end John Butler what he did during the summer, and odds are he'll say he worked out — hard.

The senior co-captain, who was the recipient of honorable-mention all-Big Eight honors last season, is described by Coach Bill Snyder as being "the man we can hang our hats on."

Butler can also be described as the only returning starter for an inexperienced defensive line.

Butler finished the 1992-93 season with 73 tackles, including 41 solo, and had a team-leading five sacks.

Butler said he kept his focus on football all summer. Aside from taking a summer class, he dedicated his time off the field to working out, studying film and running to get used to the heat he would have to endure during the two-a-day practices.

"Coach Snyder tells us hard work is the only way to improve," Butler said. "But I'm also going to concentrate on film study more this year than I did last year. I really believe it is a big deal to study film."

Although in the past, impressive numbers have placed Butler among the team leaders in numerous statistical categories, the admiration and praise he has earned from his coaches and fellow players has proven why Butler is such a strong asset to the team.

"John has accepted the role of captain for the program because his leadership in the past has been excellent," Snyder said. "He's gotten bigger and stronger, and he's one of those guys who doesn't make mistakes."

Defensive end coach Mike Stoops said Butler has developed into one of the better players in the Big Eight, referring to him as "the glue of our defense."

However, there is one improvement to be made in Butler's game, Stoops said.

"Pass rushing," Stoops said. "I've just been stressing for him to become a better pass rusher and make more big plays. He does everything expected of him, but I need for him to do more now."

Butler's career-best performance was an 11-tackle, two-sack effort in K-State's win against Iowa State last year on national television, followed by 10 tackles during the loss at Missouri.

"He's not one of those players who jumps up and down," Stoops said. "He'll make the tackle, finish the play, go to the huddle, line up and do the same thing on the next play."

No matter what the stats might say, Butler said he will continue to just let things happen as they happen and won't lose perspective. However, he may be a top-running candidate for Big Eight honors again this year.

"It made me feel like all my hard work was worthwhile," he said of last season's honorable-mention honors. "I felt like everything was paying off, and now I'm just going to keep working hard and keep a positive attitude."

"He doesn't miss a practice, doesn't miss a workout, and he's come a long way and has a lot to be proud of," Stoops said. "He's a leader by action more so than words."

Snyder says speed of front four replaces size of years past

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

What the K-State defensive line loses in size this year, it may very well gain in quickness and speed.

Although the Wildcats enter the 1993 season with the loss of six defensive linemen, they will fill those holes with players who each have started at least one game in their K-State careers.

Coach Bill Snyder said he expects a smaller, but more aggressive, line this year. During spring drills, he said he was impressed by the play he saw on the field.

"People say we've lost a lot of players, but we've played a lot of players," Snyder said. "I think we have quality. We may have gone a little lighter than in the past, but we're faster."

The many returning linemen will try to improve on K-State's sixth-place conference ranking in rushing defense.

Among the returnees is senior defensive end John Butler, who was the recipient of all-Big Eight honorable-mention honors and comes into this season as defensive co-captain. Sophomore defensive end Matt McEwen (6 feet 2 inches, 220 pounds) enters as No. 2 on the depth chart, behind Butler, and is expected to get some playing time.

At the other end spot, sophomore Dirk Ochs (6'4", 245 pounds) should be solid after an impressive spring, while sophomore Andrew Timmons (6'3", 245 pounds) and freshman Nyle Wiren (6'2", 245 pounds) should add depth as well.

Junior defensive tackle Darrell Harbert (6'1", 275 pounds) also received all-Big Eight honorable-mention honors after starting three games last season.

Senior Sean Dabney (6'2", 265 pounds) is one of the most experienced linemen and was seventh in tackles last year. Junior Kelly Greene (6'2", 265 pounds) will challenge Harbert for the first-team assignment, while Blair Detelich (6'0", 260 pounds) will see his first action as tackle.

"We'll attack the line of scrimmage more so than just reading plays, so in that aspect, Green for sure will be much improved as will Dabney," said defensive line coach Nelson Barnes. "We're also going to try to utilize the quickness of Colston and his ability to avoid blocks and get to the ball.

"We're going to rotate guys into the line to make sure we get maximum effort," Barnes said. "That's the most important thing as far as we're concerned."

Players aid in sandbagging

JEN MESSELT

K-State football players participated in sandbagging as part of the flood-relief efforts in Manhattan this summer.

Junior linebacker Laird Veatch led the charge in a campaign to assist the flood victims. He began his efforts by assisting his brother's family in sandbagging the Dix Addition. Veatch rallied his teammates to help out the people who live in the residential area near the dam.

"It was a neat turnout by the team — everyone here this summer came out," said junior linebacker Mike Ekeler. "It helped give them time to get their belongings out."

The Dix Addition was evacuated, and the Red Cross supplied shelter to victims of the flood. Members of the community contributed food and labor to assist in the relief.

The players who spend their summers in Manhattan often participate in a summer conditioning. More than 30 players contributed to the relief effort.

"We found it as a good opportunity to help people out and at the same time get a good workout," Veatch said.

▶BRAVES COMPLETE SWEEP OF GIANTS

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Fred McGriff and David Justice picked the perfect time to play home-run derby.

With his team in a position to sweep the Giants and close the ever-narrowing gap in the NL West, McGriff stepped up to the plate in the first inning and hit the first pitch from Bill Swift out of the park. Not to be outdone, Justice did the same.

In fact, Justice did it again in the fifth inning, following McGriff's home run with another long ball.

It was that kind of day and that kind of series for the Braves, who romped to a 9-1 victory over San Francisco. The sweep pulled them to within 4 1/2 games in the NL West, the closest they've been since May 31.

But the onslaught of home runs was only one of the ways the Braves left the Giants, who were swept for the first time this season, reeling. Swift, their ace, was knocked out in the fifth, Will Clark landed on the disabled list and they couldn't get a hit off Greg Maddux until the sixth.

Maddux (15-9) shut out San Francisco for five innings and retired 12 of the first 13 batters he faced.

▶TYSON TO FILE PETITION FOR APPEAL

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson will take his rape conviction appeal to the Indiana Supreme Court on Thursday.

Local counsel Lee McTurnan said Wednesday he planned to file a petition asking the court to take the case, but declined to elaborate. Tyson's conviction was upheld in the state court of appeals.

Prosecutors would then have 10 days to respond to the Tyson petition after Thursday's filing. The supreme court could refuse to hear the case if it chose.

Tyson was sentenced in March 1992 to six years in prison. He was convicted of raping beauty contestant Desiree Washington in an Indianapolis hotel room. Tyson's lawyers claim the Rhode Island woman fabricated the rape story in hopes of suing the millionaire boxer.

In a 2-1 decision earlier this month, the Indiana Court of Appeals affirmed the conviction. It rejected arguments that the trial court erred by not allowing three witnesses to testify on behalf of the defense.

1993 season could be year to remember

Where do you have the K-State football team picked this year?

If you've been doing your reading on the team, you know several publications cover the Big Eight Conference, and they all go through the annual preseason conference rankings.

The problem is, in five magazines I flipped through, the Wildcats were ranked in five different spots. The Cats went from buried in the cellar in one publication to claiming the fourth spot in another, which would earn them a berth in only their second bowl game ever.

Why the inconsistency?

Good question. My guess is they either don't know or care about the Big Eight or don't all analyze the same way.

Looking at these magazines, I ask myself, just where will the Cats finish?

DEREK SIMMONS

Fifteen returning starters and seven home games make a top-five finish look feasible. K-State's 15-2 record at Manhattan since 1990 and the fact that the team has defeated its first three opponents the past two years makes even a top-four finish look enticing.

The Cats play Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and Missouri all at home. I'm not saying they will be successful in beating all four of those teams, but if they can beat two, win their first three non-conference games of the year and beat Iowa State and Oklahoma State like they have in the past three seasons, they will finish the 1993 campaign 8-3.

Of course, I could try to calculate and see into the future all day long and be wrong on all counts.

The point is, K-State has a legitimate shot at contending for a spot in the upper division of the Big Eight instead of battling it out in the trenches. Finishing in the top four of the ever-improving Big Eight is no easy task either.

With an 8-3 finish, the Cats would claim at least a fourth-place finish in the Big Eight, erase a 62-year duration without eight wins and record their third-best winning percentage ever.

But the football preseason is a jungle. Everyone thinks he or she has a solution for why this or that team will finish wherever, and my scenario might not be any better than the next guys. But what if?

What if the Cats win all seven games at home? That would push their total to 12 straight victories at KSU Stadium.

Folks, that's 10-1.

Hold on, I know that is shooting the moon a tad. Before I start throwing oranges, I think I'll stick with my original formula.

Still, with all the preseason hubbub, coach Bill Snyder somehow keeps everything in perspective

"Of the polls I've seen, we've been picked low in the conference," Snyder said at a recent Skywriters press conference. "I don't get overly concerned about those things though. I don't concerned about those things though. I don't think your projections or anyone else is going to make a difference. We're in charge of that."

Wide receiver and co-captain Andre Coleman said that if the Cats are going to turn the corner, this is the year.

"If there was a year K-State was going to do it, this is the year," he said. "We're looking forward to getting on the field and seeing how we can do against our opponents. Seven home games is just that much more of an edge."

Montreal, Braves discuss trade

MONTREAL (AP) — The Atlanta Braves, trying to strengthen their players for the playoff stretch, have worked out a trade for Montreal pitcher Dennis Martinez, pending his approval, the Associated Press learned Wednesday night.

A source close to the negotiations, however, said the Expos had made a deal with the Braves for a player to be named. That player was said to be power-hitting Brian Hunter, who was recently sent to the minors after the Braves acquired Fred McGriff.

Martinez, 38, has the right to veto any trade because he is a 10-and-5 man — he's played at least 10 years in the major leagues, including the last five with the same team.

Martinez is 11-8 with a 4.23 ERA this season. He was an All-Star in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Trades made in August can only be completed after a player has cleared waivers. The Braves, though, would get a chance to claim Martinez before the Giants because they are lower in the standings than San Francisco.

Commuters share rides

Adult Student Services develops network

LORI ARMER

Adult Student Services has developed a system called Commuter Networking to help students offset the cost of driving to campus every day from out of town.

This averages to about 30 minutes of round trip driving per day.

"From its start in the fall of 1990 through the summer of 1993, 183 students have used the service," Nancy Blaine, assistant director for Adult Student Services, said.

KSU Adult Student Services Office records for Spring 1993 semester show, 29.8 percent of the total student body was made up of adult students, many of which commute daily.

Some of the benefits to car-pooling to campus are companionship, environmental activism, extra study time, safer driving and getting to know someone new, according to a newsletter released by Adult Student Services.

The main reason students car-pool is to offset the cost of transportation and parking.

According to KSU parking services, a one semester campus parking pass costs $30, and a full year, $55.

Faculty must pay $40 for a single semester, and $75 for the entire year.

Adult students can fill out a form in Holton Hall 201 and in turn, receive information on others commuting from the same area to arrange for car-pooling.

Court restricts woman from all-male college

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Relief prevailed Wednesday on the oak-shrouded campus of the Citadel after a federal appeals court temporarily blocked a woman from enrolling at the all-male military college.

"I'm glad she's not coming. I just don't really want the school to change," Zarak Ali, senior at the college, said as platoons of freshmen marched to the mess hall.

"There's a feeling of relief. But I think eventually it is going to happen," he said.

Shannon Faulkner was to have started day classes on Friday while her sex-discrimination lawsuit against the school was considered. But the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Tuesday she must wait until it can hold a hearing, scheduled for Sept. 27 in Richmond, Va.

College President Claudius Watts III was briefing seniors on the legal battle when the decision was announced.

"People were ecstatic. We kind of knew it was coming. There was a sort of sixth sense that we would win," cadet Christopher Trotter said as he stood on the windswept parade ground.

Faulkner, 18, said she hadn't decided whether to enroll elsewhere while pursuing her appeal.

"I have not made any plans," she said.

"Right now I'm not talking to any press. This is my day off. Out of seven months I have not had a day off."

U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck ruled earlier this month that Faulkner could enroll in day classes — but not in the military training program — while her lawsuit was heard.

The appeals court ruled 2-1 that the harm to Faulkner from waiting didn't outweigh the harm to the Citadel if it were forced to admit her.

Funding for abortions suspended

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — A judge Wednesday upheld a law restricting Medicaid payments for abortions, ordering the state to halt funding for the procedure for poor women, except in limited cases.

Circuit Judge John Hey ruled that a provision of a $1.14-billion Medicaid funding bill that severely restricts state funding of abortions is constitutional and enforceable.

"While an indigent woman may have a right to abort her fetus, she does not have the corresponding right to have that decision publicly funded," Hey wrote.

It will take 10 days to two weeks for the state Department of Health and Human Resources to notify doctors and Medicaid facilities of the change, Ann Garcelon, agency spokeswoman, said.

As a result, abortion funding cannot cease immediately, despite Hey's order, Garcelon said.

Roger Forman, lawyer for the Women's Health Center of West Virginia Inc., said he would petition the state Supreme Court on Wednesday to put Hey's order on hold while the ruling is appealed.

The law bars Medicaid-funded abortions unless two doctors say the abortion is necessary, the fetus is found to be in danger of dying, or the woman is the victim of rape or incest.

Three women's groups, the Women's Health Center, West Virginia Free and the National Organization for Women, sued the Department of Health and Human Resources over the abortion restrictions.

They said the law discriminated against poor women who can't pay for abortions themselves because other women who can afford abortions are still able to have them.

West Virginians for Life Inc., a pro-life group that helped defend the law, said the measure doesn't ban abortions but the state funding of abortions.

"We are so grateful," said Becky Romero, vice president of West Virginia for Life.

"We were always very hopeful because we had an excellent case in the court. Thirty-seven other states do not fund abortions on demand with their tax dollars," she said.

Don't screw up

One illegal drink can cost you:
$100 fine
$110 ADSAP fine
$95 court costs
40 hours of community service

One bad check can cost you:
a big fine and court costs!
It's a fraud conviction!

One conviction for use or possession of marijuana or other drugs could get you jail time and cost you your scholarship!

Stealing or "finding" a parking permit and not turning it in could greatly damage your record.

A DUI conviction costs $500 and mandatory jail time. Three lousy drinks will do it.

Therefore:
Don't drink unless you are 21
Balance your checkbook
Don't take another's parking permit
Don't drink and drive
Remember drugs are for sick people.

Please accept my best wishes for a challenging school year, and remember that being a responsible adult requires using your head.

Have a good year,

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The stars will always shine for you and the birds will always sing. Tonight: Boogie down to the beat of KC and the Sunshine band.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22) — You are in an alternative mood today. Go to Espresso for some coffee. Tonight: Hold a seance for Nick the Ghost.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Stop skipping classes! It's only the first week of school. Tonight: Buckle your buns down and study hard.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Life has taken you by the hair and is dragging you along for the ride. Slow down, you're moving too fast. Tonight: Party.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You are becoming a tightwad these days. Loosen up, and use some of that dough for fun. Tonight: Money, it's a gas. Lend it, spend it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You are a PC maniac today. Shut up before your Birkenstocks get shoved down your throat. Tonight: Give peace a chance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your job is on the line. Straighten up your act. Tonight: Consider your profession and think money, money, money, money... moneeeey.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The creditors will be calling soon. Try to get a job. Tonight: Take the phone off the hook and lay low.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You're heading down the road to Heartbreak Hotel. You're all shook up because some blue suede shoes are stomping all over your heart.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — It's better to burn out than fade away. Get involved with something.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — There's a tear in your beer today. Stop moping and order another pitcher.

Here's the answer for smelly sneezers

Dear Cassandra,

I have a terrible problem I'm almost too embarrassed to relate.

My sneezes smell funny.

Am I the only one who has this problem? They sometimes smell like decaying lawn clippings, a musty basement or even a plugged-up dehumidifier that lives in a bathroom used by a dozen guys who don't clean.

Could you check with Lafene to see if I have some sort of terrible disease? I'd like to be cured of this ailment soon.

I haven't had a date in years because I'm afraid I'll sneeze and gross her out. I shudder when I get within two aisles of the snuff section in grocery stores.

Sincerely,
Stinky Sneezer

Dear Stinky,

I'm glad you decided to trust and confide in me about this absolutely abhorrent and completely repugnant condition of yours.

It takes quite a big person to break down the personal barriers to reveal such a remarkably uncultured and entirely revulsive aspect of their personality.

Anyway, it seems to me that if your sneezes continue to smell like decaying wet lawn clippings or musty basements — you're probably just fine.

Now, if your sneezes begin to smell like rotting corpses, slimy-gooshy-poopy baby diapers or burning flesh on a Hibachi Hut grill, I would indeed suggest taking some Nuprin.

Little — yellow — Nuprin.

I checked with Lafene about my theory, and I'm assuming the nurse's silence indicated her complete agreement.

Religious organizations offer community, support

Denominational, nondenominational groups available, opportunities exist for all faiths

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

K-State students have many opportunities on campus to make their college careers a religious, as well as an intellectual, experience.

Several members of campus religious organizations endured both sweltering heat and drizzling rain to introduce themselves to new students during registration week.

Baptist Student Union, Icthus Christian Fellowship, Catholic Campus Ministry, University Parish of United Methodists and the Apostolic Campus Ministry were among the student religious groups that set up tables in the Union and in the Union Plaza during registration.

Chris Sutterfield, graduate student in landscape architecture, said it was a good place for his organization, BSU, to start.

"We're set up mainly for people who have heard of us," Sutterfield said. "We get names and phone numbers and get in contact with them later."

Most group leaders said the majority of their new members learn about the groups through personal contact with current members. Leaders said members invite students they meet in class or in the residence halls.

Laura Terry, senior in mass communications, said the University Parish of United Methodists recruits members through the church. Members speak to congregations in their home towns and send out fliers to students who have been active in the church.

Apostolic Campus Ministry, affiliated with the United Pentecostal Church, employs a total outreach program, said Horace Richardson, a member of the Apostolic Campus Ministry.

Members set up information tables in the Union, post fliers and advertise in the Collegian, Richardson said.

Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of Religious Activities, said the University recognizes the need for students to have a spiritual life as well as the students' right to practice faith and enjoy the academic study of religion.

K-State's policy concerning religious activities states: "In a pluralistic, multicultural and interdenominational University environment, freedom of worship is supported."

The policy prepared by the Committee on Religion states any group may organize on campus, provided it meets certain criteria agreed on by the committee.

First, actions by the group cannot endanger the health, safety or welfare of students or the University community. Secondly, groups must be accountable in finance and honest in publicity. Third, programs must not interfere with the educational mission of the University. Last, the organization must respect the right of others to privacy, according to the policy.

Many of the religious organizations on campus are affiliated with a specific religion or denomination, but there are also interdenominational groups that accept anyone.

Susan Herring, junior in secondary education, said the interdenominational Christian group, Icthus, is the only completely student-run religious organization. Its mission is to introduce people to God, she said.

"This group is focused on people who don't know who God is or who want to know more about him," she said.

The Baha'i Club is also interdenominational, in the sense that it accepts anyone as a member. It is based on a religion that began in the 19th Century in what is now Iraq, said Houchang Khatamian, faculty adviser and associate professor of horticulture.

Khatamian said the goal of Baha'i is to unite humankind.

"The Baha'i faith tries to present itself as an example of what the world should be," he said. "It promotes diversity and supports racial and ethnic harmony."

Some groups exist primarily to provide students and faculty with community and spiritual support.

"This group is important, because here (in Manhattan) there are not a lot of Jews. If you come from a family in a Jewish environment, it is nice to get together with people that share the same customs or way of thinking," said Roberto Aizenman, president of B'nai B'rith Hillel and sophomore in architecture.

The Muslim Community Association welcomes Muslim students and faculty to K-State, helps them to find housing and organizes daily prayers, Akhter Khan, doctoral student in agronomy, said.

Religious organizations also perform community services, sponsor guest lectures and various social events.

Last year, the Muslim Community Association sponsored a series of lectures on the Islamic faith and plan to do so again this year, Khan said.

Khan said the lectures were intended to expose non-Muslims to Islam and its principles.

"Very few people know what Islam is," he said.

Michelle Ochs, senior in pre-physical therapy, said members of the Catholic Campus Ministry participate in many social events and activities such as intramural sports, country dance lessons, aerobics and an annual Mardi Gras festival.

Most members of these organizations agreed, however, spiritual and emotional support was the primary reason students join a religious group.

Sutterfield said he thinks participation in BSU provides fellowship and encouragement for its members and actually helps them to become better students.

"It challenges you to excel in other areas besides school," he said.

"There's guidance you can count on and friends you can count on," she said.

Ochs said, for her, joining a religious group is part of being a well-rounded person. For many students, she said, it is a way to rediscover God.

"When everything else goes wrong, you can count on God," she said.

Fallon reaches students from all backgrounds

Religious activities coordinator advises 40 campus organizations

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Rev. Don Fallon describes himself as a man who wears many hats.

Fallon, an ordained Lutheran minister, is the coordinator of religious activities at K-State, a position he has filled both as a volunteer and a half-time staff member for more than 20 years.

Fallon acts as an adviser to the more than 40 religious organizations on campus.

He also supervises All Faiths and Danforth chapels and monitors the University's religious guidelines, which are written and revised by the Committee on Religion.

The committee includes student representation from all the major religions on campus, including two members appointed by the student body president.

One of the committee's aims is to do religious programming aimed at interfaith understanding and dialogue, Fallon said.

Religious groups registered with the University Activities Board must meet the criteria agreed upon by the committee.

The guidelines apply to all religious groups regardless of their affiliations, Fallon said.

"It's important not to single out religious groups," Fallon said. "You can't exclude them."

Fallon said the guidelines are important in view of some negative publicity in the past, especially dealing with cults.

Groups must not interfere with the welfare or privacy of students, Fallon said.

"They can walk around and talk with people, but they must respect that people may not be pressured," Fallon said. "It's a fine line."

Fallon is also available for one-to-one counseling with students or religious-group leaders and marriage counseling.

"A key interest of mine has been advocating for students or persons with special needs, such as finding food, clothing or shelter," he said.

One of the more solemn tasks he fulfills is contacting parents if there is a student death and helping students through the grieving process.

Fallon said he is particularly interested in peace and justice issues.

He helps coordinate interfaith dialogues and programs during Racial Ethnic Harmony Week, Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week and Holocaust Remembrance Day.

He said he also serves as chairman of the University Communicable Disease Committee because he recognizes the pastoral and ethical issues involved with AIDS.

In past years, he has organized memorial services for a faculty member and a student who died of AIDS.

Fallon said he advocates justice, acceptance, rights and compassion for AIDS patients.

As a part of the Gay/Lesbian Taskforce, Fallon said he is helping to write a set of guidelines for the gay community.

"If we want to bring the world together, we need to understand each other," Fallon said.

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said Fallon's position was important to the University because it serves a particular need some students have.

"We know that if we can help students be happy and satisfied in out-of-class activities, they'll have a better chance of succeeding in class," Scott said.

"Don is really excellent," she said. "His faith and philosophy are broader than just a Christian perspective."

Group to ask for legal gay marriages

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A group of ministers and laity in the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America said Wednesday it will ask church leaders to formally sanction homosexual marriages.

The group called The Network To End Sexual Discrimination plans to give church administrators a list of 500 church leaders and lay members who support the change, said Mahrya Monson, a Kansas City spokeswoman.

She said the group also wants the church to lift its requirement that openly gay ordained pastors take a lifelong vow of celibacy.

Bishop Herbert Chilstrom, spiritual leader of the church, is scheduled to give his report to the 1,000-member assembly Thursday morning to officially start the church's third biennial legislative gathering.

Bishop Emeritus Stanley Olson, a leader of The Network, is among those who will publicly announce his support in a news conference scheduled Friday, Monson said.

Olson is a bishop in one of the Lutheran denominations that combined in 1988 to form the 5.2 million-member ELCA.

"I have witnessed the scriptural burdens the ELCA has placed on all of its many gay and lesbian members, whether lay or ordained," Olson said. "As one who has held the office of bishop in the church, I cannot remain passive or silent."

Rev. Charles Miller, one of six cabinet executives of the church, said the church policy in general on homosexuality says it is considered outside the intended order of God's creation.

The ELCA does not officially sanction or prohibit gay marriages, Miller said.

But he said the church is in the middle of a five-year study on human sexuality that, in part, will explore issues of homosexuality.

The church is not likely to change its policy on gay ministers until the study is done in 1995, he said.

"And then it's possible that the ordination question will be revisited at that point," he said. "But there's a prior question which needs to be answered: how the church views homosexuality."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Sentencing guidelines stir questions of racial imbalances

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Civil rights activists are enraged about a federal law that sends people holding crack cocaine to prison, while those caught with powder cocaine can get probation.

These activists plan to use this weekend's 30th anniversary civil rights march as a forum to call for changing the law, which they believe hamstrings poor blacks and benefits affluent whites.

The activists are backed by a number of judges who say they are tired of the law also.

Young, black males are going behind bars in bulk, damaging their lives in ways that may never heal, said Jesse Jackson, president of the National Rainbow Coalition.

"It's not even the moral question that nobody should be using any of it," Jackson said. "But when the time doesn't correspond to the crime, it isn't serving society well."

One gram of crack cocaine is treated, under mandatory sentencing guidelines, the same as 100 grams of powdered cocaine. The argument for the guidelines is that crack is concentrated, and hence more powerful.

Possessing 5.1 grams of crack cocaine would bring a sentence of five years without parole, while possessing an equal amount of powdered cocaine would bring probation.

Jackson is bringing attention to the case of Roger Van Smith II because he says it dramatizes the full impact of the sentencing disparity on black youth.

Smith, a student at Virginia Union University, was arrested in September 1992 with two friends, also 21, after being caught with crack cocaine.

Prosecutors say the case, in which others have since been arrested, involves 15 to 60 kilograms (about 33 to 132 pounds) of the drug. Smith's attorney, Idas Daniel, declined to comment, because Smith is to be sentenced Nov. 16.

The sentence Smith gets, under the guidelines, would reflect the total amount of crack, regardless of who the bulk of it belonged to.

Jackson complained that there is no room for a judge to consider Smith's life circumstances: He was a college student, a first-offender with no weapon and the product of a stable, two-parent home.

"Often judges look upon a crime committed, and if there's a stable home, a first offense, no gun, judges weigh this," Jackson said. "In this instance, it doesn't matter."

The mandatory sentencing guidelines have left Smith's family feeling powerless and devastated.

"You have hopes and plans for your child," Faye Smith, Smith's mother, said. "'To see certain things that happen in the legal system, it becomes even more devastating to see what could possibly happen to your child."

According to the U.S. Sentencing Commission, blacks made up 91.5 percent of those sentenced last year under federal law for crimes involving crack cocaine. In cases involving powdered cocaine, 32 percent of those sentenced were white; 39.9 percent were Hispanic.

The federal inmate population — about 24,500 in 1980 — is now 76,000 according to the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Nearly 60 percent are serving time for drugs.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?
If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.
There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.
Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.
All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Senate studies parking problem

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Bharath Vellanki, graduate student in civil engineering, presented his parking study results, informing Senate that 1.4 parking permits have been issued for each parking space. Parking Services is selling more permits than they have spaces for.

Next fall, 100 to 300 parking spaces will be lost due to the Farrell Library expansion and closing Mid-Campus Drive, Vellanki said.

Vellanki's alternatives to the parking problem include implementing a shuttle system from the Bramlage Coliseum and KSU Stadium parking lots.

Another alternative, he said, is to build a parking garage that would decrease the surface parking on campus until completion.

The shuttle system would increase southbound traffic toward the main campus.

Vellanki said he thought with 300 spaces being lost when Mid-Campus Drive is closed next fall during the Farrell expansion project, a parking garage would compound the parking problem.

Vellanki's final report is due September 30. Senate will then vote on the alternative at their discretion.

Discussion of the parking parking ended when Elsa Diaz, senior in industrial engineering, requested the mathematical models from Vellanki's findings. The models will be made available to the senators in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

During the open period, a time when people without speaking privileges may address Senate, Mary Farmer, senior in history and former election committee chairperson, made several suggestions stemming from her experiences during the SGA elections in April.

In April, a run-off election for student body president and vice president was contested by a group of students in the College of Veterinary Medicine. The run-off election was conducted again.

Farmer suggested a year-round election committee as opposed to the committee being formed 30 days prior to an election. Farmer also suggested that all changes of the resolutions dealing with elections be settled before the end of the fall semester, and that a time limit be set on election recalls.

In other business, Student Body Vice President Eric Henry, graduate student in mass communications, suggested a new computer system be purchased for the SGA offices because some of the computers in the offices are privately owned.

Sarah Caldwell, senior in English, asked that $2,500 dollars be allocated to enable the Office of Student Activities and Services to employ a student secretary to provide support to the student body president and his or her cabinet, the student body vice president, Student Senate, Finance Committee, University Activities Board and Consumer Relations Board.

▶ DOMESTIC WATER LINE BREAKS BENEATH SIDEWALK NEAR DURLAND HALL

The front walkway of Durland Hall looked like a Yellowstone geyser Thursday evening about 7 p.m. when a 10-inch domestic cold water line broke directly beneath the sidewalk.

Ron Salladay, K-State facilities plumber, said the line, which runs directly into Durland, is part of the city water system.

Salladay, who was called to the site about 7 p.m., said facilities originally shut off the line but then turned it on again so restroom facilities in Durland could be used.

He said he had no idea if the line would be repaired Thursday evening or first thing Friday morning.

▶ INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CLUB HAS PARTY FOR OLD, NEW MEMBERS TONIGHT

The International Student Club is having a party at 9:30 p.m. tonight at Union Station.

"I have heard a lot of students talking about the party, there should be a lot of people there."

Marcia Hancock, club vice president, said attendance at previous club dances has been good, and she expects that this one will be no different.

Anyone interested in the International Student Club is welcome to attend the festivities, Filiopoulos said.

He also said the club is not just limited to international students.

"The purpose of the club is to get American students interacting with students from other countries and to promote multiculturalism."

▶ K-STATE'S FALL ENROLLMENT DROPS LESS THAN 1 PERCENT

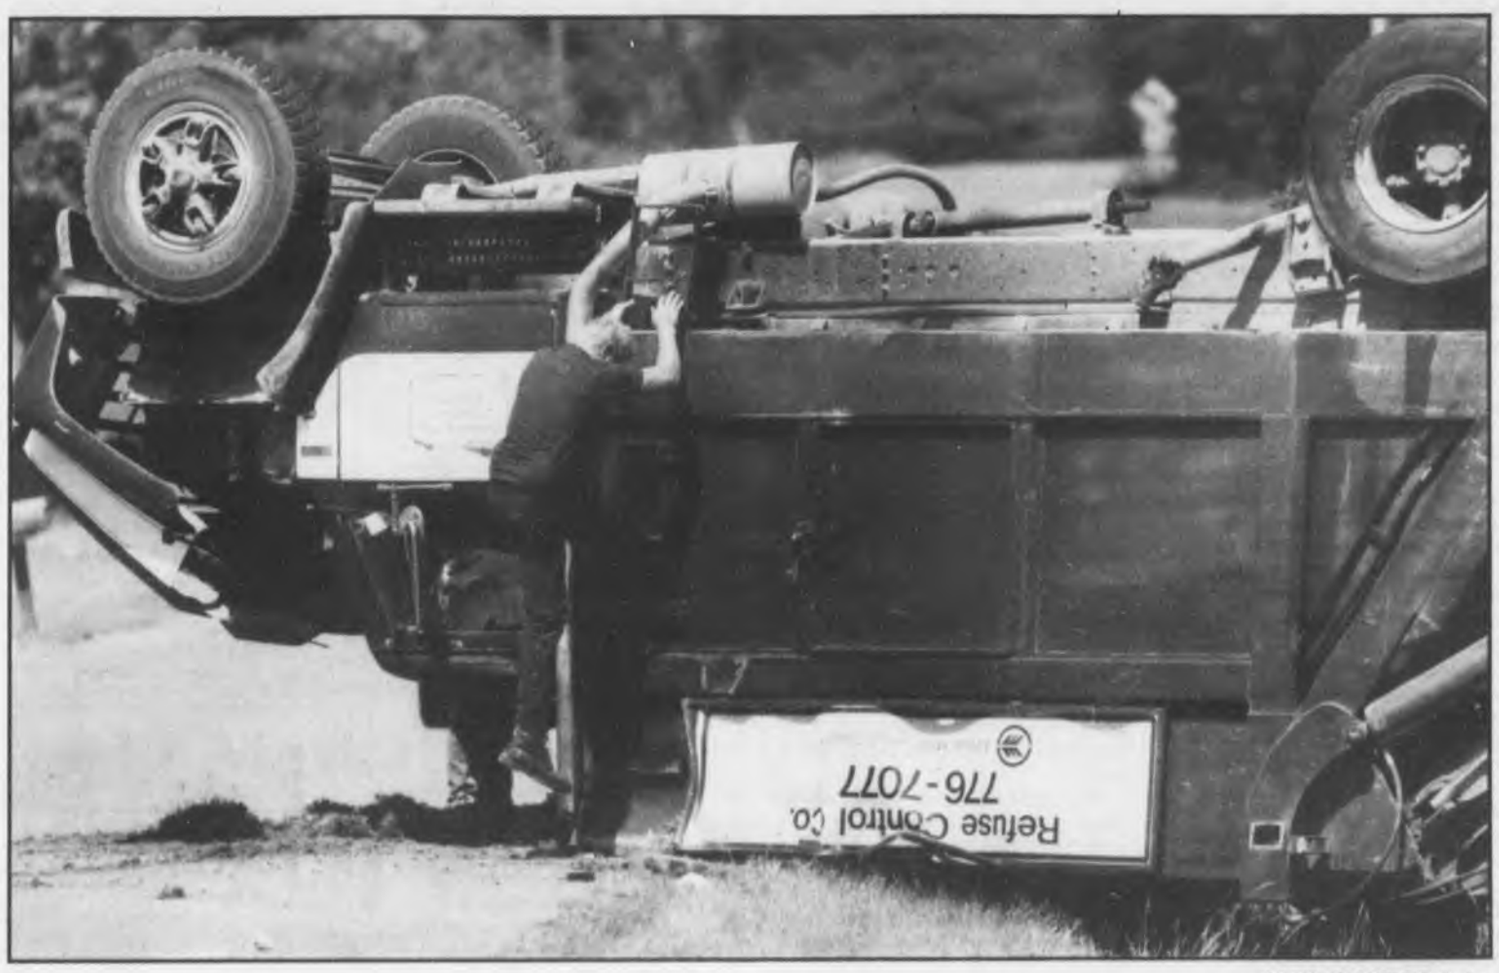
Fall enrollment at K-State stayed much the same as in past semesters.

These figures are based on pre-enrollment numbers. Final totals will be available after the 20th day of classes.

"The key is to stabilize our enrollment," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life. "We're still the No. 1 choice of Kansas graduates."

Graduates from the spring caused a 5-percent decrease in enrollment figures this semester. The overall less-than-1-percent drop is attributed to the 1992-93 graduating class being larger than usual.

"That is where we expected we would be," said Don Foster, K-State registrar.



The future of K-State depends on the high school graduating classes, and they appear to be growing in numbers, he said.

University officials hope the next seven years will bring a 19-percent increase in high school graduates.

"We're looking forward to a modest increase in freshmen," said Bosco. He said that 1992-93 was the final year of a three-year decline.

Vehicles collide at blind corner

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Two vehicles were involved in a major-damage, injury accident Thursday afternoon at an intersection that neighborhood residents say is dangerous.

The accident occurred at the unmarked intersection of Rogers Boulevard and Cindella Drive, north of Manhattan.

Neighborhood residents Dave Welch and Jim Walters commented on the danger of the unmarked intersections throughout Rogers Boulevard because of the windblocks many residents have planted.

"I know we've had at least one other accident," Welch said.

"I've lived here 25 years," Walters said. "We all planted little trees, and they've gotten bigger and bigger and have become a hazard — you really can't see if anyone is coming."

"The potential for it (accidents) is great because of the blind intersections," he said. "I am careful because I know you don't have time to see anyone or stop. I just drive slowly."

Manhattan resident Kirk Farley was northbound on Cindella Drive in a Refuse Control Co. truck when a westbound Le Baron coupe, driven by Manhattan resident Sharon Billington, entered the intersection. Billington struck the rear end of the refuse truck.

"When I saw Billington, I stepped on the gas to try to make it through the intersection," Farley said.

Riley County Police Officer Todd Bridges said the truck continued in an eastbound skid, leaving marks for 118 feet. He said the truck landed on its roof in a ditch on the east side of Cindella Drive. Billington's car skidded into the east ditch of Cindella Drive, Bridges said.

Riley County Police Sergeant Michael Quintanar said Farley and Billington were both transported by ambulance to the Saint Mary Hospital. Both Farley and Billington were treated and released.

The accident is still under investigation because there were no eyewitnesses, Quintanar said.

Farley said he has always been concerned about the intersections on Cindella throughout the neighborhood.

"All of the intersections on Cindella need at least something, whether that be a stop or yield sign. Visibility is poor because of all of the trees," Farley said.

Officer Bridges said that he agreed the intersection is dangerous.

"I believe in order to prevent further accidents, a four-way stop would be in order," Bridges said.

Billington's car was equipped with an airbag.

"I believe the airbag had a great deal to do with the low amount of injuries she had," Bridges said. "I believe without the airbag, the injuries would've been much more serious."

Graduate student contests library fine

Misses return date by 3 days, owes $30 fine

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

A graduate student is fighting a fine he said he feels is unfair.

Shawn Woodford, graduate student in history, checked out a reserved book in Farrell Library on July 16. Woodford missed the July 23 return date by three days and was issued a $30 fine.

Woodford returned the book and paid the fine.

He then contacted the professor who placed the book on reserve and explained his situation.

"The professor was surprised that the book continued to be on reserve although his class had ended in May," Woodford said.

In an attempt to get the library to reconsider his fine, Woodford wrote a letter to Shelly Wittwer, reserve circulation department, and Brice Hobrock, dean of Farrell Library, concerning the matter.

Hobrock said the complaint is being looked into.

"Mr. Woodford was in violation of the regulations of the library. Though, we are considering his comments," Hobrock said.

"The professor was surprised that the book continued to be on reserve although his class had ended in May."

SHAWN WOODFORD
GRADUATE STUDENT IN HISTORY

Reserved books are put on a one-week check-out period because of the demand. If the books are not returned or re-checked out for further use, a $10 fine is issued per day.

Woodford said he believes the reserve system and its policies represent a problem.

"People leave books on reserve for months and never need them. The reason why, is because it is so difficult to retrieve them from circulation. I believe it is a routine bureaucratic process," he said.

"I understand why I am being slapped with a fine, but I feel no one will listen to my complaint," Woodford said.

In comparison with three Big Eight schools, the University of Kansas, the University of Oklahoma and the University of Nebraska, K-state issues the largest fine for overdue books on reserve.

Missouri, however, charges $1 an hour.

Woodford said he believes even though he violated the rule, he did not violate its intent.

"I fully acknowledge my failure to properly adhere to library policy in this instance. However, I no way interfered with any other student's access to the book. Therefore, I feel I do not merit such a drastic penalty," Woodford said.

Hobrock said the $10-a-day charge for overdue reserved books has been in place for two years.

"It is a policy established by the University's library committee," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said there is no appeal board for dealing with unreasonable fines.

"We have talked about that on several occasions," Hobrock said. "But nothing has been established."

Hobrock said all of the collected library fines are used toward replacing lost items.

Jackson investigation grows to 3 more boys

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police have expanded their investigation of Michael Jackson to include his relationship with three other boys, the Los Angeles Times said today.

"They are even interviewing friends of friends, to see if they were told anything," an unidentified source told the newspaper.

The police sex-crimes unit began an investigation Aug. 17 after a 13-year-old told a therapist the pop star fondled him. Police seized photos and videotapes over the weekend at Jackson's Los Angeles condominium and Neverland ranch.

The Daily News of Los Angeles reported Wednesday that the alleged abuse included oral sex during a relationship that lasted several months.

The boy is at the center of a bitter custody battle in which his father has asked the boy's mother to deny the youngster any contact with Jackson, including phone calls, according to court papers made available Wednesday.

Czech fortune hunters search for Nazi loot

HRADISTKO, Czech Republic (AP) — An old woman's tales of buried Nazi loot said to be worth between $30 million and $200 million have spelled an end to peace and quiet in this river valley.

International salvage teams are negotiating with the government for permission to start digging. Meanwhile, dozens of diggers are camped near the Vltava River, eagerly awaiting a decision.

Jan Vaculik, a senior police official, said police and army searchers may have to move in first, so inexperienced diggers are not blown up by mines the Nazis are reported to have sown in the area during their occupation.

Anna Kmanska, 88, says she witnessed strange happenings one night nearly 50 years ago near what was then the Stechovice concentration camp.

Crossing some fields, she ventured into an area the Germans had declared off limits. There, she saw about 30 prisoners of war digging holes by lantern-light and lowering huge crates into the ground.

The treaure hunters believe the POWs buried crates of jewels, art objects and other loot that had been hustled out of Berlin by Col. Otto Skorzeny, a commander of an elite German military unit, in April 1945 as the Allies closed in.

The loot was meant to be spirited to Argentina, far from Allied hands.

Protesters won't disturb Reno's visit

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Abortion protesters won't be kept out of Attorney General Janet Reno's community meeting here next week. But, officials promise, they won't disturb her discussion of violence, gangs and drugs.

Reno, whose schedule is being tightly guarded, will hold a public meeting Monday at a Wichita church to discuss violent crime. At least one unidentified person in the Justice Department said Reno will talk about the shooting of abortion provider Dr. George Tiller last Thursday, but it will not be the main topic of discussion.

The church meeting is the only public meeting announced on the attorney general's schedule. She will meet privately with students, law enforcement personnel, business leaders and residents.

Abortion opponents had said they want to question Reno during the forum at Tabernacle Baptist Church and threatened to tail her until she talks with them. But Operation Rescue leader Pat Mahoney said on Wednesday that his group won't do anything to heighten tensions.

"In this atmosphere of tension and fear, the worst thing a pro-lifer could do right now is come to Wichita and create a disturbance," he said.

Sucker capital of the world celebrates past

WETUMKA, Okla. (AP) — It's been 43 years since a con artist scurried out of town with $3,000 of the residents' money, but townspeople still are having the last laugh.

This weekend's "Sucker Days" celebration has become a tribute to F. Barn Morrison, a smooth-talking salesman who promised a three-ring spectacular but left this central Oklahoma town holding the bag — along with tickets, hay bales and everything else that goes into holding a circus.

"We had a few people resent being called suckers, but that's what we were," said Jack Herring, 72, one of the few residents out of 1,400 who waited for the circus in 1950.

While the town waited for the circus to arrive, another salesman — this one for real — showed up trying to sell outdoor clocks that had space for advertisements.To his surprise, he couldn't find any takers.

"A banker told him that we just got sucked in on this circus deal," Herring said. "The salesman said, 'If I were you, I'd throw a big celebration and invite the whole country.' And that's what we did."

Merchants broke open the bales of hay and scattered in money for the children to dig it out, and townspeople served up hot dogs and watermelons.

Is iridescent purple really his color?

He's been turning up in all kinds of bright colors and preppy pastels.

On his first visit to the golf course, Clinton was resplendent in iridescent purple pants and shirt, set off with white shoes, glove and hat.

He's also getting a lot of use out of a pair of salmon chinos and a matching baseball cap, which he wore to go yachting Tuesday with Mrs. Onassis.

So who's picking the president's clothes?

"The president is 47 years old," said Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers. "I think he's probably capable of doing that himself."

Letterman changes names of skits

About 400 people were in the audience Wednesday when the gap-toothed one taped his first late-night show for his new network.

Though "Late Show With David Letterman" makes its debut Monday, the taped program won't be broadcast for a few weeks.

Since NBC made a fuss about Letterman taking some of his signature gags with him to the Ed Sullivan Theater, he had to slightly alter names. Hence, his running bit about bumping into celebrities got a new name and his Top 10 list is now "The Late Show Top Ten."

The guest on the taped show was David Brenner, who Letterman said was the last comic to appear in the theater when it was home to "The Ed Sullivan Show."

KU Safe Ride serves as model for K-State

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Three years ago, six out of every 10 drivers pulled over for drunk driving in Lawrence were University of Kansas students.

Since the establishment of KU's night transportation program, the numbers have dropped to two or three out of every 10, Bob Grunzinger, KU on Wheels coordinator, said.

Although K-State has looked into similar programs, none have been established. The KU Safe Ride program was established last year.

The program allows any KU student with an ID to call from anywhere in Lawrence and be picked up within 15 minutes between the hours of 11 p.m. and 3 a.m., seven days a week.

"One life is worth more than the money spent on this program. We're almost guaranteed to have saved one life," Grunzinger said.

The Student Senate at KU has a contract with Lawrence Bus Company and pays them for the service. In turn, the Lawrence Bus Company pays KU students to drive the buses, Grunziner said.

"K-State looked at it, but legal parameters have made it so we don't get involved," said Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service at K-State.

About six years ago, the city of Manhattan sponsored a Badcab Program, which picked up students and members of the community who had been drinking, Arck said.

The program had a $50,000 budget comprised of money paid by drunken driving offenders, said Michelle White, the program's academic counselor with educational support services.

The program ended because the city decided it was not going to uphold its agreement for funding, White said.

Michael Henry, sophomore in political science and speech and student senator for the College of Arts and Sciences, said he had a plan that could help the University.

"Manhattan has the highest DUI rate in the state of Kansas," Henry said.

Henry's plan involves the use of a local taxi cab or bus company. If that is not possible, cars could be leased and driven by student volunteers.

Two Kansas City beer corporations are interested in supporting such a program, Henry said, but a flat $10-15 fee would probably be required from all students at fee payment to support the plan.

Steeple people

K-State facilities roof-shop workers Richard Garcia and Roger Hegman, supervisor, place asphalt shingle on the Kedzie Hall steeple Thursday morning as other facilities workers repair the Anderson steeple. Both steeples were damaged in different storms — Kedzie Hall earlier this summer, and Anderson Hall last week. Workers said these two repair jobs are slowing the progress on the Ahearn Field House re-roofing job.

Of NASA, rats and guillotines

This time, NASA has gone too far.

Next month, in what is sure to cause a national fervor, the omnipotent space agency plans to decapitate five or six albino rats during a shuttle mission to study the effects of weightlessness on mammals.

To continue this sordid affair, scientists will kill and dissect another 48 rats upon returning to earth and another 100 from a control group.

This simply cannot be allowed to happen. The American taxpayers have shouldered the financial burden of NASA's rodent slaughterers for too long.

The healthy bill for this experiment includes $100 for a miniature guillotine to whack away at the little guys (they are all males). After the gruesome spectacle is over, the mission specialists will remove their brains, eyes, lungs, throats and bone marrow, among other organs. These ill-gotten remains will then be prodded by experts on earth.

"It's really a landmark that's going to put in perspective the last 20 years" of in-depth rat research in space, said Danny Riley, acting chairman of the cellular biology and anatomy department at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee. Oh, come on, Danny. If, after 20 years of research, NASA hasn't clued into what a few days whipping around the globe does to a bunch of rats, then the U. S. space program is in dire straits, indeed.

Rats of the world unite! Stop the senseless death, and make humans understand your position on this terrible issue. Until you do, your comrades will only continue to die in NASA's onslaught.

TOLES

Landlords also have deals to keep

I had to give a speech in one of my classes on Wednesday. Right in the middle, I started crying.

It was so embarrassing.

What was the speech about, you may ask?

Rental housing in Manhattan.

Some of the rental housing here is bad enough to make you cry (Preferably not in class, though). After what happened to me last year, I got a crash course in just how bad it can be.

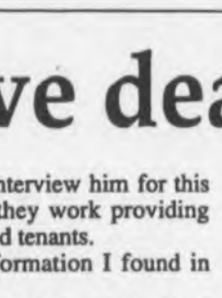
Last year, on Sept. 24 at 2 a.m., I woke up. I still have no idea why I did, but it saved my life. See, I lived in a duplex, and the other half was on fire. When I tried to explain this "event" to my class on Wednesday, I started to shake. I hadn't realized just how much it had, and still continues, to affect me.

So those images are continuing to go through my mind. I remember the sound of the cats as they hid under the bed. I remember knocking the screen in to get one of them out. I remember the scorched face of one of the others as the fireman held it.

Most of all, I remember one of the firemen telling me that if I had been asleep for 10 more minutes, the house could have exploded. The fire had started to melt a gas line that fed the floor furnace.

What I don't remember is the smoke detectors going off.

That's because they didn't. No batteries.



Then when the city code inspector showed up, my landlord got angry. She asked if I had called the inspector. I made it clear that I hadn't, and that when there is a fire, the city people just show up.

That's when I met a man by the name of Cornell Mayfield Jr. He works in the Department of Human Resources at City Hall. Recently, I went back to interview him for this column. He told me that they work providing information to landlords and tenants.

Here's some of the information I found in the packet he gave me.

According to K.S.A. 58-2550, "A landlord may not demand or receive a security deposit for an unfurnished dwelling unit in an amount or value in excess of one month's periodic rent."

This means that a landlord cannot ask you to pay more than one month's rent for a deposit for an unfurnished apartment. If the apartment is furnished, the amount of the deposit can be up to 1-1/2 times the amount of the monthly rent.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

According to K.S.A. 58-2564, "Material noncompliance by tenant; notice; termination of rental agreement; limitations...the landlord may deliver a written notice to the tenant specifying the acts and omissions constituting the breach and that the rental agreement will terminate upon a date not less than 30 days after the receipt of the notice if the breach is not remedied in 14 days."

What this means to you: This means that if your landlord said NO PETS in the lease, it still means NO PETS, but you can't be kicked out of the house in three days. You have 14 days to find another home for Fido/Puffy. If you don't, then you can be kicked out in 30 days.

The sad thing about all of this is people, especially students, still don't pay attention until it's too late. Like me, they have no idea they are protected by law until it's too late.

And I hadn't realized until Wednesday that I was so angry about it all.

But I am. I'm angry at the people who would, and still, risk people's lives for $400 a month. I'm angry at the apathy that causes me and other students to rent apartments, with no thought that they might die in the middle of the night from a gas leak, an explosion or from someone breaking in a door that won't lock.

It's only after the fire, after the rape, after the roaches get so bad that you see them during the day, that people get mad and say, "Why didn't someone tell me?!"

Well, someone is telling you now. Go see Cornell Mayfield in the basement of City Hall. Go see Dianne Urban or the Consumer Relations director in the SGA offices in the Union. They have information about laws that could save your life.

If you'll only listen.

▶ OFFICE SPACES

But will President Wefald have to grade essays as well?

Editor,

It's certainly a tragedy that Anderson Hall was struck by lightning, and we fully sympathize with the administrative offices that were displaced by the damage.

The Manhattan Mercury reports that Jon Wefald, among others, will not be able to return to his office until December. Unfortunately, the 50 graduate teaching assistants in the English Department are beginning to fear that we won't be moved into our new offices by that time, either.

Though it would have been the third move for us in as many years, after a year in the basement of Nichols Hall — where they used to store library books — we were eagerly looking forward to moving into our newly renovated offices in Denison Hall and returning to the bosom of the English Department.

We've got a problem. When lightning struck Anderson, Facilities was called off all other projects to respond to the emergency. Needless to say, the move from Nichols Hall didn't take place.

Now we've got three very nicely carpeted offices in Denison. We don't, however, have any furniture. It's all still waiting in the basement of Nichols, where they are rapidly building walls around it, as they renovate our former offices into laboratories. Our new offices have been finished since August 19, so in one sense we're in a better position than President Wefald and the Cashier's Office.

However, while those offices are being relocated, there's no place and no reason to relocate us. We've got the offices, we're just sitting around on the floor.

We're willing to cut a deal. President Wefald can come share our office space, as long as he recruits some Facilities workers to move our furniture.

Interim Dean making life difficult for Extension Services

Editor,

Now that all the faculty are back on campus, I would like you to be informed about an issue that has emerged during the summer.

Interim Dean Marc Johnson, acting as Director of the Cooperative Extension Service, has dramatically altered the organization. First, he dismissed Dr. Bill Eberle as leader of the Community Development Unit and assistant director of the Extension Service.

Finally, he has decided to decrease the number of Extension Specialists working in Community Development across Kansas by three. This frees up $170,000 and diminishes the staff of Community Development from 12 to nine, or by 25 percent. Thus, this provides more resources for extension programming in traditional agriculture, which is Marc Johnson's only priority.

As a C.D. Extension specialist and associate professor and your colleague, I want you to know that I and all of the C.D. Extension staff opposed these actions.

The only reason this type of dramatic shift in resources is possible can be explained by the fact that Cooperative Extension Services is held captive by the College of Agriculture. Yet the Extension Service is much broader than the college. It includes energy programs, Youth, Home Economics and Community Development programs.

It makes no more sense to have Extension under the direction of the Dean of Agriculture than it would to have the Continuing Education Unit under the Dean of the College of Education. Extension must be moved to be under a Vice Provost for Outreach.

Please talk to me and to President Jon Wefald and Provost Coffman about this needed change.

Extension Specialist in Community Economic Development

WEATHER

Campus flag indicates level of risk for heat injury

KIM DILLON
Collegian

The ever-changing weather in Kansas makes the possibility of heat injuries high.

It takes about two weeks for the body to get used to a different environment, making heat injuries likely.

"We've had five (cases of heat exhaustion) since last Monday the 16th," said Theresa Crubel, emergency department nursing coordinator at Saint Mary Hospital.

Crubel said heat injuries are most prevalent in July, August and September.

Five years ago, a heat stress advisory flag was put between Ahearn Field House and Durland Hall to make students aware of times heat injuries are likely. The flag is part of a heat stress advisory system.

Different colored flags represent different degrees of danger. A blue flag represents low risk, a yellow flag represents moderate risk, a red flag represents high risk, and a black flag means danger.

Guy Smith, director of the Eriksen Sports Medicine Clinic, said the flags are used by everybody from day-care providers to people going out to exercise.

The heat-stress factor is checked three times a day, at 11 a.m., 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. A wet bulb globe thermometer measures the factors that comprise heat stress levels, and the flags are changed according to the readings.

Humidity, air temperature and radiant heat are factors that are measured.

"Heat injury is totally preventable," Smith said.

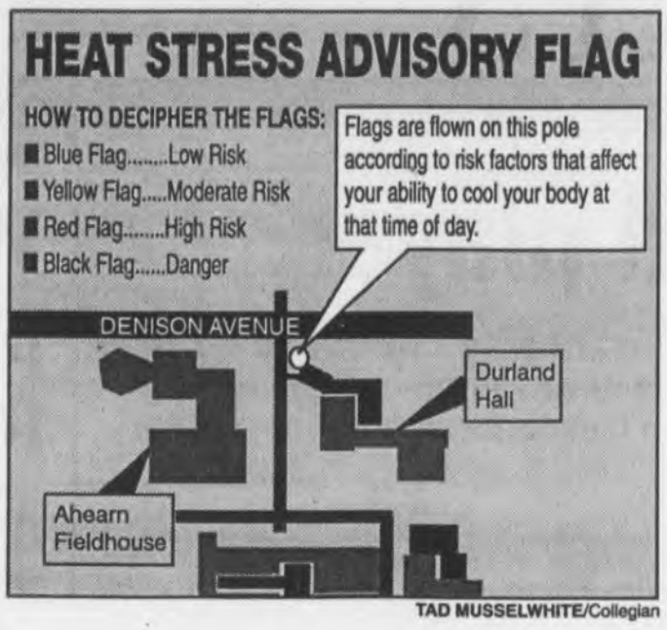
There are three general categories of heat injuries; heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

Heat cramps, which occur after exercising or being exposed to heat, are the least serious, Smith said. Getting out of the hot environment and drinking lots of liquids should relieve the injury.

The symptoms of heat exhaustion are dizziness, feeling light headed, nausea, elevated body temperature and feeling hot.

Heat exhaustion is more serious than heat cramps. Mild cases can be treated by drinking liquids, but more serious cases may require intravenous fluids.

Heat stroke is sometimes fatal, and it is considered a medical emergency. Victims may experience elevated temperatures of 104.5 degrees or higher, confusion and disorientation. Heat stroke can damage the kidney, liver, brain and muscles.



Heat stroke victims need to be transported to an emergency room immediately. Victims need to be cooled with ice or water, and they need intravenous fluid replacement.

"People may suddenly get a heat stroke. They don't necessarily get simple warning signs," Smith said.

Changing the time and place of exercise to early morning or late evening is one way to avoid the heat.

People who exercise need to wear appropriate clothing that will allow the body to cool. Rubber heat suits or clothing that makes the body sweat excessively should not be worn in severe heat.

School Colors.

In the years ahead, what kind of memories will you have when you see your school colors?

If you choose the Army National Guard, some of your best memories will probably be in different shades of green.

There was the green you earned to help pay for college by serving in the Army National Guard. Up to $6,840 in education assistance eligibility under the Montgomery GI Bill. And the ability to apply for a $1,500 enlistment bonus. Plus a minimum salary of $11,000 during the course of your enlistment.

Then there was the green you wore as you mounted roaring helicopters and powerful tanks. The green that hid you from the "enemy" in rugged terrain. And the green that represented your friends envy about the skills you were learning - in computers, electronics, communications and other technical fields.

All it took out of your college life was about two days a month and two weeks each year. But it was one unforgettable experience - and a lot of colorful memories.

Put Army National Guard in your college plans. Call:

Tennis gains international player

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Karina Kuregian traveled over seas from Armenia to attend K-State. Kuregian will participate in women's tennis for the Cats this year.

Coach Bietau fills one more void on tennis team after losing five players on last year's roster

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Karina Kuregian traveled over 8,000 miles to Manhattan.

And she is here to stay — at least for now.

Kuregian is a native of Armenia, a former Republic of the Soviet Union who turned down offers to attend Arizona State and Tennessee in order to attend K-State.

The 5-foot-9 right-hander was a member of the Armenian National Team and won the Soviet Union Cup in 1991 in the doubles division.

Bietau lost five players from his squad that finished fifth in the Big Eight a year ago.

Two players will be back from last season, and Kuregian is the third international player to sign with K-State this season, compared with a single player from Kansas, Nicole Lagerstrom of Olathe. Maria Uson, a sophomore, and Maritine Shrubsole, a junior, return this year.

Coach Bietau said goals are not high on Kuregian's list right now because it will be a much different environment for her to ajust to.

"College is a new system for her," he said, taking time to think about the question.

"She said she has hopes of being nationally ranked someday. She'll hopefully help us out this year to be competitive."

While she competes for K-State, Kuregian will be trying get a better grip of the English language.

"English," Bietau said instantly when the question of what Kuregian was studying arose. "She really doesn't have time for anything else right now."

Kuregian has hobbies, however, even with her hectic lifestyle.

"Jigsaw puzzles," she said.

"I just brought three of them, and my roommate said I was crazy." Kuregian said.

Kuregian said she likes playing soccer as well.

"I just enjoy it."

Kuregian said she learned tennis at an early age — 5.

"My father was a tennis coach, and it seemed like the natural thing to do."

Tennis seems to run in the Kuregian family. She has an older sister who played tennis and coaches in Armenia.

Kuregian said one reason she chose K-State was the friendly people in Manhattan. She also said she liked Bietau's personality.

"That'll change in about two weeks after practice starts," Bietau said.

Kuregian was hesitant to say much about American life.

"It's all so different," she said after a pause.

One thing she would talk about was people. She said, for instance, that people are more willing to speak.

"You can ask directions from people in Europe and they just say 'I don't know,' but here people really seem to care about what you say," Kuregian said.

"Things have changed so much in Armenia in the last four or five years that people have to be just so concerned about their own survival."

Writer offers predictions for fall sports

It's the beginning of another school year, which means K-State athletics soon will be in full swing again. So, as a law-abiding sportswriter, I offer my predictions for the 1993-94 athletic year.

The Wildcat football team shows up late for its first game of the year because it was locked in the new indoor practice facility the night before.

Coach Bill Snyder, on his way to winning national Coach of the Year honors, uses 10 defensive backs with only one down lineman as an "experiment" in the second half against New Mexico State. This strategy pushes a four-point first half lead out to a 25-point victory on three interception returns for touchdowns by Jaime Mendez.

Bob LEHMAN

The K-State Marching Band, under first-year director Dr. Frank Tracz, opens its season with a bang on Band Day when it plays the 1812 Overture with the Howitzers pointed into the stadium. The official reason given for the change is to "achieve a greater musical effect."

In a bizarre incident, Willie Wildcat is accused of pushing the two Jayhawk mascots off the top of the new five-story press box. He is quoted as saying, "I could have sworn they could fly," as he is carted off to his holding cell.

Using the 10 defensive back line-up almost exclusively, K-State wins the Big Eight with a record of 9-2. In the Orange Bowl, Mendez and Thomas Randolph combine for five interceptions and five touchdowns in the first half. K-State's opponent, the Miami Hurricanes, are so confused they refuse to come out of their locker room for the second half. It is rumored that coach Dennis Erickson will quit to coach the Phoenix Cardinals.

Despite their 35-point victory against Miami, the Cats do not earn the No. 1 ranking. It is believed they unfairly used a "gimmick defense."

At the Big Eight championship cross country meet, the K-State harriers choose to run barefoot rather than wear Nikes in the face of possible NCAA sanctions against the team involving former head coach, John Capriotti.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics finally listens to the student body and schedules three basketball games in Ahearn Field House.

In a publicity foul-up, the men's basketball team shows up for Midnight Madness to an empty Bramlage Coliseum while 10,000 fans wait for things to get started at Ahearn.

Continuing on the success of last year, the basketball Cats go undefeated in their "tougher" preseason schedule. Rumors are still floating, however, about the security of Dana Altman's job.

After everyone but him fouls out, Anthony Beane takes on the entire KU basketball team and is fouled as he sinks a 3-pointer at the buzzer. He makes his free throw, and K-State beats the Hawks at home for the first time in 10 years, 115-114.

K-State defeats Michigan in the 1994 national championship basketball game. Rumors about Dana Altman's firing continue to circulate.

Baseball coach Mike Clark announces the beginning of construction on the baseball team's new home field: the Sunflower Dome. He says it is necessary for "recruiting purposes" and to "compete effectively." With this announcement, the entire Wichita State baseball team officially transfers to K-State.

Be sure to save this column. This is all going to happen.

Trust me.

'New breed' of linebackers settle in; depth still a question

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Brooks Barta, Brent Venables and Chris Patterson racked up 452 tackles — 39 percent of K-State's tackles — in their last year of eligibility at the linebacker position last year. The trio piled up 862 tackles in their careers.

Coach Bill Snyder said the losses of the seniors hurt, but the problem at that position is depth.

"There have been some concerns at linebacker position because of the loss of three starters," Snyder said. "I have felt quite strongly about the youngsters in our program. My concern is how deep we will be.

"Right now, I'd say that we are one to two players away from having a solid two-deep at the linebacker spot," he said. "We haven't reached the point we can have six players that can step up and play."

Snyder said he will start juniors Laird Veatch and Kirby Hocutt and sophomore Percell Gaskins against New Mexico State.

"These three guys are a different type of linebacker, but by the same token, I think they are effective, and I'm not concerned at this time," Snyder said. "We haven't been as quick as we are now."

Veatch and Hocutt are two-time letter-winners who have played behind Barta, Venables and Patterson.

"Laird plays very hard — he is real competitive," Snyder said of Veatch, who redshirted last season after being the fifth-leading tackler among Cat linebackers in 1991.

Junior linebacker Mike Ekeler said Veatch and Hocutt ought to be recognized for their efforts from the previous seasons.

"Hocutt and Veatch aren't getting the press they should," Ekeler said. "They are hard workers on the field. They'll get us ready to play Sept. 4 for the game."

Gaskins gets national attention

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State's best kept secret has been let out.

Linebacker and high jumper Percell Gaskins will become nationally known to sports readers when an article about the two-sport athlete will appear in this week's issue of Sports Illustrated.

The article written by Michael Jaffe describes Gaskins' high jumping career in Daytona Beach, Fla., to winning the NCAA Indoor high jump championship earlier this year.

Teammate Mike Ekeler said he has a tendency to be vocal during practice.

"Percell gets us a going," Ekeler said in a recent interview. "I'm excited for the opportunity to be on the same team with him. I have total respect for him.

"Percell is the best player in America."

Gaskins said he gives 100 percent when he is jumping or on the field.

"I like to do the best I can do," Gaskins said. "If I don't, I'm cheating myself and my teammates. If I don't work hard, I don't start. I can't settle for No. 2. No one will remember you — the No. 2 player."

Gaskins won the Big Eight Indoor high jump with a leap of 7' 2- 1/2', then captured the NCAA Indoor title and a school record with a jump of 7' 5-1/4' — the best by a collegiate and the fifth-highest jump by an American during the 1993 indoor track season.

Gaskins has run the 40-yard dash in 4.4 seconds, has a 37-inch vertical jump and has a body fat measurement of only 3.3 percent on his 215-pound frame.

He signed with the University of Tennessee but had trouble with his transcript and went to Northwest Oklahoma State in 1991.

Gaskins played eight games as a defensive back and collected 23 tackles, 15 of them were solo.

On the Northwest Oklahoma State track team, he leaped 7'-1' and won conference titles in the high jump, long jump, 200 meters and mile relay.

He moved to K-State last year, but he had to sit out because of NCAA laws on transfer athletes. Gaskins said he is ready to play after sitting out the 1992 season.

"I'm tired of hitting our guys," he said. "But it is worth the wait. I'm ready to hit someone else."

INTRAMURALS

Activities begin at Rec Complex

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is starting off the 1993-94 school year opening its doors and services to any K-State fee-paying student.

Assistant Director of intramurals Bryan Skinner said more than 400,000 students used the Recreational Services last year due to a large number participating in intramurals.

"We offer a wide variety of team and individual sports that many resident halls, fraternities, sororities and independents participate in," Skinner said.

Teams who wish to compete must enter their team before the deadline, a time they wish to play, and pay an entry fee of $10.00, he said.

The individual entry fee is $1.00.

Skinner said one of the most accepted additions to the program was the start of the Top 10 list last year.

"What we did was devise a ranking system according to team's records in the leagues," he said. "The top-ranked team from each league would then advance to playoffs.

"This gives the teams a better idea of who they're up against and who they need to beat to advance," he said.

With flag football starting Sept. 1, Skinner said first Top 10 list will be out Monday.

Skinner said he predicts the winner will be Tau Kappa Epsilon, who won all-University last year.

TKE intramural chairman Clint Barger said they will have as good a chance of winning the all-University again this year.

"We did lose some seniors, but we have a very strong pledge class who may jump right in and take on some key positions," Barger said.

Other individual sports being offered Sept. 2 are handball, racquetball, horseshoes, tennis, badminton and doubles volleyball.

Skinner said finding a time to play a sport shouldn't be a problem with the amount of hours the Rec Complex is open.

"We tried to make our hours convenient for the students," he said.

The Rec Complex hours are from 6 a.m. to midnight on weekdays, 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday, and noon to midnight on Sunday.

Skinner said he is ready for intramurals to get into full swing.

"We're looking forward to serving the students this year and hope to see a large percentage of them participating in team and individual sports," Skinner said..

Royals down Twins 3-0

KANSAS CITY (AP) — If Minnesota manager Tom Kelly had his way, Kansas City Royals left-hander Mike Magnante would have stayed in Omaha all season.

"All he has to do is throw his glove out there to beat us," Kelly said after Magnante pitched seven shutout innings in the Royals' 3-0 victory over the Twins on Thursday.

Making only his second start since being recalled Aug. 17 from Omaha, Magnante (1-1) allowed six hits, struck out two and walked none in gaining his first victory since Sept. 7, 1992, when he beat Toronto in relief.

Magnante's seven shutout innings lowered his earned run average against the Twins to a microscopic 0.32. He's given up just one earned run on 21 hits in 28 innings against Minnesota.

Kevin McReynolds and Greg Gagne provided the offensive support with four of the five Royals' hits off loser Willie Banks (8-9), who struck out eight and walked two in seven inings.

McReynolds hit his eighth home run of the season, a drive deep into the leftfield bleachers, in the second inning and gave the Royals a 2-0 lead in the fourth with an RBI single following a double by Joyner.

McReynolds went to third on Gagne's double to right and scored on Chico Lind's sacrifice fly for a 3-0 lead.

"McReynolds has hit Banks well (5 for 7), that's why we had him in there," Royals Manager Hal McRae said."You don't need a lot of hits if you get production and that's what he gave us tonight."

Magnante allowed no more than one hit in any inning and only one Twins' runner got as far as second base, Kirby Puckett on a two-out double in the first.

"I was able to throw my fastball on the inside and got all four of my pitches for strikes," said Magnante, who threw just 70 piches, 52 for strikes.

Dave Winfield collected the 2,985th hit of his career, a two-out single in the seventh for the Twins.

It was only the fifth hit in the last 41 times at bat for the veteran designated hitter.

▶HASKELL SETTLES DISPUTE OUT OF COURT

There will not be a court trial for junior distance runner David Haskell, who was charged with battery of a law enforcement officer and obstruction of legal process.

Barry Wilkerson, the prosecuting attorney for the case, said the trial was resolved, but action will be taken against Haskell.

"There was an informal agreement between his attorney and the county attorney," Wilkerson said.

"I can't say what will happen for another month, but I know he didn't get off scott-free."

Wilkerson said if Haskell had gone to trial, he could have faced one year in jail.

According to the police reports on May 6, seven nude men were running down Moro Street in Aggieville around 12:40 a.m.

A Riley County Police officer grabbed one subject who ran by him, and he was struck by several others, knocking the officer down.

A chase ensued down Moro, and Haskell was caught.

Track coach Cliff Rovelto was out of town and was unavailable for comment.

▶MORRISON TO FIGHT WILLIAMS ON NATION TELEVISION

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The road to unifying the heavyweight division continues for Tommy Morrison with a nationally televised fight Monday night.

Morrison and Williams fought each other in 1989 when both were starring in Sylvester Stallone's "Rocky V."

Morrison played the aspiring young boxer named Tommy Gunn and Williams portrayed Gunn's opponent.

While the Morrison camp guaranteed a victory during a Thursday press conference in Kansas City, Williams was a no-show after missing an early flight from Houston.

Top Rank promoter Bob Arum said Monday's card will include four heavyweight fights and will be televised live by ESPN. The event is blacked out in the Kansas City area.

Morrison (36-1, 32 knockouts) captured the WBO crown in June by decision over former world champion George Foreman.

Williams (21-3, 12 knockouts) knocked out Rich Horde in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on Aug. 5.

Morrison, 24, is in line to meet World Boxing Council champion Lennox Lewis in March to unify two heavyweight titles.

Snyder said he has been pleased with Gaskins' effort.

"I think he is an extremely fine athlete," Snyder said of Gaskins, who sat out a season since he transferred from Northwest Oklahoma State.

"He is an emotional player who loves the game."

"He has a tremendous work ethic," Ekeler said.

"He gets the players excited for practice. He is going to be a great player."

After the starters and Ekeler, there are three freshmen — Paul Magana, Darren Holmes and DeShawn Foggle.

"We've got a nice group of guys that have a lot of talent and speed," Gaskins said.

"We respect each other's ability to play when we're together."

Church fined $9 million in 11-year-old's death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — The Christian Science Church was ordered Wednesday to pay $9 million in punitive damages to the father of an 11-year-old boy who died in a diabetic coma without medical treatment.

The boy died as his mother prayed.

The same jury returned a $5.2-million damage award last week in the wrongful death lawsuit filed by the boy's biological father against his ex-wife and her husband, the church and several church representatives.

District Judge Sean Rice said the Boston-based church was the only one of seven defendants that could be held liable for punitive damages.

Ian Lundman died May 9, 1989, after falling into a diabetic coma and urinating and vomiting uncontrollably.

His father, Douglass Lundman, said the boy could have been successfully treated two hours before his death.

"I'm hoping this verdict will send a message and other children will be saved," Lundman said after the verdict was returned in Hennepin County District Court.

Attorneys for the boy's mother and stepfather, Kathleen and William McKown, said they acted reasonably in light of their faith when they prayed rather than calling an ambulance for the dying boy.

The church teaches that prayer and Bible reading can cure illness and are incompatible with medicine.

The father's attorney, James Kaster, said he sought punitive damages against only the church because the nurse and other church representatives were acting as agents of the church.

William Christopher, an attorney for the church, said he didn't know whether the church would appeal. He had argued that punitive damages were not appropriate.

"They believed — they honestly believed — that they were doing the best for Ian that they knew how," he told the jury.

Christopher also told the jury the church heard the message of the earlier award.

"The church takes very seriously your verdict of $5.2 million," he said.

The case was the first in which a wrongful-death lawsuit resulted in damages against the Christian Science Church. Legal experts said the initial damage award raised difficult questions about religious freedom and children's rights.

Juror forewoman Judy Hanks of Minneapolis said jurors intended to send a message to the church to change its policies.

"The real issue for me was that a child didn't have a choice," she said.

"I don't think it was about practicing religion — it was more about providing health care."

The jury's award last week was for Lundman's loss of companionship because of his son's death.

Minnesota's Supreme Court threw out manslaughter charges against the McKowns in 1991, based on a state law protecting parents who act in good faith in relying on prayer to heal their children.

▶THREAT FROM FLOOD WILL AFFECT ROADS FOR 2 TO 3 WEEKS

Leftovers from last month's flood have resulted in traffic being restricted in 25 different areas in the city.

Sink holes and standing water threaten seven areas in Riley county and most of Tuttle Creek State park are also restricted.

No buildings have been threatened by the sink holes, Bruce McCallum, director of Manhattan public works, said.

"We have closed off all the areas where there have been problems," he said.

The high water table means there will still be a threat in the area for another two to three weeks, McCallum said.

"I believe we have the situation stabilized," he said.

The county has not had to close any roads because of sink holes, but have had to close several rural roads near Tuttle Creek Reservoir due to flood damage, Rod Meredith, assistant director of Riley County public works, said.

Meredith said the lack of sink holes in the county could be contributed to the smaller number of underground utility lines in the area.

The county had as many as 42 roads closed due to the flood, but most have been cleared and repaired, he said.

Of the seven roads that are still closed, some are still under water, Meredith said.

Most of the county's flood repairs will entail area roads and bridges, he said.

"We are still trying to get a description of the damage," he said.

▶ILLINOIS BLOOD BANK NOTIFIES DONORS OF INCONCLUSIVE AIDS TEST

GLENVIEW, Ill. (AP) — A blood bank has decided to notify 2,000 donors in the Chicago metropolitan area that they had inconclusive test results for the AIDS virus.

LifeSource Blood Services began to contact the donors in July and tell them of the inconclusive test results between 1987 and 1992, which caused the organization to discard the blood they donated.

"For years, we chose not to unduly alarm anyone," LifeSource president Patrick Morand said. "Then this year, our medical advisory committee recommended that we tell people

"Some are full of glee that their blood will be used again. Others are very upset with us," Morand said.

Patricia Grote of LifeSource said blood that shows some reactive signs on the first test, the Elisa test, is immediately given another test, known as the Western Blot.

The 2,000 donors' results were inconclusive on the second test.

Blood from donors who had inconclusive results could not be used for most purposes under strict federal Food and Drug Administration regulations until April 1992, when an FDA program allowed their blood to be used if the donors were retested more than six months after the inconclusive tests and were HIV-negative.

LifeSource, an independent nonprofit corporation based in a Chicago suburb, provides blood to hospitals and medical centers in the Midwest.

BY STEVEN ROCK

Curse the pathetic fool who leaves wrinkles!

In Lincoln, Neb., a local department store and a German iron manufacturer recently sponsored an iron-man contest of literal proportions: male contestants had to iron — as in wrinkled shirts. The contest was sponsored as part of a fall bridal fair. Brides-to-be were allowed to cheer on grooms-to-be, but they couldn't help.

None of the three entrants finished ironing their shirts in the allotted three minutes, but a panel of judges said Darren Nelson of Lincoln did the best job in the contest. He won, imaginatively enough, a new iron.

Nelson, who claims he's been doing his own ironing for the past five years, said the crowd — not the task — made him nervous.

The crowd? Watching men iron clothes?

And you thought that iron-man thing was bad

What is it with goofy contests plaguing the Midwest?

Weekend doesn't know what's more pathetic, that the contest actually takes place in the first place, or that the same man has won for the second year in a row.

Harry Goosen of Cole Camp (you know, one of those cities that has a Casey's General Store) won more than $500 on Aug. 23, bringing his career earnings in the Super Farmer He-Man Contests to nearly $1,000.

What does one do to prove his Super Farmer He-Man worth?

Goosen, 36, spent two hours throwing a dozen bales of hay, slopping pigs, gathering eggs, driving a steel post into the ground, guessing the weight of a steer and getting his wife ready for a night on the town. Sources couldn't confirm whether or not the latter two were related.

The competition tested the men's strength and pitted them against the clock in seven farm-oriented events.

Has any football team ever scored 100 points?

Weekend can think of few better ways to spend a Saturday afternoon than watching a KU team — any KU team — get publicly humiliated.

It's with that in mind that we anxiously await tomorrow's Kickoff Classic, in which KU plays the No. 1-ranked Florida State Seminoles. The line for the game is 26 points.

"People lose sight of the fact that this game is supposed to be fun," Jayhawk coach Glen Mason says. "The worst thing that can happen is we lose."

Wrong, Coach. The worst thing that can happen is that you can lose by, oh, 60 or 70 points, thereby sending your team in a massive tailspin and embarrassing the Kansas football program in front of the entire country.

If that's your idea of fun, knock your socks off, Glen.

Of course, there's always the temptation to root for the Hawks in the hopes that they make the Big Eight look good.

Nah.

See what they teach us in journalism school?

Call it a genuine effort to reach out and touch our readers. For no apparent reason, Weekend has opted to randomly call campus pay phones and, well, just chat. We don't know if this has any reader appeal, nor do we particularly care. But we're going to do it anyway.

Answerer: John Morris.
Year and major: Freshman, undecided.

Q. Why did you answer the phone?
A. "Because it was annoying."
Q. How was the first week of classes?
A. "Fine." (Well said, John.)
Q. Do you have any weekend plans?
A. "Not yet, but I'll probably find something to do. I just don't know yet."
Q. What's your favorite Manhattan bar?
A. "The Lou. I mean, Aggie Lounge."
Q. Do you realize that you're not old enough to drink?
A. "I don't drink. I just play darts." (We know, John. We know.)

WEEKEND

Aggieville Alternatives

For those new to Manhattan or those who are needing some new alternatives to the same ol' movie, the Aggieville scene might be overlooking a few areas.

The spillway area at Tuttle Creek Dam was once a dirt model of cycle trails. Recent flooding, though, has turned the dirt biker's dream into a wasteland of rock and debris.

Now, it's a geologist's dream.

"It's a good opportunity to see rock that is clearly exposed, whether you're a geologist or not," Tom Olszewski, graduate student in geology, said.

"For non-geologists, it's an area of scenic interest to look at different rocks, collect fossils or have a picnic."

Hundreds of spectators have flocked to the area, where sinkholes and waterfalls are amidst the numerous types of limestone and rock formations.

"I heard all about the flooding in Manhattan on the news this summer, and one of the first things I did after I moved into the dorm was go out to the spillway. It's the most incredible thing I've ever seen," Jenny Kitchell, freshman undecided, said.

Other areas of scenic interest include Manhattan Hill, Pillsbury Crossing and Frank Anneberg Park.

Manhattan Hill is located off the northern end of Juliette Street on Bluemont Scenic Drive. The hill offers an immense view of the city, in addition to the letters of Manhattan, which can be used to sit on and take in the sight.

Located off Pillsbury Drive on K-177, Pillsbury Crossing is a rock area surrounded by ankle-deep water, perfect for lying in the sun or playing frisbee with your dog.

"I bring my Lab out here pretty often to let her run around and play catch. It's a good place to get a little sun and a little water without the beach," Rob Schneider, Junction City, said.

Frank Anneberg Park, one of the newer parks in Manhattan, offers sports as well as scenery. This park contains soccer and baseball fields and is located next to Anderson Avenue.

Other unique aspects to this park, not found in any other Manhattan parks, are the man-made pond and ducks wading on the shoreline in the spring.

"With a 5-acre lake area, the public can fish, read a book or just come lay in the sun by the shore," Terry DeWeese, director of parks and recreation, said.

"As an example of the spectators the park can draw, we have over 20 tournaments — soccer and softball — a year, with at least 1,200 participants."

If scenery and tranquil settings don't sound appealing, two out-of-the-way bars may be the answer to a fun evening.

The Fish Bowl and the Gin Mill Lounge both offer sedate atmospheres dripping with character, far from the Aggieville norm.

Both bars are located close to the mall — the Fish Bowl at 105 N. Third and the Gin Mill at 317 Poyntz Ave.

The Fish Bowl offers large "fish bowl" glasses of beers on tap, in addition to a unique atmosphere in which it isn't impossible to get from one end of the bar to the other.

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

Not many performers could pull off what Nanci Griffith and John Prine did in Kansas City Tuesday night.

Playing on a stage devoid of special effects, amplifiers and even a backing band, Griffith and Prine, both alone and together, captivated the crowd and sent them home with songs on their tongues.

Prine opened the show to warm applause from the audience. Standing alone, with only an acoustic guitar strapped around his waist and a cigarette dangling from his lips, he launched into a 45-minute set that encompassed all of the crowd's favorite songs and a lot of story-telling.

Prine's song "Illegal Smile" opened with him telling how he used to be a postman in Chicago and would make up songs along his route. Prine recalled how lucky it was that his musical talent was discovered, as the last thing the world needs is another disgruntled postal employee.

But Prine showed a more sensitive side as well. The audience became completely silent when Prine played "All the Best" off his last album, "Jesus: The Missing Years."

After closing his set with the song "Hello in There," Prine departed the stage to a standing ovation. When he returned, he brought Nanci Griffith with him.

Griffith harmonized as Prine sang "Sabu Visits the Twin Cities Alone," and they then traded verses on "That's the Way That the World Goes Round." Griffith's clear voice meshed perfectly with Prine's three-pack-a-day growl.

After opening with "Trouble in the Fields," Griffith said she was nervous about performing alone without the benefit of her backing band. But during her performance, any doubts about her ability to hold an audience armed only with her voice and an acoustic guitar were quickly erased.

Drawing mostly on material from her past four albums, Griffith's guitar playing and voice showed an amazing range of expression.

"Love at the Five and Dime" sounded as sweet as any love song could sound. Both Griffith's voice and guitar were crystal clear.

But the flip side of love was showed in "Outbound Plane." Suzy Boggus, who took the Griffith-penned song to No. 1 on the country charts, recorded a version that sounded bittersweet.

Griffith's version, however, was angry and full of the rage that all people who end relationships go through.

Songs from Griffith's latest album — "Other Voices, Other Rooms" — were prominently featured throughout the show. The album, a tribute to the folk music that inspired Griffith as a youngster, features a virtual bonanza of country and folk stars singing along with Griffith.

But even without the help of guest stars, Griffith brought the audience to complete silence during the Townes Van Zant song "Tecumseh Valley," off the album.

Much like Prine, Griffith also had amusing stories to tell. But Griffith, who has always worn her causes on her sleeves, also got political without getting preachy.

"Deadwood South Dakota" was sent out to imprisoned Native American activist Leonard Peltier in the hopes that he receives a pardon. "It's a Hard Life" was sent out with the hopes of teaching children to be tolerant of different races.

The show closed with Prine re-emerging to join Griffith in singing the Prine-penned "Speed at the Sound of Loneliness." After a sing-along version of "I Can't Help but Wonder Where I'm Bound," the show ended with another Prine song, "Mulenberg County."

Nanci Griffith once wrote that the truest test of any song is whether it can stand the test of being played by one person with one guitar.

With that as the grading scale, both Griffith and Prine passed with flying colors.

'Unforgiven' sends anti-violence message

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

UNFORGIVEN
■ Showing at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. today and Saturday in Forum Hall at the K-State Union. Cost is $1.75.

Clint Eastwood's highly acclaimed film "Unforgiven" is without a doubt a new style of American western. It proves to be about something other than just good vs. evil.

After the victimization of a prostitute and the lenient sentencing of her assailants, townswomen in Big Whiskey, Wyo., feel there is nowhere to turn but to a hired assassin.

Despite having retired from his old ways of cold-blooded vigilantism, Will Munny (Clint Eastwood) is enticed to return to the game for one last kill. So he and his two partners in crime, Ned (Morgan Freeman) and the Schofield Kid leave Kansas for Big Whiskey in order to avenge the unforgiven slaying.

But Big Whiskey is no simple town. In fact, a town ordinance clearly prohibits firearms, which proves a difficult obstacle for gun-slinging cowboys. Even more, Sheriff Little Bill (Gene Hackman) exercises his authority in violent and humiliating forms of punishment. This is sure to be no easy kill.

"Unforgiven" has a definite anti-violence message. However, because of such clarity, the film loses momentum at times and turns somewhat preachy.

Details are overemphasized. For instance, the camera spends too much time focusing on Ned's wife Sally's discontented countenance upon noticing Will's rifle. Even so, a following scene, as Ned departs with Will, is poignantly real. In that scene, the tension between Sally and Ned is effectively portrayed without words and without a contrived facial expression by either of the two actors.

This film is also about self-evaluation. As Will states, "Just because I'm going on this killing don't mean I'm going back to the way I was." Remorse has a very strong presence in Will's retrospective realizations.

"Unforgiven" creates a very powerful awareness of the traumatic effects of violence as the principal characters learn about themselves.

Even with its all-too-apparent symbolism and tired mockery of Will's lack of youth, the film successfully captures the audience's attention by chronicling the journey to self-discovery in an entertaining fashion. At the end of the film, there emerges no true winner. No black or white.

We are left pondering whether or not to respect Will Munny by default, simply because of how heinous the antagonists' criminal actions were. "Unforgiven" is a new genre. It is a violent western with a conscience.

TELEVISION

Letterman, Leno engage in 'Late Show' war

ASSOCIATED PRESS

For many viewers, it may seem only a matter of weeks since David Letterman said adios to NBC. It may seem like only a couple of months that they have had to make do with reruns from 11 1/2 years of "Late Night" archives. It may seem that way because the calendar proves it's been just a fleeting 66 days since the smash "Late Night" finale June 25.

But what has festered seemingly forever — at least, since NBC hurt Letterman's feelings in June 1991 by spurning him in favor of Jay Leno's succeeding Johnny Carson — has led to a showdown that begins Monday night.

CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman" against NBC's "Tonight Show with Jay Leno" — the long-awaited, much-hyped main event in what the abiding media have christened "the Late-Night Wars."

The temporal arena in which this war will be waged is known in the industry as "11:30" (actually 11:35 p.m. EDT), and found on your TV screen.

May the best man win!

Of course, other men (and they are all men) will be in the ring, too.

The senior player on the late-night scene is Ted Koppel of ABC's "Nightline." The syndicated "Arsenio Hall Show" will continue to air in many cities at that same hour. And Sept. 7, "The Chevy Chase Show" kicks off in the 11 p.m. to midnight EDT slot on the Fox network.

In what borders on gab-show gridlock, all of this late-night fare will be vying for a share of a nearly $700 million annual advertising purse.

Hoping to cash in, too, will be Conan O'Brien, the famously unknown young comic who inherits Letterman's 12:35 a.m. EDT slot come Sept. 13, as well as whoever signs on for CBS' 12:35 hour (Garry Shandling, a favorite for the post, recently announced other plans).

But Monday night, only Jay and Dave will really matter in Late-Night Land.

In this corner, from Studio 1 at NBC in Burbank, Calif., Leno, 43, earning a reported $3 million per year, and fortified by a new set and opening unveiled last week, will bring on as his guests country singer Garth Brooks and "Beverly Hills 90210" heartthrob Luke Perry.

And in that corner, from CBS' Studio 50 in the freshly restored Ed Sullivan Theater in the heart of Manhattan, Letterman, 46, earning a reported $14 million per year, will bring on musician Billy Joel and actor-comic Bill Murray.

DING!

If it seems that coverage of this faceoff belongs not on the TV page but in the sports section, the two prime contenders frame their rivalry in live-and-let-live terms.

"We're not worried about ('Tonight')," said Letterman recently, "as much as trying to do a pretty entertaining show."

"It's all good sport," said Leno last week. "Dave's a gentleman. We'll have fun."

When asked if he'll be thinking about his opponent when he steps before the cameras this Monday afternoon, Leno laughed.

"You do your best work when somebody's breathing down your neck, don't you?" he said. "But we're not a new show coming on. We do this every day."

Despite such politeness, handicappers already are hard at work. Letterman himself is part of the CBS camp busily arguing that it's not a fair fight and portraying "Late Show" as the underdog.

"We're at a vast disadvantage, for the time being," he said.

If so, it's because one-third of CBS' affiliates initially will delay airing "Late Show" by a half-hour or more to accommodate syndicated programming. That, while virtually none of NBC's affiliates delay "Tonight."

With fewer and fewer people watching TV as the night wears on, even a half-hour lag translates into a loss of one full rating point. According to this logic, Letterman will lose some 300,000 TV homes until months down the line, when more CBS stations clear the 11:35 p.m. slot for him.

In the meantime, according to an advertising campaign NBC began this summer, "America is standing up for Jay." CBS launched its own campaign with the theme: "Same Dave. Better time. New station."

MUSIC

Soundtrack has legends, new acts

The soundtrack to Dominique Sena's film "Kalifornia" serves as a primer to some of the legends of alternative music, as well as a showcase for some of the up-and-coming acts of today.

Sena, who got his start directing music videos, has used his experience in the music world in selecting the film's soundtrack. The soundtrack CD includes tracks from big-name acts like X, Drivin-N-Cryin and the Soup Dragons, as well as several lesser-known bands such as Quicksand and The Indians.

Drivin-N-Cryin adds a respectable acoustic blues number to the album in "When You Come Back." The song sounds something like over-produced Bob Dylan, with a funky little bass riff behind it.

Three of the bands on the album fit into what I would venture to call the Grunge/Metal genre: Mind Bomb, Quicksand and Therapy?, any of whom could, with the proper MTV airplay and marketing, replace Stone Temple Pilots as the current reigning demi-god of the "Seattle Sound."

However, what stands out on the recording the most are two songs from a band called The Indians. In the opinion of my long-haired roommate, this band "kicks butt." Primarily acoustic, but not afraid to grunge a little, this band should catch the ear of fans of everyone from the Indigo Girls to Concrete Blonde.

Lead vocalist Angelique Bianca has a smooth feminine voice juxtaposed with raw acoustical guitars and harmonica in the track "I Love the World." In the middle of the song, she steps aside. Then, after the harder stuff kicks in for 90 seconds or so, it returns to the song's more traditional roots.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You must fight for what you believe in today. People in hell want ice water, that doesn't mean they get it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22) — You have the taste of a water buffalo. It's time to revamp the wardrobe.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Men and women can't be just friends. What you think is a platonic friendship is turning into something more.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Don't patronize bunny rabbits. Tonight: Go to a party. It'll be very.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.19) — Join the dark side. It is your destiny. You know this to be true.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Time marches on, and before long you realize it's marching across your face. Invest in moisturizing lotion now.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Carpe Diem. Sieze the day — great things are in store for you. Tonight: Smoke a cigar and dance around in a circle.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you played by the rules today, you'd be in P.E. right now. Enjoy the last days of summer.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you give in to hate, forever will it dominate your destiny. Tonight: Reduce your stress. Pardon our french, but if a lump of coal was shoved up your butt, in a week, it would be a diamond.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Gather ye rosebuds while ye may. Tonight: Gather your courage and ask before the moment passes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Read the last page of all your text books. That way if you die, you'll know how they end.Tonight: Do the Hokey Pokey and turn yourself around. Hey! That's what it's all about.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Happiness is found where you least expect it. There's no place like home ... there's no place like home (repeat one more time and call your mother.)

Hidden smoking habit breeds distrust

Welcome to Cassandra, the Collegian's own advice column about love, lifestyles and relationships.

Dear Cassandra,

During this summer, I started dating this tall, gorgeous guy, who has a great personality, is a little on the quiet side and who is really nice to me.

We have known each other since January, and he always appeared to be the clean-cut, honest type — until recently.

Last week, I found out he has been hiding his smoking habit from me. He knows I despise the bad habit, and he has overheard me getting on my sister's case.

Of course, my feelings have not changed. The fact is he has been going behind my back all summer. What if he is hiding something else? Should I trust him?

Also, how should I let him know that I now know of his habit? (Because one of his friends narc'ed on him.) I would like to catch him in the act, or just see how long he plays this little game. I am open to suggestions.

Sincerely,
Left in the Dark

Dear Out in Left Field,

So yer boyfriend's been smokin' in the boyz room.

How awful for you.

I mean, nicotine is a "gateway drug" and all. He'll probably be smoking crack sometime next week.

Lord.

And what's with this "clean-cut" crap? So now he's a sleazy underworld character because he smokes?

It's obvious your boyfriend didn't tell you about his smoking because he knew you'd condemn him. He was just avoiding your anti-smoking tirade.

I'd venture to say there are other things you don't know about him. He probably doesn't feel comfortable being the real him around you, because you're not open to it. You want the perfect cookie-cutter boyfriend.

Unfortunately, there's likely some really great stuff you're missing out on. Your communication with each other is clearly lacking.

Maybe you should check out the local boy scout troop. I'm sure there are plenty of perfect little boys for you to pick from.

CNS moves out of Cardwell

"Despite the hectic times, everything has gone very well."
ROBERT KRUH
UNIVERSITY VICE PROVOST

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Computing and Networking Services is in the process of moving from Cardwell Hall, where it has been housed for 30 years, to Fairchild and Nichols halls.

The physics and mathematics departments are taking over Computing and Networking Service's old offices in Cardwell.

"There has been pressure for Computing and Network Services to move for many years, but it became imperative to move with the hiring of a new team of physicists," said Robert Kruh, University vice provost and acting director of Computing and Networking Services.

Some of the move has already taken place.

The Computer Information Center, a division of Computing and Networking Services, has already moved to 203 Fairchild. The computer consulting division is in 9B Fairchild. Eventually, the computer-training division will also move to Fairchild, but it will remain in Cardwell until the end of the fall semester.

"I have to commend everyone involved with this move," Kruh said.

"Despite the hectic times that go along with the beginning of a new semester and the fire in Anderson Hall, everything has gone very well," he said.

The administrative, accounting, technical and other support offices will move to the basement of Nichols Hall.

"Since the basement is now just one large room, we will have to construct walls and partitions," Helen Cooper, facilities planning analyst, said. "Our target date for moving them in is October 1."

The move has caused some confusion.

"Our biggest problem is that people don't know where we are. But we have put up several signs, and that seems to be helping," said Ray Cole, computer consultant and senior in computer science.

Another problem is that consulting phone lines are still being installed.

"It has been very traumatic not having phones, but we should be fully operational by Wednesday," Ralph Wasmer, consulting manager, said.

Charges filed against Abdel-Rahman

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A radical Muslim cleric was the guiding hand behind a terrorist organization that bombed the World Trade Center, plotted to blow up other New York landmarks and planned a host of other violent acts, prosecutors say.

Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman was accused in a federal indictment Wednesday along with 14 followers of conspiring to wage a war of urban terrorism against the United States.

Various defendants were also implicated in the 1990 slaying of militant Rabbi Meir Kahane, plans to attack U.S. military sites and kill FBI agents, and a conspiracy to assassinate Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

The indictment marks the first time federal prosecutors have linked those alleged plots.

Followers of the sheik in Egypt issued a warning that retaliation against American targets was a possibility. "We will take revenge on all U.S. interests and citizens either in Egypt or outside if any harm occurs to Sheik Omar," they said in a statement.

Rather than being charged with any specific act, the 55-year-old blind Egyptian cleric was charged under a rarely used sedition law as the leader of a conspiracy who was consulted in pursuing and planning bombings, murders and other acts of terrorism.

The indictment said Abdel-Rahman "provided instruction regarding whether particular acts of terrorism were permissible or forbidden, served as a mediator of disputes among members of the organization and undertook to protect the organization from infiltration by law enforcement authorities."

The sheik, known for his fiery Islamic sermons, has denounced the Trade Center attack and the alleged bombing plot, and denied any involvement.

All of the defendants were to be arraigned today.

The indictment had been promised a month ago by prosecutors who were transcribing hundreds of hours of recordings captured by a government informant who had become a confidant of Abdel-Rahman.

"This is the closest I've ever seen to using the criminal justice system to indict a religious group for religious teaching," said one defense attorney, Ron Kuby. "That kind of action poses a much greater threat to democracy than the people who throw the bombs."

Abdel-Rahman has been in federal custody since July 2, fighting deportation to Egypt. U.S. officials now want to try him here, leaving his possible deportation in limbo.

Egyptian authorities, however, repeated today their insistence that the United States extradite the cleric back to his homeland so he can be tried on charges stemming from 1989 anti-government riots in Egypt.

"This demand still stands regardless of the announcement of charges against Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman ... in the United States and whether this requires his stay there or not," a government official in Cairo said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Statue honors female vets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA FE, N.M. — Dr. Dorothy Beatty was in Vietnam as an Air Force nurse in 1969, and she can identify with all three women figures in a new statue honoring female Vietnam veterans.

The Vietnam Women's Memorial, which begins a three-week cross-country tour this weekend, shows three women in fatigues helping a wounded male GI — one cradling him, one looking to the sky and the third, kneeling, holding his helmet.

The woman holding the soldier was her mission, said Beatty, who's now a dentist.

"The standing woman was the one who was kind of looking over me, making me go to the chow hall. And the kneeling woman is the part of me that was all the pain and terror."

Beatty and other supporters of the bronze, 6-foot-8-inch statue say it will contribute to history — and to healing.

"When I came back to this country I felt a sense of isolation," Beatty said. "For me, (the statue) represents an end to that isolation."

The statue's tour will conclude in Washington, where it will be dedicated on Veterans Day alongside the black granite wall that is the more famous Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

"This is a monument to the living — as the wall is a monument to those who died," said Glenna Goodacre, the Santa Fe sculptor who spent much of the past 14 months working on the one-ton piece.

The kneeling figure, depressed and bone-tired, is the heart and soul of the piece, Goodacre, 53, said in a telephone interview from Loveland, Colo., where she cast the statue.

About 11,500 women served in the military in Vietnam during the war. Most were nurses, but others were doctors, physical therapists, communications specialists, air traffic controllers, intelligence officers and clerks. An additional 265,000 women were in uniform during the conflict and an unknown number of civilian women served with humanitarian organizations.

"It's been a long time coming for all females that have served in the military," said Maryagnes Trujillo McDonnell of Albuquerque, a nurse who was wounded while serving in Vietnam.

The statue has the support of the major veterans' organizations, but Diane Carlson Evans, an Army nurse in Vietnam who chaired the committee to build the monument, said there were times in the last nine years when she thought the project would never come to fruition.

Among those who opposed it were Maya Lin, the designer of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, and the American Institute of Architects.

They protested that another statue would detract from and damage the artistic integrity of the wall, which is inscribed with the names of more than 58,000 veterans — including eight women — killed in the war. It is already flanked by a statue of three infantrymen.

Everyone uses cellular phones

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BISMARCK, N.D. — If your idea of a cellular telephone user is a yuppie driving an expensive foreign car and making deals during the daily commute, think again.

More and more farmers are using cellular phones to keep in touch with the world from their tractors and pickup trucks.

Farmers use cellular phones to keep up with markets or just to stay in contact with their families. A farmer who has an equipment breakdown out in the field can telephone the family and ask them to go into town.

"Mother, run for parts!" Betty Messer said, reciting the plea she commonly hears over the phone from her five sons, who farm with her and her husband, Philip, south of Richardton in southwestern North Dakota.

"If I'm at (my farm), I'll call my wife and tell her I'm leaving now, or that I'm going to be late," said Larry Larson, who farms in Bisbee, in the eastern part of the state. "It's a convenience, and it gives you a sense of security."

Barbara Sullivan, assistant vice president of marketing for CommNet 2000 of Englewood, Colo., said about 25 percent of her company's customers are farmers.

"I would say the highest users are not behind a desk; they're in small business — agriculture, construction, sales," she said. "It is an enormous mainstream utility. It's not Joe Yuppie stockbroker making calls from a restaurant."

Sullivan said CommNet 2000 is the biggest provider of rural cellular service in the country. It does business in eight Midwestern and Western states: the Dakotas, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and Iowa.

Nationwide, about 10 million people use cellular phones, which typically cost around $100, plus monthly fees and varying per-minute charges.

Mrs. Messer said the benefits of having a cellular phone on a farm — where those out in the field may be miles from each other and from home — far outweigh the costs.

"It is such a time-saver and an expense-saver for us that we don't even think about that," she said. "They don't call unless it's something they need — the boys are pretty good about that."

Gene Schiffler of Twin Falls, Idaho, who owns a ranch and an insurance company, said he always thought a cellular phone would be too expensive. His children gave him one as a gift last November.

"I wouldn't be without one now," he said. "When I'm out in the country, it forces me to make a phone call, which will increase my business."

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

J.J. Bundy, member of Stagg Hill Golf Club since 1972, stops his cart at the edge of what was once a traversable fairway before entering a world of sand dunes and water. The course is under eight feet of sand in some places.

Golf course damaged by flood

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Stagg Hill Golf Club, once a place of landscaped greens and sandtraps, is now a vision of silt, sand, and debris.

Mark Robb, president of the Stagg Hill Golf Club, said the Kansas River destroyed most of the 160-acre course when it reached the area on July 18.

"When we first came out here after the water went down, it just looked like a big desert or moonscape," Robb said.

"Out of 18 greens, fairways and teeboxes, we have four greens with grass on them, 14 are dead," Robb said. "You can basically see from the clubhouse all the green grass that is surviving on the course — if it isn't weeds — and even some of that is dead in spots."

Early damage estimates, ranging from $500,000 to $600,000, were made before the water receded, Robb said.

"Aside from repairing the course, we've shut down for a year and a half. At our income level, that would be $600,000 worth of lost income," Robb said.

"We still have utility bills and salaries, so we figure even being closed, we're going to need about a quarter of a million dollars for expenses," Robb said.

Robb said silt from the river is 14 to 15 inches deep over the fairways. Irrigation systems have to be brought back up to ground level.

All the equipment was removed before the water, which rose up to 10 feet, reached the course, Robb said.

A dike was built in the area after a smaller flood hit the course in 1973. The river got so high this summer that it created large holes at each end of the dike, Robb said.

Trees washed from the river are piled eight to 10 feet high along the edge of the course. The wall of trees is 23 feet wide and 700 yards long.

One identifying feature of Stagg Hill Golf Club — the tree-line fairway— has been altered because the trees' root systems have been washed out, he said.

Sandpiles six to eight feet high and sand bars 200 yards long surround the course. Water remains trapped in places.

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

Bundy studies the smothered grass on hole one for signs of life. "We will either re-sod or mix the seed with dirt, but now is not the time to reseed," Bundy said.

Golf cart paths have collapsed, and the top of a ladies tee-box is all that remains to be seen of the structure, which is buried in sand.

Many areas of the golf course are inaccessible without the use of an all-terrain vehicle, Robb said. The course must dry up before heavy equipment can begin to clean up.

"We haven't decided on a contractor yet. We have discussed the damage and gotten some estimates from a contractor who is also a member of the course," Robb said.

He said they aren't going to look for a contractor until funds become available.

"We filled out an application with FEMA and SBA," Robb said. "We're working on them and we hope to get some loans through them, but that's all a matter of what they see when they come out here and whether or not we qualify for a loan."

If they can't get funding, they will have to close down the golf course. The golf course is essentially closed now with the exception of the driving range, pro-shop and putting green.

Jim Gregory, professional golfer, said business in the pro-shop has been hurt.

"With the golf course not open, you don't sell as many balls — as many gloves — things like that," Gregory said.

Water rose within 75 yards of the club house, though water did reach the basement, Gregory said.

Stagg Hill is a non-profit corporation, chartered in 1937.

The bylaws state active members own the golf course as long as they maintain an active membership. If the course is liquidated, a point system divides the money among the members.

Galichia Institute to help families

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Elderly people and their families will soon be receiving special attention at K-State.

That added attention will begin with the opening of the Galichia Institute for Gerontology and Family Studies. The institute was made possible primarily by a $400,000 lead gift from K-State alumni Joseph Galichia and Kathryn Boxberger Galichia of Wichita.

"We are delighted the Galichias have given their money to this project," said John Murray, professor of human development and family studies.

Murray said the institute will provide a unique opportunity to enhance family relationships among all generations.

"Our focus is broadening to look at the whole life — from growth to death," Murray said.

One of the main goals of the institute is to help generations of people help each other, he said.

"Too often we become disconnected from other generations. We're seeing a greater division of needs among children and the elderly," Murray said. "We have much to learn from each in order to fulfill those needs."

To meet that goal, the institute will initiate several programs that enable the elderly and their families to cope with stress and learn from one another.

"One of our programs will focus on the sandwich generation, in which people are parents to their children and parents to their own parents," Murray said.

It is important to use the skills of the elderly to enhance the skills of the children, Murray said.

To develop those skills, the institute will house an intergenerational literacy program in which the elderly will help children to read and teach them creative story-making and storytelling techniques, he said.

Murray said the institute may also be used to produce a children's television program called "Pigswing."

"The program would be designed to advance the literacy and relationship of intergenerational and multicultural issues," he said.

Kirk Baughan, constituent development officer of the KSU Foundation, said raising the $550,000 needed to complete construction of the facility will be easier because of its wide focus.

"This is a project that has broad

Budgeting plays role in lives of students

LORI ARMER
Collegian

The time spent in college is often referred to as the poorest time of one's life, and with good reason.

It is a period where newfound independence sometimes oversees economic reality.

"The first step is planning a budget. It's a good idea to keep track of how you spend money with a notebook so that you have a better idea of where it does go and where it should go," said Carole Prather, assistant professor of human development and family studies.

Budgeting plays a large role in helping students with their economic problems, but it is important to stick with it.

Becca Sherer, junior in apparel and textile marketing, understands this concept all too clearly.

Sherer's summer job pays for her tuition, books, house payments and extras.

"I set aside plans on how much I can spend on party pics and favors, but if I really need things, I buy them. My parents will give me money only if I get really desperate," Sherer said.

Sherer said she feels a sense of responsibility because it is her hard-earned money, not her parents.

Though some, like Sherer, take care of their own expenses, most students continue to rely on their parents to back them up.

"I always go over my budget and

A strong support network exists for international students on the K-State campus.

"There are 22 organizations on campus for international students so no matter where they come from there will be at least one association where they fit," Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in grain science, said.

Kouakou is the president of the International Coordinating Council, a group comprised of representatives from the 21 other international groups on campus.

As with all new students, the most important thing is to get involved with activities and meet people, Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said.

"Often international students don't realize that new American students are just as lost in their new environment but bluff better," she said.

"My advice is to get with a fellow-countryman here and get involved with activities. Staying in your own corner means you will never get to know Manhattan and Manhattan will never get to know you," Kouakou said.

The immigration department puts a lot of controls on international students. "Eventually we'll need to see every one of them just to ensure their immigration status," Davis said.

"International students need to obtain new on-campus work permits every semester," Davis said.

These students also must be enrolled in a full course of study in order to be considered legal by the government. For undergraduate students a full course load is 12 hours and for graduate students it is 9 hours.

"Students may not realize if they have transferred from another school they have to go through the same process here. Even if they are beginning a new degree program they are still considered transfers," Davis said.

The Foreign Student Office provides additional information on things such as banking, dealing with culture shock and obtaining work permits.

Another resource for international students is the network on the electronic mail system. Students can communicate with other students from their home country who are studying in the United States at any university with the e-mail system.

"Last spring there were 96 counties represented by 1163 students," Davis said.

Benefits are two-sided

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

International students are not the only ones who benefit from their stay abroad.

"We all benefit when we learn about other parts of the world," said Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center. "We become more rounded, balanced people."

International students each bring parts of their culture to campus with them.

"After five years at K-State, I've learned bridges are built when foreign students share their culture with others. This interaction is the best thing for bringing the world closer together," said Kouassi Kouakou, president of the International Coordinating Council and graduate student in grain science.

German neo-Nazi rally attempt stopped

BONN, Germany (AP) — Police detained 36 neo-Nazis who tried to stage a rally in southern Germany and arrested two other extremists who carved swastikas at a former concentration camp near Berlin, authorities said Sunday.

Authorities in the southern city of Stuttgart had rejected a request by neo-Nazis for a rally permit and rounded up 36 militants at a roadblock outside the city Saturday night.

Clubs, knives, flags bearing swastikas and neo-Nazi songbooks were confiscated, Stuttgart police said.

Twenty-seven other extremists made it to the rally site, where police searched and dispersed them.

Interim director to take over Wednesday

TOPEKA — The interim director of the Kansas Board of Regents vowed to keep the ball rolling until a permanent director is found.

Warren Corman, who begins his duties Wednesday, said last week he would not be satisfied just minding the store until a successor to Stanley Koplik is found later this year or early next year.

"I'm honored by what (chairman) John Montgomery and the other regents have done in choosing me, but I also believe they expected me to see it as a challenge to keep the ball rolling until a permanent director is chosen," said Corman, whose permanent job is director of facilities for the regents.

Among Corman's first tasks will be finding money to repair K-State's Anderson Hall, damaged by lightning one week ago. That will mean asking the 1994 Legislature to approve about $1.5 million in supplemental spending during the current fiscal year.

Also ahead is presentation of a year-long study of whether Washburn University has a place in the regents system. The board is scheduled to hear the report in November.

Rains bring flooding to Des Moines, again

DES MOINES, Iowa — Renewed flooding, caused by as much as 10 inches of rain, forced hundreds to evacuate Sunday as crews rushed to protect the city's water treatment plant for the second time this summer.

The rain sent creeks and rivers out of their banks throughout central Iowa. More rain was forecast, and flood warnings were issued for the region.

With the ground already saturated from record rainfall all summer, water from the latest storm quickly drained into streams and creeks, which then overflowed.

Des Moines officials closed streets throughout the western part of the city as sewers backed up and smaller creeks flooded.

West Des Moines Mayor Dino Rodish said about 600 houses were included in the evacuated area: 200 in West Des Moines and 400 in Des Moines.

Officials in Des Moines and West Des Moines called for volunteers to sandbag along the Raccoon River and Walnut Creek, both well above flood stage.

Carolinas next in hurricane path

MIAMI (AP) — Hurricane Emily took a slight northwest turn Saturday, eliciting a sigh from Floridians and concern among those in South Carolina, where memories of Hurricane Hugo remain fresh.

The National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables said the storm was moving northwest at 10 mph Saturday and was about 690 miles southeast of South Carolina with top sustained winds near 85 mph. Forecasters say the storm could hit land Tuesday.

It was expected to increase in intensity to a Category 3 hurricane within 72 hours, with winds exceeding 111 mph.

Areas of concern ranged from central Florida to the Carolinas, said Bob Sheets, director of the hurricane center.

In South Carolina, the Charleston County Emergency Preparedness Division has put all county agencies on 24-hour alert.

Man arrested for murder of gay man

TOPEKA (AP) — A northeast Kansas man who has been charged with first-degree murder in Nebraska has been arrested in connection with attacks and robberies against gay men in Topeka, authorities said.

Clifford Privat, 19, of Osage City, was arrested late Friday and is being held in Topeka. He is also wanted in Nebraska on first-degree murder charges in the stabbing death of a gay man there.

Topeka police think Privat, and Eldon Troy Leger, 19, of Huron were involved in as many as four attacks and robberies of gay men in Topeka.

Leger is in police custody in Nebraska.

"Their MO (method of operation) was to seek out and rob people who were either at or leaving a known homosexual establishment," said Topeka Detective Sgt. John Sams.

Typhoon Vernon hits Japanese coast

TOKYO (AP) — Two people were reported killed and four others injured as a strong typhoon battered Japan's northeastern coast on Saturday, a day after drenching Tokyo with torrential rain.

The National Police Agency said more than 7,800 homes and businesses were flooded. Dikes, bridges, roads and railways were washed away at 21 locations and 67 landslides were reported.

Typhoon Vernon grazed the coast southeast of Tokyo Friday afternoon, moved up Japan's northeastern coast and, after being downgraded to a tropical storm, finally veered into the Sea of Okhotsk Saturday afternoon, weather officials said.

The storm, with winds of up to 86 miles an hour, dumped up to 12 inches of rain, triggering floods, knocking out power to tens of thousands of people and snarling air, sea and land traffic.

Attorney offers advice

Fathers learn about child custody

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY — Under a hot August sun, about 25 people gathered on the lawn outside a modest home to listen to Travis Ballard.

They came from as far as St. Louis to hear Ballard, a Michigan attorney who had appeared on ABC's "Good Morning America" the day before.

From his spot on a porch step, he talked to the mostly male crowd about child custody issues and fathers' rights.

Ballard, whose specialty is representing men in child custody cases, is also president of the National Congress for Men and Children, a 12-year-old support and lobbying group that will conduct its annual convention Oct. 14-16 in Kansas City.

He offered a mixture of practical advice, encouragement — even some lighter moments such as a story about surprising a client's wife by arranging for six men she'd had affairs with to show up for a deposition — all at the same time.

"The only deposition we ended up taking that day was a settlement," he said. "We had her sitting in front of the video camera giving him custody."

But for most of the men gathered on the lawn, successes like that are only something to envy. Their questions to Ballard reflected frustrations with their former wives, their lawyers and the entire custody, child support and visitation-rights system.

"Do they let you see your children as much as you want to?" asked Ballard. "Probably not, or you wouldn't be standing here on a Saturday afternoon."

"I want people to realize there are trends and laws being developed that will help your cause," he said.

Above all, Ballard urged the men to be sure their cases are well-prepared.

He made suggestions on what their attorneys should be doing and offered to provide, free of charge, briefs from cases he's tried to anyone who wants them for guidance.

"There's one advantage fathers have in custody cases," he said. "That is that the women don't think they can lose. They don't prepare, and generally they don't have to. But a prepared father can and will win."

Ballard, from Adrian, Mich., said in an interview that he has specialized in child custody almost exclusively for 13 years, having tried cases in a number of states.

He said getting satisfactory custody and visitation arrangements goes far beyond allowing a man to be a weekend dad.

appeal because it provides services that will benefit all of society," said Baughan. "We anticipate that our biggest emphasis on fundraising will be this fall, when we can get prospective donors on campus to see the faculty and the facility."

Baughan said construction of the institute started in June between the Margaret Ahlborn/Ula Dow Lodge for early childhood programs and the Ellen Richards Family Center.

He said the building is scheduled for completion sometime in January.

▶ AZERBAIJANIS VOTE ON TRUST IN PRESIDENT

BAKU, Azerbaijan (AP) — Azerbaijanis voted Sunday whether to keep their democratically elected president out of power following his ouster by soldiers and replacement by a longtime Communist boss.

Voters in the strife-torn former Soviet republic responded to the single referendum question: "Do you trust President Abulfaz Elcibey?"

His chances of winning appeared slim. At polling stations across Baku, several people said they voted against Elcibey, blaming him for Azerbaijan's economic hardships and military losses in a 5-year-old war over the secessionist ethnic Armenian enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh.

"They are not leaders. They are enemies of the people," Jafar Mageramov, an English teacher, said of Elcibey and his followers.

The referendum was called by Geidar Aliev, 70, Azerbaijan's former Communist Party boss who returned to power after Elcibey was ousted in a June 18 military rebellion. Aliev, now acting president, hopes the referendum will legalize Elcibey's ouster and cement his own power.

Elcibey, a 54-year-old former dissident, fled Baku during the rebellion, which took place one year after he became Azerbaijan's first democratically elected leader. He has remained holed up in his mountain village of Keleki.

Collegian makes records request

Dear Sirs:
Attention: Jon Wefald, Bill Snyder and Max Urick
From: K-State Collegian
116 Kedzie Hall
Manhattan, Kan. 66506

It has been brought to our attention that Bill Snyder's contract is not available to the public.

The Collegian has a right under the Kansas Open Records law to review the contract and its contents.

According to the law, "The Kansas Open Meeting Act applies to those entities by whatever name that are 1) legislative or administrative in nature; 2) part of a political or taxing subdivision of the state; 3) that receive or expend public funds; and 4) are supported in whole or in part by public funds."

The law also states, "Generally, all records (i.e. information recorded in any form, or with any characteristics) made, maintained, kept, or possessed by any public agency, are 'open' — that is, required to be available for inspection and copying."

The University has released Bill Snyder's salary from Nov. 30, 1988, to the present as being $115,080 per annum.

The Manhattan Mercury requested a copy of the contract in May of this year. They were denied by a University attorney citing the Open Records Act as saying a public agency does not have to disclose "personnel records, performance ratings or individually identifiable records pertaining to employees or applicants for employment."

The Collegian is not interested in Snyder's performance record. The Collegian is interested in knowing what Snyder's salary will be in two, five or 10 years, and any other monies he may receive.

The Kansas Open Records Acts states "requests for records must be answered as soon as possible, but no later than the end of the third business day following the request."

If this request is denied, the Collegian is requesting the reason for the refusal in writing, including the specific provision of the law under which the request was refused.

The Collegian will be waiting for the University's response.

Are we all just slaves to freedom?

JOHN HART

Liberty is the beauty of our system, the very idea upon which our government was built. Today, however, liberty stands deformed, a twisted adaptation of what it once was.

Through our culture's insatiable appetite for individual freedom, we have been encouraged to reject boundaries, "liberate" ourselves and do what we want, when we want to. Yet, through this worship of freedom, we have allowed liberty to become our master and we its servant. Our attitude toward sexual behavior is one example that illustrates our state of bondage.

The goal of the sexual revolution of the '60s and '70s was to free us from the bonds of so-called puritanical morality, to liberate a generation. Why then are many of the soldiers who fought and won those battles celebrating their fruits of victory in a hospital bed, enslaved by AIDS? Why are the liberated suffering from the bondage of disease? Why are the liberated held captive by fear?

What popular culture defines as freedom is not freedom at all. It is a fraud. It is an illusion. It is a paradoxical bondage: We are slaves to liberty.

The German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche was a man who became enslaved to his liberty. He launched the most ferocious and lucid attacks against Christian morality in modern times, claiming "God is dead." Nietzsche faithfully lived out his beliefs in absolute individual freedom before he went insane and died in 1900, the likely result of a case of syphilis he contracted at a brothel. In the end, it was Nietzsche who was dead.

The breakdown in this liberation mentality, or freedom worship, is the idea that liberty is the absence of self-restraint. Nothing could be further from the truth. Self-control sustains freedom. Imagine, for example, the freedom from violence we would all experience if gun owners exercised more self-restraint.

Our Founding Fathers understood that in order for the people to practice the incredible freedoms the new Constitution would offer, they must voluntarily impose upon themselves a system of self-restraint.

In his Farewell Address, George Washington said, "Of all the dispositions and habits that lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. ... Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in the exclusion of religious principle."

In the Virginia Bill of Rights, Patrick Henry extrapolated, "That religion, or the duty which we owe to our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence; and therefore all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience; and that it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love, and charity towards each other."

Whether you reject Christianity or not does not change the fact that our Founding Fathers designed our political system with the expectation that the people would voluntarily impose upon themselves a system of self-restraint known as Christianity.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that their goal was not to stifle or control the people, but to offer them freedoms unparalleled in human history, the same freedoms we pursue today. The difference between America then and now, obviously, is in the means to the end.

True freedom cannot exist without self-control. Look around you. Look at the people enslaved by the consequences of a "liberated" lifestyle. Liberty and freedom, when applied as our founders understood it, leads to abundance, not slavery.

Athletic Department all wet with attempt to sell tickets for victims

Editor,

It's early in the semester, which may explain the flood-water-like murkiness of your August 25 editorial on season football tickets for flood victims.

Because I did not keep my invitation to purchase season tickets for flood victims, I don't have it for reference, but I do not think it could realistically be characterized as a charitable act of the Athletic Department. Unless I missed something important in my brief scanning before tossing it, the letter invited alumni/season-ticket holders to buy additional season tickets, which the Athletic Department would present as gifts to designated flood victims.

Further, your editorial indicates the offer only included non-conference home games. However, my understanding of the material received and my interpretation of "season ticket" is that all home games were included, not just non-conference home games. If other less-than-season-long options were presented, I didn't pick up on that.

Your emphasis in the editorial on "free," no-cost Athletic Department gifts to victims of the 1993 flood misleads the true nature of this promotional effort.

I'll be interested in the success rate of this rather novel idea and whether promo costs are recouped.

No pats on the back for the first Landon Lecture speaker

Editor,

I read in the local paper that Pat Robertson will be the first Landon Lecturer for 1993-94. No kidding.

I remembered that Pat is the founder and host of the 700 Club and a failed contender to be his party's nominee for president.

And I had an idea.

Let's invite Pat Buchanan to be the second Landon Lecturer. Pat's a member of the Washington Press Club and a failed contender to be his party's nominee for president.

Then let's ask Pat Paulson to be the third Landon Lecturer. Pat's played a lot of clubs and is a failed contender to be his party's nominee for president.

We could bill the program either as "Three Failed Pats" or as "Three Pat Failures," and we could give a quiz at the end of the year to all students: "Which one was the comic?"

Next thing you know, they'll be moaning about those floors

Editor,

Here they go again! Are the graduate teaching assistants in the English Department never satisfied?

Last year, you couldn't open a Collegian without reading something of their whining and griping. They practically transformed the Editorial Page into their own soap box.

Amazingly, their tirades never cease. If they're not threatening to strike for higher pay, they're grumbling about not having a proper office. What do they want — individual rooms with scenic views and personal computers? Come on! They've got carpet!

For what more could they ask! So they don't have desks and chairs. Are they and their students too good to sit on the floor? They should be grateful that they have that floor, and that they have those three rooms for the whole lot of them. It's not like their rooms don't have bulletin boards.

I can't stand to hear a group complaining all the time. Is that all English GTA's know how to do? You wonder about what goes on in their classes.

Protesters enter abortion clinic as couple; confront, scare patients

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Two protesters posing as a couple needing abortion counseling were arrested inside a clinic when they started handing out pro-life literature and refused to leave, police said.

The pair confronted women in the clinic, scaring some of them, said Trina Heath, who guards patients and staff members against protesters at the Wichita Family Planning Clinic.

Arrested at the clinic Saturday morning were Tonya L. Agnew, 23, and Charles L. LaCroix, 30, for trespassing and interfering with a lawful business, said Lt. Jackie Arnold.

Agnew, of Wichita, and LaCroix, of Lincoln Park, Mich., had each been arrested previously while protesting at Wichita abortion clinics, police said.

In August 1992, LaCroix was one of four men who chained themselves to a wrought-iron gate outside the Women's Health Care Services clinic operated by Dr. George Tiller.

Wichita Family Planning Clinic officials said Agnew went to the clinic earlier last week — either on Tuesday or Wednesday — for a pregnancy test.

She made a Saturday-morning appointment for her and her "husband" to talk with a counselor about receiving an abortion.

Once inside, LaCroix and Agnew began distributing literature and telling patients not to kill their babies.

"They went into the building and laid down on the floor and refused to get up and leave because they were there to save babies, they told us," Arnold said.

Heath said LaCroix was arrested first.

"I want to help those women," LaCroix said as he dropped to the floor.

"I had three women backed up by him against the wall. They couldn't move," Heath said. "Another patient was crying very strongly, worried that (LaCroix) was going to try to hurt her in there.

And there was another patient who said, 'You're not going to let them hit me, are you?'"

Heath said after LaCroix was arrested, Agnew dropped to the ground and refused to leave. Both were carried out of the clinic by police.

FULBRIGHT SCHOLARSHIPS
for the 1994-1995 academic year

More than 600 awards providing round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year abroad.
In addition to graduate students, seniors are also eligible. Selection is based upon grades, recommendations, and a plan of study that underscores the need to study abroad. In all cases an applicant must have a particular country in mind, as well as suggest a particular school, institute, or research center where he or she would like to study. While the competition for these awards is rigorous, 23 K-Staters became Fulbrighters during the past decade. Consistency a factor for 4th and long

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Last year, the K-State football special-teams unit was led by senior Sean Snyder, who was voted the best punter in the country.

But this season, no player has emerged as the Cats' go-to man on fourth-and-long.

The departure of the first-team all-American, who averaged 44.7 yards a kick, left a hole in the punter's position, and no one has won the job yet, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"I have seen all of the punters do everything well, but not consistently," he said. "So far, no one has stepped forward to fill the hole."

Three Wildcats are vying to be the starting punter, but senior Tate Wright is penciled in as first on the depth chart for now.

"To win the punting job, someone is going to have to be consistent, work hard, do things right and improve in every aspect of the kicking game," Wright said.

Wright is also the favorite in the battle for the place-kicking position. Last season, Wright started in the first three games but was replaced by Warren Claassen for six games after missing an extra point and a field goal in the New Mexico State game.

Claassen, who was handling the kickoff chores, held the job until Wright got it back in the Iowa State game.

"Coach doesn't expect 60-yard field goals, but he wants us to make everything under 40 yards," Claassen said.

Although no one has stepped forward as the No. 1 punter, there has been a bright spot from the kicking battles so far this year.

"We came out of spring practices with three guys capable of punting. We now have four guys that possibly can do it," Snyder said. "I think Tate and Warren have both pushed each other, and that has helped both of them become better kickers."

The Cats' special teams have some proven stability in the kickoff-return and punt-return positions.

Providing that stability is senior co-captain Andre Coleman. Coleman is considered to be one of the most dangerous scoring threats in the Big Eight.

Last season, Coleman led the conference with a 24.5 average on kickoff returns and finished 17th nationally in that department.

"I really don't like returning kickoffs because it means the other team just scored," Coleman said. "I have to give most of the credit to the other 10 guys on the return team."

Coleman is ranked fifth on the K-State career list with 1,024 kickoff return yards and needs just 273 yards to become the school's all-time leader.

"I am definitely going to shoot for the K-State record and for the Big Eight record this year," Coleman said.

THE RACE TO REPLACE SNYDER

Three kickers are in contention to replace Sean Snyder as punter this season.

Tate Wright

Wright is a senior kicker from Stillwater, Oklahoma. He made 13 of 14 extra point attempts last year and made 5 of 7 field goal attempts.

Chad Romano

Chad Romano is a freshman punter/place-kicker from West Palm Beach, Florida. He averaged 40.9 yards per punt and made six field goals as a senior, uncluding a long of 41 yards.

Eric Hardy

Big 8 teams turning out all-America specialists

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

There was a time, not so long ago, when hard-nosed, smash-mouth football dominated the Big Eight Conference and the all-America honors that accompanied it.

A slight transformation has occurred, and the Big Eight is now leaning on the talents of the specialty players more often. In the process, specialty players from around the Big Eight are receiving national attention.

This trend started 10 years ago, when Kansas place-kicker Bruce Kallmeyer was selected as an all-American, and the trend has continued through the 1980s and the 1990s, as seven Big Eight specialty players were selected as all-Americans.

Mitch Berger

In both 1985 and 1986, Colorado punter Barry Helton was selected as an all-American. In fact, Colorado has had an all-America punter four consecutive years, including Mitch Berger from last year's squad.

This season, Berger is returning for his senior year. Last season, in his all-America campaign, he was the only punter in the nation among the top in both net and gross punting, maintaining a 47.04 punting average.

"He can overpower the ball," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said.

K-State has also gained recognition for specialties, as Sean Snyder was selected to the Associated Press and Kodak all-America teams last year. That marked the first time ever that a K-State player has been honored by both the AP and Kodak awards. During his senior season, Snyder set a school record, averaging 44.7 yards per punt.

This season, the fad could possibly continue, as several Big Eight specialty players have the potential to become all-Americans.

Last season, Iowa State return specialist James McMillion ranked second in the country on punt-return average with 18.9 yards while leading the Big Eight with 435 return yards and three punt returns for touchdowns. McMillion was selected to the first team all-Big Eight a year ago.

Dan Eichloff, the place-kicker from the University of Kansas, is another potential all-American, according to preseason predictions. Last season, he was selected first team, all-Big Eight for the third season in a row, while becoming KU's all-time leading scorer.

Eichloff was 16 of 20 in field goals a year ago, including a 61-yard field goal against Ball State. This season, several publications, including "NCAA Preview," have the senior ranked as the top place-kicker in the country.

Seles makes first appearance since stabbing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Monica Seles made her first public appearance at a tennis event since her stabbing in April, returning Sunday to the scene of her 1991 and 1992 U.S. Open triumphs to join the tennis world in memory of Arthur Ashe.

Seles, smiling at courtside the day before the Open, waved to 13,000 fans, who gave her a standing ovation. She sat beside Ashe's widow, Jeanne, and daughter Camera, signed autographs and, at one point, leaned over a railing from the president's box to exchange a kiss and hug with Jennifer Capriati.

"It's a very special day," said Seles, who asked Saturday to be present at this exhibition. "I wanted to be here because I love Arthur, and I want to support his Foundation for the defeat of AIDS."

"New York loves Monica Seles," Alan King, master of ceremonies, said after the crowd's long ovation.

Still unable to practice because of the back wound from her attack at Hamburg, Germany, by an obsessed Steffi Graf fan, Seles was interviewed shortly afterward at Vail, Colo., where she has been undergoing physical therapy ever since.

She also appeared in a televised interview last week. But this appearance at the National Tennis Center marked the first time she has come back to the crowd, back to a court and back into public life.

Men's No. 1 Jim Courier and No. 2 Pete Sampras played the first 12-point tiebreaker exhibition but won't start for real until Tuesday or Wednesday.

When Ashe won the first U.S. Open, 25 years ago, the disease that would kill him last February wasn't even known. On Sunday, some of the game's greatest players gathered in his name to help wipe out the virus.

"Arthur Ashe was a great man and someone I always looked up to," Sampras said, summing up why all the players appeared in the televised exhibition.

Among the featured matches Monday are four-time champion and No. 3 seed Martina Navratilova against Gloria Pizzichini; No. 4 Conchita Martinez against Sandrine Testud; No. 9 Anke Huber against Karin Kschwendt; men's No. 9 Petr Korda against Wayne Ferreira, and No. 14 Alexander Volkov against Jonathan Stark.

Sox maintain top spot in AL West

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas hit his 36th home run and had three RBIs in helping Kirk McCaskill to his first victory since Aug. 3 as the Chicago White Sox routed the Minnesota Twins 13-5 Sunday night.

The White Sox stretched their lead in the AL West to 4 1/2 games over Texas and remained five games ahead of Kansas City.

Thomas raised his major league-leading RBI total to 109 on a first-inning two-run homer and a sacrifice fly in the third. Bo Jackson hit a two-run homer, and Robin Ventura, Craig Grebeck and Tim Raines each drove in two runs as Chicago pounded three Minnesota pitchers for 18 hits.

McCaskill (4-7), making his first start since Aug. 3 and second since June 14, pitched six innings and allowed one run on seven hits. He walked two and struck out two.

Rookie Eddie Guardado (3-7) was tagged for seven runs on six hits in 2 2-3 innings. The White Sox took a 2-0 lead in the first on Raines' single and Thomas' home run.

Chicago added five runs in the third. Ozzie Guillen and Raines singled, Guillen scored on Steve Sax's groundout and Raines scored on Thomas' sacrifice fly.

Ellis Burks walked, Bo Jackson singled and Ventura doubled in two more runs. After Mike Hartley relieved, Grebeck singled to make it 7-0.

COLUMN

Hard-hitting Brett may not be best ever

When Paul Schaal was traded from the Kansas City Royals to the California Angels on May 3, 1974, there were only a few people who knew about the young third basemen who was to replace him.

This 20-year-old California kid didn't have much power to hit the ball — he just knew how to hit. They knew George Brett — with all the stubble on his face and the pine tar smeared on his bat and his blue Kansas City helmet — would make it in the big leagues.

BRIAN ANDERSON

Yesterday, Brett joined Hank Aaron and Willie Mays as the only players in history with 3,000 hits, 300 home runs and 200 stolen bases. Boston Red Sox pitcher Danny Darwin walked Brett in the third inning. Brett took off for second base and beat the throw of catcher Tony Pena.

No, he is the greatest player within the past 20 years, but the statistics show that he might be one of the greatest players of all time.

Brett has led the league three times in average, hits, triples, on-base percentage and slugging percentage. Twice he has collected the most total bases and doubles.

He has hit over .300 11 times, brought in 100 runs, or more, in four seasons and has been invited to 13 All-Star Games.

Finally, Brett holds the American League records for most intentional walks in a career and most games played on artificial turf. Recently, he collected his 2,000th single.

In his 20 years with the Royals, Brett has taken Kansas City to the playoffs seven times. If it wasn't for a Chris Chambliss homerun in 1976 and a three-run ninth inning by the New York Yankees in the fifth game of the 1977 playoffs, the Royals could have been in the World Series four times.

Despite all of these achievements, Brett is not the greatest.

Brett isn't the greatest because, for one thing, he has played in Royals/Kauffman Stadium, arguably one of the toughest on batting averages.

Secondly, he has had more homeruns away from Kansas City, although he did have more runs, hits and runs-batted-in in that stadium.

Also, his injuries are due to the artificial turf. He tore ligaments in both knees and injured his right shoulder.

Since he's been slowed down by his injuries, reaching these marks has been quite an accomplishment.

Finally, he is playing in a different era. Brett didn't have to face the Walter Johnsons, Sandy Koufaxes and Bob Gibsons that would have made his career less distinguished.

But maybe that doesn't matter. Players like Aaron, Mays, Babe Ruth and others made the Hall of Fame by playing their careers in easy-to-hit parks that boosted their stats against some of the worst pitchers.

Nevertheless, after watching him play my entire life, I can't picture Brett as the greatest player ever to walk on the field. He does deserve his fame, though, even if he doesn't have the big stats.

He isn't the greatest third basemen ever, but maybe the greatest-hitting third baseman with a strong work ethic.

Year after year, Brett accomplishes something that puts him on a level with some of the greatest to play the game. One thing is for sure — he has assured himself a spot in the Hall of Fame. That you can count on.

Gagne's timely hit lifts Royals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Most managers might not consider doing what Kansas City's Hal McRae did to beat Boston 5-4 in 12 innings Sunday.

He let Greg Gagne hit.

Gagne, who struck out five times in a 2-1, 11-inning loss the day before, was 0-for-27 against Boston pitchers this season when he stepped to the plate to face John Dopson with one out in the 12th. Wally Joyner, who had singled and been sacrificed, was on second.

Dopson (7-9), the sixth Boston pitcher, gave up a leadoff single to Joyner, and Gary Gaetti sacrificed. Gagne's hit made the Royals 1-5 at home against the Red Sox this year.

George Brett stole second base in the third inning and joined Willie Mays and Hank Aaron as the only major-leaguers with 3,000 hits, 300 homers and 200 steals.

Energy conservation saves money

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

The end of the month brings an onslaught of bills.

Daily energy conservation reduces the hole this makes in students' pocketbooks.

"The most obvious conservation practice is to set the thermostat at a single point and ignore it," said Richard Hayter, director of engineering extension at K-State.

Stacy Kohlmeier, division manager for Kansas Power and Light in Manhattan, said people can do many things to cut costs.

Waterbeds act as a small water heater and consume much energy. Conservative temperature settings and heat retention allow one to conserve energy, Kohlmeier said.

"Caulking and weather stripping is worth the effort," Hayter said.

An easy but often overlooked way to conserve energy is closing blinds and curtains during the hot hours of the day, Kohlmeier said.

Air conditioning and heating units should be serviced at least once a year, and appliances and lights not in use should be turned off, Hayter said.

Cleaning behind a refrigerator and blocking drafts with blankets can reduce energy used.

Insulation can play a big role in reducing the energy used, said Lee Epley, president of Construction Plastic in Kansas City.

"The key to insulation is not to over-install, but invest just enough money that it pays off in normally a three-year period," Epley said.

TIPS ON CONSERVATION

- Set thermostat at one setting (78 degrees is recommended).
- Service heating and cooling unit regularly.
- Close blinds during the midday heat.
- Prevent drafts with blankets.
- Turn off unneeded lights and appliances.
- Set waterbeds at a conservative temperature.
- Clean behind refrigerators.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your head is in the clouds today. Put the weekend behind you and concentrate on classes. Tonight: Have an out-of-body experience with a friend and some gelatin.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Get in touch with your spiritual side. For you Christians, go to church. For you pagans, dance naked around a tree, preferably not one on campus.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Stop being your own worst enemy. Spread the wealth and pick on someone else for a change.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Beware of the outside world and those crazed students. Lock yourself in and work today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Do something different today like calling your parents and not asking for money.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Be a hippie today. Skip class, lie on the grass and find funny shapes in the clouds.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Throw caution to the wind. Today is your day to be crazy. If you've ever wanted to try skydiving, it's now or never.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Forget those relationship problems. Bake some brownies with sprinkles and share them with a friend. Tonight: Indulge yourself. Buy some lacy underwear.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A friend will defend your honor today. It is in your best interest to be aware of whispering around you. Tonight: Don't answer the phone. No news is good news for you this evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The sun will shine in your face today. It's a good day to indulge your sweet tooth.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your life is hell today. Skip class and drink gin.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Today is a good day to say, 'Hey, let's learn.' Go to the library and dust off your brain. Tonight: Relax with friends and visit a trailer park.

REVIEW

Crow's music reflects her roots

MATT BECHTOLD
Collegian

Sheryl Crow's new maxi-single, "Scenes From the Tuesday Night Music Club," has four songs that appear on her full-length debut album, released earlier this August.

Crow's musical background is impressive. She has performed with such legendary musicians as George Harrison, Joe Cocker, Stevie Wonder, Rod Stewart, Don Henley, Michael Jackson and Foreigner. She also has an impressive song-writing talent. Her songs have been covered by Eric Clapton and Wynona Judd. Two of the songs on the maxi-single, "Strong Enough" and "No One Said It Would Be Easy," appear in the upcoming film "Kalifornia."

The four songs on this maxi-single were conceived during a year of jam sessions with the Tuesday Night Music Club. Crow is from St. Louis, and her Midwest roots are evident in her down-to-earth musical style as well as in her musical themes.

"Run, Baby, Run" is the first of the four songs. It is a slow, bluesy and ever-touching song that supports the claims of her song-writing and singing abilities. Her strong voice pulls you into the story and meaning of the song.

"All I Wanna Do" is a feel-good song about a night in Los Angeles. Although the song has a great melody full of slide guitar, the lyrics left something to be desired. Crow's vocals on this track are similar in style and depth to those of Bonnie Raitt, and the heavy use of slide guitar in the song helped emphasize that.

"No One Said It Would Be Easy" is a slow, heart-felt song about relationships. This song, unlike the others, had too much repetition.

The lyrics were too dependent on the chorus, and to put it simply, this song put me to sleep.

Yes, Trekkies, there is life after Star Trek

Dear Cassandra,

I was wondering if you could give some of your eternally witty advice to me, a fellow K-Stater and avid reader of your column.

I like to watch "Star Trek," especially the more recent series, "Star Trek, the Next Generation." I always notice they're not floating around like the people on the NASA shuttles.

You never see Jean-Luc Picard scrambling after a stray dinner pea that has wafted off his plate, or Reicher floating down the corridors of the Enterprise toward the holodeck. Certainly, you never see Jordy heading for a $3-million toilet that will vacuum his excrement from him.

Why is there this discrepancy between the Enterprise and our astronauts today? Is it just because the Enterprise people are several hundred years ahead of us and have found the technology?

Or are we just space technological clods and incapable of these advancements?

Just thought I'd ask.

Sincerely,
Trekkie at Heart

Dear Tricky Trekkie,

Gee, Wally, that's a tough one.

To be perfectly honest with you, I have never, ever felt the need to contemplate the truly fascinating questions you've raised concerning space travel. I've never been — well, frankly — that bored on any given day in my life.

But to answer your questions about the seemingly "out of this world" (ha-ha) space technology the folks on the Enterprise have found, I do have some advice for you. Follow along closely:

■ Move very slowly and carefully, making no sudden moves.

■ Gently reach over to the coffee table.

■ Ever so slightly, press the Off button on your TV remote control.

■ Normal life should resume within four to six weeks.

Barnburners, Connor play blues amid thunderstorm

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

The Flood Aid concert raised $700 for the Neighbors in Need organization Friday night, but the evening was filled with sweet sorrow.

As the Barnburners began their final gig, it was no surprise that thunderstorms were growling outside the Wareham Opera House. It seemed Mother Nature was showing her disappointment about the break-up.

Perhaps, though, she was reminding the audience of the soaking rains that prompted the benefit in the first place.

Either way, it didn't matter. This was the final show for a band that helped revive the local blues scene back in 1990.

An eight-piece Barnburner ensemble began the night with a sound check that set a stylish and excited mood.

Guitarist Pat Walleck ripped into "Further On Up The Road," and the anger, sorrow and relief of the band's last performance came together in the first song.

Early on, the crowd was subdued, but a hypnotic R&B groove brought folks to the dance floor. They were soon overflowing into the aisles.

Other tunes played during the hour-long set included a rough-and-tumble version of the Hendrix classic "Fire," a funky cover of Dave Mason's "Feelin' Alright" and an encore featuring Steve Miller's "Living in the USA."

The performance was similar to that of a classic rock band that had parted ways in 1976. Comparable to The Band and their final appearance in "The Last Waltz," the Barnburners were in true rhythm-and-blues form.

They let the music speak itself. There were no farewell speeches, nor were there extensive good-byes. The Barnburners died with their dignity intact, just like they wanted to.

Following the Barnburners, Chicago native Joanna Connor tried to keep the blues fever alive. Her four-piece band had the crowd dancing again with a mixture of funk, Texas-style rock and Mississippi slide blues.

Although she has been compared to Bonnie Raitt, Connor's style is more straightforward — more raw and powerful.

Her soulful vocals had traces of Aretha Franklin, while her Les Paul guitar cried like Stevie Ray Vaughan's Stratocaster. Dressed in all black, Connor was bumping and grinding along with the crowd — her lighting-fast fingers alternating with an impressive display of slide guitar.

The crowd was receptive most of the evening while warmly supporting Connor's original material. Unfortunately, the majority of the audience had left before the end of the show.

A brief, yet strong, encore brought applause from those who stayed.

Robb said they have a debt of $450,000 from capital improvements made two years ago.

Those debts have to be satisfied before there is anything to be divided up, Robb said.

"Basically, if we had to scrap the course now and sell it we'd be lucky to pay our investors," he said.

Jeannette Peterson, member of Stagg Hill Golf Club, said she and her husband had a golf-cart shed at the course.

"The course is a beautiful course, and they got it into shape and spent a lot of money, so it's really sad to see the course in that shape," Peterson said.

Peterson said her husband used to play the course four to five times a week.

"Now we're having to pay to go elsewhere, so we can't go out as much as we'd like to," she said. "The way my husband loves to golf, I don't know what he'll do — if he'll join somewhere else next year," she said.

Fundraisers such as an auction and a golf tournament are being planned, Robb said.

Budgeting stops financial woes have to call home. I'm not even allowed to have a VIA or credit card," said Kelli Cook, senior in elementary education.

Some expenses catch you by surprise, however.

"The little unexpected expenses add up so quickly, that before you know it, your budgeted money for the month is gone," Cook said.

Though there is not a specific financial counselor at K-State, there are classes, such as Introduction to Personal and Family Finance, which could be beneficial for students willing to help themselves.

Kris Liezert, sophomore in human development and family studies, is one such student enrolled in this class.

"I took this class so my boyfriend and I can understand how to manage our money, so that we'll have less problems in the future," Liezert said.

Another way to control your budget is to get a Wildcat card.

The card can be used at the Union, Derby bakery, Quik Cats, the Veterinary Medicine lunchroom, some campus vending machines and the ID Center.

However, no matter how much money is deposited, you can't go below zero, and you can't withdraw cash until the last two weeks of the spring semester.

"It's a debit card system, kind of like a checking account, but not. You can't overdraw, and no monthly statements are issued. But you can find out the balance each time you use it," Terri Wyrack, employee of Wildcat Card Center, said.

Students that need help with budgeting can go to the Student Governing Association office, where peer counselors are available to help with consumer problems and sometimes personal financial difficulty, Prather said.

"There are not many counselors. Often they will refer more serious problems to the National Consumer Credit Counseling Office in Manhattan," Prather said.

Volunteers gain exposure to different cultures

In addition to learning another culture, American students who interact with those from other countries often find an opportunity to travel abroad.

Scott Baker, senior in feed science and German, spent 10 months studying in Germany last year.

"One of my roommates my freshman year was from Pohlheim, Germany. That summer, I went to visit him for six weeks," Baker said.

"Since I lived with his family, I had a support base and got a true taste of German culture. It helped me to see that I really wanted to study there last year," he said.

"Being exposed to a different culture has had a profound effect on the way I think," Baker said.

American students can gain this exposure to other cultures on campus by volunteering as an English conversation partner.

"We have a list of international students who would like English conversation partners," Davis said. "Anyone can volunteer, and it only requires one to two hours a week."

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian Wichita bureau

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., and Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., listen to United States Attorney General Janet Reno during a panel discussion about community problems Monday in Wichita. Reno also attended other meetings with law-enforcement agencies during her visit.

Reno addresses violence in U.S.

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

WICHITA — United States Attorney General Janet Reno said Monday youth violence in America needed to be attacked with loving prevention.

"It is easier to deal with truancy when a child is eight, than delinquency when they are 13," Reno said.

She was greeted enthusiastically by a full house at the Tabernacle Baptist Church in Wichita, receiving several standing ovations through the course of her discussion.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., and a panel of Wichita leaders were also involved in the public discussion on gangs, drugs and violence in the community.

Children need to be treated with a caring stick, a combination of firm discipline and loving support, Reno said.

"My mother spanked us very hard and loved us with all her heart," Reno said.

Reno said children need to be instilled with a conscience at an early age.

"We need to let them know there is no excuse for putting a gun to someone's head and hurting them," Reno said.

A child's most crucial development occurs between the ages of zero and three, when the family is most responsible for shaping the child's values, Reno said.

Adequate medical care, job training and a stable economy are important to maintain stable families and prevent crime.

Drugs, crime and violence are symptoms of a deeper problem in society — neglected children, she said.

There needs to be more of an emphasis on family than material things, Reno said.

"It's better to have three strong children than two cars in the garage," Reno said.

Reno said there needs to be a coordinated effort between federal, state and local governments to solve the crime problem.

A bill recently passed by Congress allocating $150 million for community policing is one way the federal goverment is trying to help communitites help themselves, Reno said.

Wichita Mayor Elma Broadfoot said the city would apply for some of the money set aside by that bill.

More prisons and prosecutors are need, Reno said, and added that we can not build our way out of a crime problem.

Reno said what made her most angry when she was a prosecutor in Dade County was putting criminals away to see them back on the streets after they served 20 to 30 percent of their time.

"We need to make sure the bad guys are put away and kept away for truth in sentencing," Reno said.

Reno said she would like to see treatment programs for first time drug offenders rather than mandatory prison time.

"We should give people the opportunity to rejoin the community," Reno said.

When Reno expressed her support of the Brady Bill, the room filled with applause.

Reno said she supported a ban on assault rifles and other guns on the street that were only used to kill people.

A group of abortion protesters showed up at the public meeting, but when one pro-life advocate tried to address Reno, she received jeers from the forum.

Reno met in closed meetings later in the day with law enforcement officials.

Union smoking debate still hazy

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

If it were up to the student body president, K-State students could again smoke in the Union.

A five-member task force has been established by the Union Governing Board to reconsider the current smoking policy in the Union.

The policy, enacted Aug. 1, 1991, prohibits smoking in all areas inside the Union. Prior to the ban on smoking, individuals were allowed to smoke only in restricted areas.

Trent LeDoux, UGB member and chairman of the task force, said the committee was established in response to student concerns and to concerns presented by Student Body President Ed Skoog.

Skoog said he, and many other students, want a smoking area in the Union.

"I'm acting as a voice of the students who want smoking and remember when there was smoking allowed in the Union," Skoog said. "Whatever happens will be what students want. I respect what UGB decides."

LeDoux said he plans to present two pieces of legislation to the task force.

One would allow the sale of tobacco products in the Union, not regarding consumption.

"This would be an alternative source of money that would bring sales to the Union," LeDoux said.

The second would make smoking legal in a designated, well-ventilated area in the Union, LeDoux said.

"I've gone to the Union many times and seen people swamped at the south doors," LeDoux said.

Professor studies Mars despite loss

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

While NASA continues hunting for the Mars Observer, James Underwood, professor of geology, carries on with his own research in space.

Underwood is currently working with NASA on projects dealing with the geology of Venus, Mars and Jupiter's moon, Ganymede.

NASA is still waiting to hear from the spacecraft Mars Observer, which may have exploded or flown past Mars while pressurizing its fuel tanks Aug. 21.

"The finest minds in the country haven't been able to figure out how to find it," Underwood said.

Underwood said he thinks NASA should not rule out the possibility that a meteor or asteroid hit the craft.

Underwood's own research has not been greatly hurt by the loss of the $980-million craft, though.

He said he can continue his look at Mars with the Mariner 9 and Viking observers.

A friend introduced him to the NASA program and he was put on a Mars mapping team.

He was at the Jet Propulsion Laboratories in Pasadena, Calif., for both Voyager landings and saw some of the first views of Triton, a large moon of Neptune.

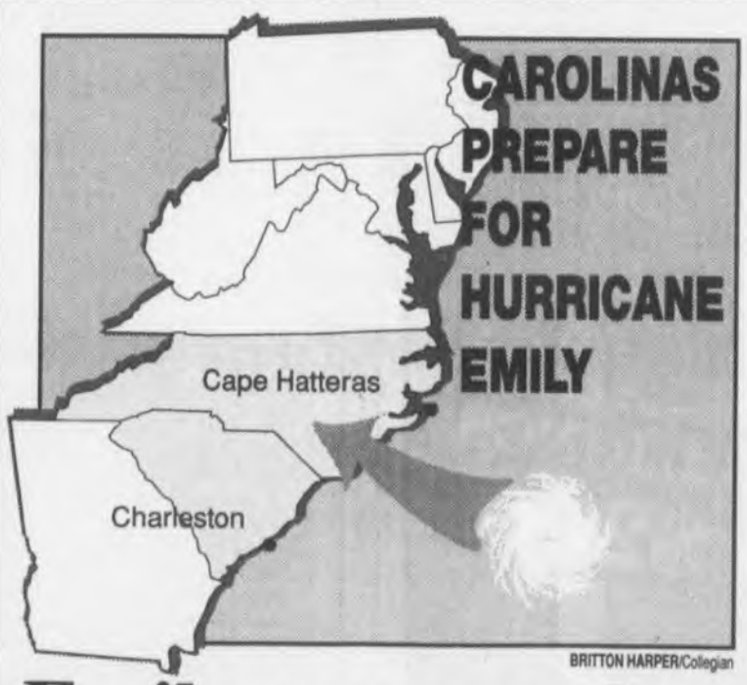
Underwood and Steve Clamons, graduate student in geology, are studying the Atlanta Planitia section of Venus and its ridge belts and volcanic planes.

"The finest minds in the country haven't been able to figure out how to find it (the Mars Observer)."

JAMES UNDERWOOD
PROFESSOR OF GEOLOGY

Underwood said that, unlike Earth, where these features are developed by continents moving, Venus does not have plate tectonics.

"I hope to try to determine the rock types and a little about the geological history," Clamons said. "Right now, I'm just making a basic map."



Underwood said planetary geology provides mankind not only with a better understanding of how Earth and the other planets were formed, but may also provide important resources.

"The moon's resources are especially studied to help us to find propellants to send us to other planets," he said.

Underwood's research provides him with new findings on a personal level as well.

"I think the most exciting thing to me is when you look at a planet for the first time. That places you with Cook, Magellan and all the great explorers of history," Underwood said.

"But there's a feeling of guilt that you haven't risked anything in your exploration. The spacecraft has just transformed your eyes to the picture the craft got when it imaged the surface."

Emily compared to Kansas twister

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

As hurricane Emily gets ready to hit the eastern coast of the United States, its affects can be felt in Kansas.

"My father is a submarine commander and they have sent him out to sea, because of the hurricane," Gretchen Guth, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine said. "I just found out Sunday night when I called home that he had been shipped out."

Guth is from Virginia Beach, VA, and this is not the first hurricane that her family has been through.

"The last hurricane that came through was hurricane Gloria. We didn't leave then because we didn't want to leave all of our stuff behind," she said. "This is the first really big hurricane to hit home since I've been here at college, and I'm really worried."

A hurricane can be compared to another natural disaster famous to Kansas, Guth said.

"It's a lot like a tornado. You have to stay away from the windows, so you don't get struck by broken glass," she said. "Last time we filled the bath tub with water, just in case they shut the water off."

"It is hard to keep track of the situation here because there is less information available. Back home they would have boxes at the bottom of the screen giving you updates every ten minutes."

Hurricane Emily threatens coast

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Waves along the shore weren't big enough to interest surfers Sunday, but Hurricane Emily was on a blustery path toward land, and coastal residents rushed to stock up on food and supplies.

Late in the afternoon, the National Weather Service declared a hurricane watch from Cape Romain, about 20 miles north of Charleston, to Fenwick Island on the Delaware-Maryland line. North Carolina officials also advised 2,500 people to leave an island that is accessible only by boat.

A watch means hurricane conditions pose a threat. A warning means hurricane conditions with sustained wind of more than 74 mph are expected within 24 hours.

Some, remembering 1989's deadly Hurricane Hugo, made plans to leave.

"I wouldn't want to go through the fear again. It's easier to get out than to stay," said William Holden, who left his North Myrtle Beach condominium to return to his home in New Jersey.

Hugo smashed into Charleston in September 1989. From the Caribbean islands to the Carolinas, it caused at least $5.9 billion in damage and killed 85 people.

At 8 p.m. Sunday, Emily's center was located near latitude 31.3 north and longitude 70.3 west or about 410 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, N.C.

Emily was moving west-northwest at 9 mph. Its top sustained wind speed was about 80 mph with some strengthening expected. A National Hurricane Center advisory projected the storm could make landfall Tuesday, possibly in North Carolina or even much farther north.

North Carolina officials ordered the evacuation of the National Park Service campground on Ocracoke Island on Sunday. They also advised the approximately 2,500 people on the island, accessible only by ferry, to leave.

Officials in North Carolina's Dare County, where much of the chain of fragile barrier islands called the Outer Banks is located, said an evacuation would probably be ordered overnight for all or part of the county.

"Right now, you wouldn't even know if anything is going on," said Andy McCann, owner of the Nags Head Pier. "The ocean is flat. There aren't even any surfers out there."

Although some people familiar with Hugo were packing up, out-of-towners continued to arrive for vacations, including golfers who registered Sunday at the Myrtle Beach Convention Center for the 1993 World Amateur Handicap Championship.

"We'll be here for all four days," Larry Robinson of Columbus, Ohio, told The (Myrtle Beach) Sun News. "If it rains, I'll just put on my rainsuit and play."

Dam bursts in China; kills, injures hundreds

BEIJING (AP) — Floods unleashed by a burst dam in a remote area of northwestern China killed at least 242 people, injured more than 330 and caused millions of dollars in damage, an official said Monday.

The dam of Gouhou reservoir burst after a day of rain at 11:45 p.m. Friday in Gonghe county, 870 miles southwest of Beijing, said Wang Yi, an official at the Qinghai Provincial Foreign Affairs Office.

A photo published Monday by the official Xinhua News Agency showed water pouring over a breach in the dam like a waterfall. Wang said the 231-foot-tall dam held back 109 million cubic feet of water.

Wang, in a telephone interview from the Qinghai capital of Xining, said property damage was estimated at $17.5 million. An unknown number of people remained unaccounted for, and among the known casualties were ethnic Tibetans, who populate much of the province.

Wang said more would have been hurt and killed had warnings to evacuate not been issued over local television and by telephone after workers at the site heard unusual noises less than two hours before the dam burst.

Officials were investigating the cause of the disaster, and a group from the Chinese Cabinet had arrived in the stricken area.

Reservoir water no longer health hazard

TOPEKA, (AP) — The quality of water in Milford, Tuttle Creek and Perry reservoirs no longer poses a human health risk, the state Department of Health and Environment said Monday.

Water in the three big federal reservoirs should now support all forms of contact and non-contact recreation, the KDHE statement said.

Samples taken from Milford and Tuttle Creek last Wednesday and from Perry last Thursday indicate generally-acceptable bacteria levels, it added.

The agency said it encourages persons using the reservoirs for recreation purposes to use caution because some floating or partially-submerged debris may remain in the reservoirs for several weeks.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency announced on Monday that it has added Mitchell County to the list of 47 Kansas counties eligible for public and individual flood disaster assistance.

U.S. troops raid suspected Aidid camp

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Elite U.S. Army troops raided a building in southern Mogadishu before dawn Monday, snaking down ropes from hovering helicopters.

It was not clear whether the objective of the raid was Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, the renegade warlord wanted by the United Nations in the killings of 24 Pakistani peacekeepers and 11 other U.N. troops.

But one of the missions of 400 elite U.S. Rangers sent to Mogadishu last week was expected to be ridding the city of Aidid and putting an end to almost daily attacks by his militiamen on U.N. forces.

The raid, which involved more than a dozen helicopters, followed an earlier mortar and small arms attack by militiamen on Mogadishu's old international airport, now a U.N. military encampment.

There was no word of casualties in either incident, and U.S. and U.N. military officials in Mogadishu could not be reached for comment.

Prosecuter quits man-burning case

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — A veteran prosecutor repeatedly interrupted in court by his boss stormed out of a courthouse in tears Monday, quitting his job and the trial of two whites accused of setting fire to a black tourist.

Len Register refused to comment as he left the Palm Beach County Courthouse. He walked out during a recess after his questionings were frequently interrupted by whispered suggestions from his boss and co-counsel, State Attorney Harry Lee Coe.

The final instance came when Coe rose and openly objected to a question Register had asked.

The departure of Register, who had handled nearly all the preparation for the case, left the trial in the hands of Coe, a former judge who has not personally prosecuted a case in 22 years.

Tensions between Register and Coe had been building for months. Then last week, the defense brought out that Coe had given the key prosecution witness a plea agreement in the case one day after he offered the witness's attorney a job — Register's job.

Coe denied any impropriety for the offer, which was declined.

Lakeland day laborers Mark Kohut and Charles Rourk are accused in the New Year's Day torching of Christopher Wilson of New York City. Kohut, 27, and Rourk, 33, face life behind bars if convicted on charges of attempted murder, kidnapping and robbery.

Finney asked to renegotiate compacts

TOPEKA, (AP) — A committee voted Monday to ask Gov. Joan Finney to renegotiate three Indian gambling compacts to include in them whatever the state Supreme Court decides is allowed under the state constitution.

That will be decided after the high court hears oral arguments Sept. 15 in a lawsuit brought by Attorney General Bob Stephan against Finney. The case is designed to determine whether Finney can negotiate gambling compacts with Indian tribes under a federal act, and what games would be allowed.

The committee's action could bring approval of such compacts a step closer. But some members of the committee also believe tribes can be limited in what type of gambling they can offer. All four tribes envision building full-blown casinos.

Parents try to prove son didn't kill self

ATCHISON — The Air Force told Royal and Linda Shults last summer that their 20-year-old son committed suicide in his dormitory room on the Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi, Miss.

After Air Force officials could not even give them a date of death to put on their son's tombstone, they became determined to find out what really happened to him.

They could get help from Congress. U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery has joined with other members to put pressure on the military to reopen the case of Shults' son, as well as 14 others involving alleged suicides.

"I think the Air Force did a slipshod job of investigating this case and, for whatever reason, I just don't think it was done in a very professional manner," Slattery said.

As of now, the Air Force has no plans to reopen the case.

POLICE REPORTS

These reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the KSU and Riley County Police Departments. Because of incomplete information, not all crimes are listed.

K-STATE POLICE

MONDAY, AUGUST 30

At 9:00 a.m., Gary Croucher, Haymaker 103, reported a subject putting construction barricades from lot A14 into back of pick-up truck. Officers were unable to locate anyone and couldn't be sure if one or two were missing if any, since the barricades belonged to the construction firm.

At 9:10 a.m., Riley Police requested an ambulance for Terri Walz, who passed out in Seaton 106. Subject refused treatment and transportation.

At 11:18 a.m., an ambulance was requested for Carol Setser, who passed out in Call Hall 206. Subject refused transport and treatment.

At 1:00 p.m., Frank Smith, A32 Jardine, requested assistance for keys locked in a vehicle west of Dykstra Hall.

Campus police reported Andrew Burden, 439 Putnam Hall, had fallen in Eisenhower. Riley County Ambulance responded, and subject was taken to the Saint Mary Hospital for a possible fractured arm.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

MONDAY, AUGUST 30

At 9:01 a.m., Nancy Haines, employee at the Memorial Hospital gift shop, reported $52 missing from the cash drawer.

At 12:50 p.m., Travis Tyson reported a major-damage vehicle accident at the intersection of Fremont Street and North Manhattan Avenue involving Tyson and Helen Brazzle.

At 2:28 p.m., Laura Keesecker reported a major-damage vehicle accident at the intersection of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue involving Keesecker and Patricia Olson.

At 2:42 p.m., Brian Fonce reported a major-damage vehicle accident at the intersection of 17th Street and Fort Riley Boulevard involving Fonce and Paula Baruth. Fonce complained of a headache, but refused treatment. Baruth was transported to Memorial Hospital for possible leg and wrist injuries.

At 2:55 p.m., Frederick Schmidt, employee at Kansas Lumber Co., reported a major-damage accident in the parking lot involving a parked American Freightways tractor-trailer and a forklift driven by an unidentified employee.

At 4:10 p.m., Barbara Shannon reported criminal damage to the rear window and door lock of her blazer. Loss was $600.

Faculty Senate implements long-range planning, policies

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

One issue of importance to students — the academic undergraduate minors program, will be examined closely by Faculty Senate this semester.

Faculty Senate approved the program on April 15.

Steffany Carrel, junior in public relations and Faculty Senate representative, is a Student Senate representative elected within Student Senate to serve as a laison between Student Senate and the Faculty Senate.

"This body (Faculty Senate) passes significant pieces of legislation that really affect the student body," Carrel said. "There's not closed doors, but I feel I need to be there to let everyone know what's going on."

As a Faculty Senate representative, Carrel works as a member of the academic affairs division.

"It is my job to be a persistant voice for the students," Carrel said.

"It's like a bookcase. Now all the books need to be filled in," she said.

Minors program proposals still need to be submitted and examined by the Academic Affairs Committee and passed by Faculty Senate.

The Senate is composed of 81 members. Elections for Senators occur within each college or unit, and the number elected is in proportion to the size of the college.

For example, within the College of Arts and Sciences, seven new senators are elected each year using a dual ballot, Michie said.

Terms last three years, and senators are allowed no more than two consecutive terms. Senators may then choose to run for re-election after sitting out for one year.

MEETINGS

■ Faculty Senate meets at 3:30 p.m. the second Tuesday of every month in the Big Eight Room of the K-State Union.

Within the Faculty Senate itself there are three main committees — Faculty Affairs, Academic Affairs and Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning (FSCOUP).

The Faculty Affairs Committee is chaired by Jim Dubois, assoc. professor interior architecture, and deals with harassment cases, faculty salaries and general faculty grievances.

"They are the policy recommending and monitoring body," Michie said.

Decisions made by faculty affairs must be approved by the K-State administration.

The Academic Affairs Committee deals with issues such as academic standards and conduct, curriculum changes and the deletion of courses.

"By contrast (to faculty affairs), its decisions are binding," Michie said.

This means decisions made are put into effect after approval by the Kansas Board of Regents.

"Academics is a committee of Faculty Senate there to revise and make recomendations to Faculty Senate on any issues relating to a course or curriculum, academic standards and academic policies," Bill Schapaugh, chairman of the committee, said.

Academic affairs will be dealing with a variety of topics this fall, Schapaugh said.

One issue is the policy for handling advisement for students with low grade point averages. Other issues academic affairs will be looking at include the rising trend of having non-standard test times and the academic dishonesty statement in the student and faculty handbooks, Schapaugh said.

FSCOUP is a committee that was established in the mid-1980s. It is chaired by the former Faculty Senate president and was established primarily to deal with program discontinuencies.

FSCOUP is currently overseeing the idea of discontinuing the Speech Pathology and Audiology program within the Speech Department, an issue that is still being settled, Brad Fenwick, assoc. prof in mythology and microbiology, chairman for FSCOUP, said.

FSCOUP's role is evolving and has become more involved, Michie said.

In the past few years, FSCOUP has started dealing with long-range planning, Fenwick said.

"This committee doesn't tend to play an active role until it is needed," he said.

FSCOUP is examining the projected increase in students who will enroll at K-State, Fenwick said.

"What it involves over the next few years is that a mini-baby boom will be an approximate 19 percent increase in graduating students in Kansas," Fenwick said.

Slattery speaks

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., left, talks to Harold Mertz, middle, and Robert Mertz about flood damage to the Mertz' farmland east of Zeandale. Slattery was in the K-State Union Monday afternoon for a discussion about Superfund, the nation's largest federal environmental hazardous waste clean-up program.

"I wanted to express my opinion of the Corps (of Engineers), not only about Tuttle Creek, but problems I've had for the past three years," Harold Mertz said. Mertz' property was protected by a levee system before the flood.

Opinions clash on smoking

"We need a place for these people."

Jack Sills, Union director, said many colleges are banning smoking from their student unions and campus buildings. He said he believes allowing smoking in the Union would be the opposite of a nationwide trend.

K-State students have mixed opinions.

Arts and Sciences Sen. Amy Smith said she opposes smoking in the Union.

"I oppose smoking in all campus buildings due to the effects of second-hand smoke on non-smokers," Smith said. "I opposed the resolution presented last year, and I will oppose any presented this year."

Alex Corum, freshman in secondary education, who regularly smokes outside the Union, said he would like the smoking ban lifted.

"It would be cool in the winter not to have to freeze," Corum said. "I also don't like all the crowding that happens when it's raining."

The UGB task force will continue to meet until the issue is resolved.

"If students are concerned about this, we need to hear from them — pro or con," LeDoux said.

Five members of the Fraternity traveled to Ohio to a leadership seminar for Lambda Chi members, where they were awarded the plaque by a former K-State graduate.

Justin Apprill, sophomore in architectural engineering, attended the award ceremony.

"We received a standing ovation. I still get goose bumps," he said.

After winning the award, a chapter is ineligible to compete for three years. K-State's Lambda Chi's have won it six times since 1978.

"A lot of it is tradition. It's on everyone's shoulders," Jarrod Fish, vice president, said. "When new guys join, we stress the importance of the award. It's not all just fun and meeting people."

Criteria for the award covers areas such as successful events programming, quality of members, strength of leadership, and discipline.

Judging is done by representatives from the national fraternity headquarters. Consultants tour each chapter once a semester to appraise their quality.

Apprill said this year's consultants felt K-State's Lambda Chi chapter was superior in officer leadership, and membership quality, as well as scoring highly in all other categories.

The consultant meets with the officers, their Greek advisers and Greek Affairs at each prospective school.

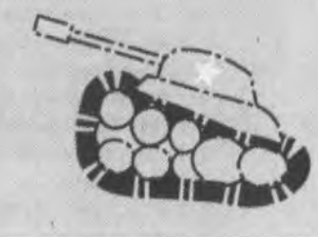
Raid reveals U.S. need of getting its goals remodeled

During the past year, the U.S. armed forces' goals in Somalia have been getting cloudier by the day. Hence, the question, "What have they accomplished there during the past months?" has begun to surface.

Since late 1992, the U.S. armed forces have been part of the 28,000 United Nations soldiers in that country to provide relief to the thousands of starving Somalians.

The citizens seemed very open to the troops' presence and their humanitarian efforts. That was back when Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid walked freely on the streets of Mogadishu, and the U.N. soldiers were not being picketed and attacked by his followers.

Today, four U.S. soldiers are dead, three from Fort Riley, along with eight other U.N. troops and 26 Pakistani peacekeepers. Troops are being confronted by angry mobs, and a month-long search for Aidid himself has been unsuccessful.



The most recent incident in the search for Aidid happened Sunday night when a group of fifty elite American soldiers attacked a building they believed to be his headquarters. They took the building with little resistance and held the occupants at gunpoint for a couple of hours.

As it turned out, it was not the headquarters of Aidid. Instead, it was an U.N. headquarters.

This monumental mistake is only the most recent event showing the lack of communication and goals between the 29 different nations that make up the U.N. force.

After Sunday night's attack, the question has become, "Are the different countries within the U.N. force even communicating with each other?" Also, "Should the United States pull out of Somalia?"

We need to review our role in Somalia. If we decide American forces should remain there, then there needs to be some clear goals and a re-establishment in the lines of communication between the armies that make up the U.N. force.

JUST SITTING, WATCHING THE WORLD BLUR BY

"This old porch is just a long time waitin' and forgettin'/remembering the coming back, not crying about the leaving/and remembering the falling down, and the laughter and the cursed luck/of all those sons-of-bitches who said we'd never get back up."

— "The Front Porch Song," Robert Earl Keen Jr.

If I had to pick my most favorite thing (no small feat for someone prone to hyperbole and superlatives) it would probably be my porch.

Simple pleasures for simple people, some would say. But there simply is nothing better than a good book, a 32-ounce iced tea, a pack of Marlboro Lights, Willie Nelson coming from speakers facing an open window and bugs swarming around a dim porch light.

This Sunday, while I bombed my house for fleas, the book was Jane Smiley's "A Thousand Acres," a book about farmers and the land.

With the windows closed to keep in the toxins, instead of Willie, I heard crickets and cicadas. I watched my roommate's dog eat grass. My grandpa would say it was going to rain. He would have been right.

The only thing better than a porch is a porch during a summer shower. During the wet-T-shirt contest.

Mother Nature arranged on campus Monday afternoon, I went to my next-favorite porch on the east side of Kedzie Hall to take a break from work. I watched students run from the rain as if it were a mortar shower. But this break was different.

LAJEAN RAU

I huddled in the corner, still getting wet, cursing University Facilities for ruining the moment. Something, it seems, is wrong with Kedzie's roof. Scaffolds have marred the side of the building for months.

Just under the edge of the 100-year-old stone overhang, they have strategically placed three huge pieces of plywood on those scaffolds. So, all the water that would normally fall onto the stairs of the porch, Monday fell onto the plywood, and into the faces of the people silly enough to seek shelter there.

Everyone in the South has porches, hearkening back to the days before central heating and air conditioning. They make a place friendly. Manhattan has a lot of porches. The best parties are on porches.

I have many memories of the porch of my childhood. It was a look-out point during thunderstorms, something to which farm families pay close attention.

I remember swinging on the porch swing my siblings and I got to refinish every few years, but which has gone many years now without a new coat of varnish. Some of the memories are peaceful. Sunsets, quiet rain and books and iced tea, even then.

Some are horrifying. I remember shivering, even in the heat. Lightening making every hair on my body stand on end, and thunder making my heart feel like it would explode.

I saw tornadoes there, and hail that bounced playfully in my yard while, in the field, it obliterated my dad's crops.

But we always went to the porch during storms, staying until my mom made us go to the basement. Dad always got to stay on the porch and watch.

I gained a different perspective on porches this summer.

There were a lot of them in the pictures of the Flood of '93. Lots of tears fell on them. Lots of people held each other, not enjoying the summer evenings on their porch swings, but comforting each other in their loss.

Sometimes you're safe there; sometimes you're not. Usually, the rain won't fall on you, but if the wind blows hard enough, it will sting your face.

Usually, you watch the storm and pick up a few branches afterward. But sometimes you have to leave your porch, and when you come back, it's underwater, along with the first floor of your house. Sometimes you come back to nothing. No porch, no house.

Something about people makes them want to be a part of what alters their lives, whether it be good or bad.

My dad watched hail destroy his crops. My friends watch tornadoes destroy their neighbors' houses. They could have gone inside.

On the porch, you're neither really inside or outside. It's a limbo area between the security of dry, worn, warmness of our homes and the raw unpredictability of Mother Nature they protect us from.

People will rebuild. And like the resiliency of the land, they will bounce back and watch next year's storms from new porches.

Education majors owe it to themselves to avoid cheating

Editor,

Probably half of the people reading this letter have cheated at least once on a test. I base this assumption upon the consistent findings of research done from the 1960s to the early '90s indicating that slightly more than half of all college students have engaged in such behavior.

As an education major, I find this especially disturbing. Disturbing because education majors appear to cheat with the same regularity as the general student population. Ask an education major if you don't believe me. And if you think that those who run for elected office, those whose pictures are on display in Bluemont Hall, are all of higher ethical standards, think again.

This problem raises several questions: Should education majors be expected to be more ethical than other students? Are some teachers unprepared for their profession because they cheated their way through college and, if not, does this mean that content-area courses are largely irrelevant? Are teachers who cheated in college ambivalent about enforcing ethical rules in their classrooms, or are they comfortably hypocritical?

The most important question to ask college students is not only, "Have you ever cheated?" but more importantly, "Did you ever do it again?" We all make bad decisions, but we are supposed to learn from them and not repeat them. I put myself in this latter category.

Yes, I cheated on a test once; I felt bad about it for years; I never did it again. So, for those of you who do not care for my self-righteous tone, this confession gives you the opportunity to condemn. For those of you who continue to cheat, I ask you to reconsider, or get out of education.

Philosophy professor should listen to others instead of criticizing

Editor,

In the Aug. 30 Collegian, Associate Professor of Philosophy James Hamilton would like to censor which Landon Lecturers K-State students listen to, particularly Pat Robertson.

It is ironic that a philosopher, a lover of wisdom, does not want to discuss the truth or falsity of Robertson's ideas.

Professor Hamilton would rather suppress them with weak logic and "ad hominem" attacks.

Instead, Professor Hamilton's title should read: Associate Professor of Sophistry.

Tell us, Bill, why did he really do it?

SARA SMITH

There are very few times when I can honestly say I am ashamed to be an American.

When all of those innocent children in Waco died because we lost patience, I was ashamed. When I saw the Zapruder film of JFK's assassination for the first time, I was ashamed.

And last week I was ashamed again. For the voters of our country.

It wasn't about some breach of trust by the government or some covert action by the CIA. It didn't even receive national news coverage.

Even though I hardly consider myself a fan of Rush Limbaugh, I was flipping through the channels the other night with some friends, and we watched a rerun of his TV show. And I almost became physically ill because of our president.

This is how it all began. On April 28, Rush Limbaugh showed a video clip of Janet Reno in a confrontation with Rep. John Conyers Jr. (a Democrat from the 14th District in Michigan) during the Waco hearings. Rush showed it because he wanted to chortle at two Democrats bickering openly, and also because he thought Conyers was rude.

What you saw on the clip, but that Rush didn't mention once, was that Rep. Conyers is black. Not once did Rush say a word about anyone's race. It was irrelevant to anything.

Well, guess who brought it up.

Limbaugh showed another clip featuring Mr. Clinton giving a speech at some fancy dinner. He was in the middle of one of his unsuccessful attempts to be funny. He brought up the subject of Mr. Limbaugh.

Clinton said, and I quote, "Did you like the way Rush took up for Janet Reno the other night on his TV show? He only did it because she was attacked by a black guy."

The entire room of people I was watching with sat in stunned silence. Somebody said, "I can't believe he said that." I couldn't either.

Think about that. The President of the United States of America has sunk low enough to accuse a critical talk-show host of being a racist in order to smear his reputation.

He only did it because she was attacked by a black guy.

Rush's response was, "Mr. President, I apologize. I should have known that to defend a white person in a confrontation with a black person is automatically racist."

William Jefferson Blythe Clinton was elected to the highest office in the land. We put the guy in charge. He has incredible power, and this is the kind of person he is.

He only did it because she was attacked by a black guy.

I've heard all the arguments about how personal character doesn't matter. Well, the truth is that we didn't elect a party platform or a list of objectives and promises. We put a man in office, and we put all of him in office. We didn't just elect the Bill Clinton of press conferences and fireside chats.

We elected Bill Clinton the father, the husband, the son and the career politician. And now, Bill Clinton the employer of lies and smear tactics for political gain. Bill Clinton the manipulator of racial tensions.

He only did it because she was attacked by a black guy.

Out of all the men in America, this is the one the voters elected. It doesn't make me proud to be an American. Quite the contrary.

That anybody could still support the president after that display of corruption of character makes me sick. I don't care that it was supposed to be a joke. Presidential words have power.

Everything the president says goes through handlers and writers. I mean, this comment was examined and analyzed and determined to be acceptable and humorous.

He only did it because she was attacked by a black guy.

Oh, Mr. President, you crack me up.

Hunters taught safety, ethics

Hunter-and-safety courses federally required

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

Attention to all hunters: it is time for dove season.

Dove and teal season begins on Sept. 1 and continues to the end of October.

Hunter-education courses are being offered this fall in conjunction with the opening dates of hunting seasons throughout the year. In all, 12 courses will be taught.

"To become certified in the state, it takes a minimum of 10 hours in a hunter-and-safety course," said Steve Stackhouse, hunter education coordinator for the Kansas Department for Wildlife and Parks.

Hunter-and-safety courses are federally mandated in Kansas in order to receive a hunting license. Courses are expected to be tailored to each state depending on the game.

Last year, 350 students were certified through the K-State program.

These courses are only required to be taken once, but courses are suggested to be taken every five to six years to update any new safety tips.

"The bulk of the classroom are hunters from the ages of 12 to 25," Spencer Tomb, certified KDWP instructor, said.

People planning on going out into the fields are not the only ones encouraged to take the course.

Anyone owning land that is frequently used for hunting should attend the classes to get a feel for what the legal guidelines are, Tomb said.

The students take the course to get a better idea of what is considered abusive behavior, Tomb said.

This course has been offered at K-State for the past 15 years, and there are also extension programs out of Salina and Fort Riley.

The years have shown the differences this course makes in hunting-related injury accidents.

"Last year was the safest year yet — only 21 accidents and zero fatalities," Stackhouse said.

Wheat pricing studied at K-State

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

K-State has been asked by the Kansas Wheat Commission to develop a new wheat pricing system.

"The problem is the price of wheat is below cost of production," said Steven Graham, administrator of the Kansas Wheat Commission.

"Wheat production has plateaued the last couple of years," he said.

Production increase has stalled out, and price has declined, Graham said.

"What we want to do is take into account the cost of production. Usually we try to affect the demand and thus the price. This is the most direct project related to pricing we've ever done," Graham said.

The commission asked K-State to help because of its stature in the agriculture system.

"K-State would be the logical group to go to," Graham said. "We are in Kansas. It would make sense to start with K-State first."

Orlan Buller, interim head of agriculture economics, said developing a new pricing system is a complex issue.

"It's going to take time to look through the issues," Buller said. "Right now we're in the discussion stage."

"The problem is the price of wheat is below the cost of production."
STEVEN GRAHAM
KANSAS WHEAT COMMISSION ADMINISTRATOR

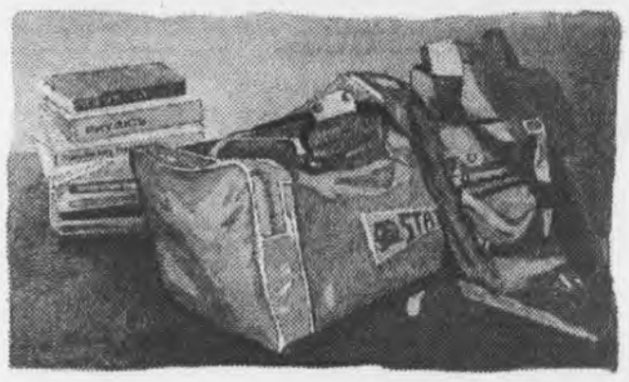
"We're at the stage of setting up a time and putting our heads together to come up with some strategies we can work on," he said.

Currently the price of wheat is between $2.70 and $3.03 per bushel. The new pricing system won't have much of an effect on the consumer, Buller said.

"The price of wheat to the farmer could increase without significant impact to the consumer," he said.

The decision to come up with a new pricing system came about through new board members on the Kansas Wheat Commission. The commission is made up of seven wheat producers who are appointed by Gov. Joan Finney. Four new members were appointed in July.

"When new members of the board are appointed, they always bring in a new agenda," Graham said.



"All funding for the project comes from the wheat producers. The big project is to increase wheat foods in American diets. Everything we're doing at the commission is to try to create new markets," he said.

"We're trying to increase the market for wheat and therefore the price," Graham said.

Finances plague NMS series

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

This Saturday's match-up between K-State and New Mexico State will likely be the last.

For the third time in four years, the Aggies will travel to Manhattan, but as far as the Aggies' head coach Jim Hess is concerned, it is not a worthwhile journey.

"We need to add money to our budget to be successful, and this series with Kansas State has held us back financially," Hess said.

NMSU plays its home games in the 30,343-seat Memorial Stadium in Las Cruces. It is a stadium which has rarely been full because of poor past performance and a general lack of population in the Las Cruces area.

"I resent playing Kansas State because of the money they are paying us. We need to be playing for at least $200,000, and we are only getting $100,000 at K-State," he said.

Hess said that New Mexico State's football program would not make a profit even if they sold out every game.

Numerous football programs across the country find themselves in this same predicament — the most recent example being last Saturday's Kickoff Classic pitting No.1 Florida State against Kansas.

KU was obviously overmatched and somewhat embarrassed during the game, but the Jayhawks will feel better when they cash their $650,000 check.

According to a contract signed in 1989, New Mexico State was obligated to play K-State in 1990, 1992 and 1993 for $100,000 per game.

"How much a team is paid all depends what kind of stadium the game is played in, the name a team has made for itself and how bad you need to add a game to your schedule," said Jack Key, associate athletic director in charge of Physical Affairs.

Key said that the Wildcats' next opponent, Western Kentucky, will be paid $90,000 for their effort, and K-State will be paid $150,000 for the game at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome against Minnesota.

"In last year's game against Iowa State, we had a national television audience, and both teams were paid $300,000 to $400,000," Key said.

He said that every major conference in the country, with the exception of the PAC 10, the Big 10 and independents like Notre Dame, negotiates schedules through the College Football Association.

"As more teams break away from the CFA, it lessens our bargaining power, but it is still a relatively powerful group," Key said.

Because of the power that the CFA has, Key felt that lesser teams from smaller markets had a fair chance at getting good games and an equal opportunity for getting bowl games.

"What K-State is doing is buying victories — that's reality," Coach Hess said. "Other teams are out there buying victories for $300,000 dollars. Those are the kind of games we need to get into if we plan to improve our program."

Word dealt to Vikings

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs, who last week cut their ties to fullback Christian Okoye, traded fullback Barry Word to the Minnesota Vikings on Monday for an undisclosed 1994 draft choice.

The Word trade was another twist in the mystifying saga of two 1,000-yard power backs. Okoye gained 1,480 yards in 1989 and 1,031 yards in 1991. Word gained 1,015 yards in 1990.

Coach Marty Schottenheimer's offense in his first four years with the Chiefs has emphasized power running, but the Chiefs haven't gone beyond the divisional playoffs in that time, which led to radical changes this year.

Kansas City acquired Joe Montana and Marcus Allen and installed a San Francisco 49ers-style attack under new offensive coordinator Paul Hackett. It features a short passing game unsuited to the talents of Okoye or Word.

Word, the club's leading rusher the past three seasons with 2,439 yards, held out all of training camp along with fellow running back Todd McNair before finally signing last week on the Chiefs' terms. McNair also signed last week.

Okoye was put on injured reserve when the Chiefs made their first roster cut last week and cannot play for the team this year under NFL rules.

Harvey Williams, a first-round pick in 1991, started the first three preseason games at tailback, and Allen started Saturday. Kimble Anders, signed as a free agent in 1991, is now the likely fullback.

In a separate deal Monday, the Chiefs also sent tackle Rich Baldinger to the New England Patriots for an undisclosed 1994 draft choice.

Baldinger, 33, played 142 games for the Chiefs from 1982-93. He had been the Chiefs' starting right tackle the past three seasons.

Neujahr anchors seasoned line

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Eleven years of combined experience on the line are expected to turn the offense around this year after last year's decline.

Rushing and passing numbers fell after the 1991 season due to the loss of three letter winners. This year, four starters return to the line, and another lineman, who has won a national championship, has been added.

K-State head coach Bill Snyder said he was wants depth on the front line.

"Our concerns might have been to complete a two-deep in our offensive line," Snyder said. "I feel comfortable with our starters at the present time. They are experienced, focused, and they have strength.

"We finished spring ball with eight guys we felt that would contribute to our two-deep, and we would like to have a few more come front-and-center."

The offensive line is geared around center Quentin Neujahr, an all-America candidate who has started every game for the Wildcats.

"He is very important to the offense," Snyder said. "He has taken nearly every snap since he has been here."

Eric Wolford and Eric Clayton will play beside Neujahr at the guards' position. Wolford is a three-time letter-winner, despite missing a couple of games last year to injuries.

Clayton moved to the opposite side of the ball after playing defensive tackle in the 1990 and 1991 campaigns.

"He had an awfully good spring and deserves to start," Snyder said of Clayton, who was redshirted last season. "He gets better every day. I'm proud of what he has done, but he needs to lose a little weight."

The starting tackles for K-State are juniors Barrett Brooks and Jim Hmielewski. Brooks made the Football News' third-team sophomore all-America honors while starting 10 games for K-State, and Hmielewski returns after sharing the right tackle position with Mike Orr last season.

"The line is looking for more consistency," Hmielewski said. "We want to decline the number of sacks and protect the quarterback better than last season."

Back-ups expected to see playing time are tackles Chris Oltmanns and Scott Heun, guards Ross Greenwood and Bryan Campbell, who won a national championship with Colorado in 1990, and center Jason Johnson.

"They are confident, and they'll improve from last season," Latina said. "I think we'll surprise a lot of people."

▶MORRISON TKO'S TOMASHEK IN BIZARRE TITLE DEFENSE

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Tommy Morrison scored a fourth-round technical knockout over last-minute replacement Tim Tomashek Monday night in a bizarre first defense of his World Boxing Organization heavyweight title.

Mike Williams, Morrison's scheduled opponent, withdrew about an hour before the 12-round bout after refusing to take a drug test, said promoter Bob Arum.

The crowd, which booed Arum's announcement that Williams had left, booed even louder when Morrison was awarded a TKO over his paunchy opponent, a journeyman from Green Bay, Wis., with a 34-10 record.

Arum would not say the drug test was the reason for Williams' withdrawal.

"The official word is Mike turned yellow and left," said Bob Jordan, manager for Williams. "He said he pulled a muscle in his back. We had two doctors check him out, and they could not find an injury. His wife said there's nothing wrong with him."

Morrison, 38-1, a Kansas City resident who is scheduled to fight World Boxing Council champ Lennox Lewis in March, repeatedly scored with left jabs in the early rounds and then put Tomashek down hard with a combination to the head in the fourth.

In the meantime, confusion reigned throughout Kemper Arena over the abrupt pullout of Williams, a former sparring partner of Morrison's who lost to him in a fictionalized fight in the movie "Rocky V."

"These people (Top Rank Inc.) said if it's money, they would pay him anything he wanted," said Jordan.

"It wasn't the money. He just walked out. He's out front waiting for a taxi to pick him up. I was his manager. He's a bum."

Bill Cayton, co-manager for Morrison, said Williams, 21-3, left with back spasms.

Williams, waiting for a cab outside the arena, would not discuss his reason for pulling out, although he said it was not because of a drug test.

Arum announced the change in plans to the crowd and said he would refund tickets to any spectator wanting one.

"We have a very good fighter lined up to take his place," Arum told the crowd, which responded with boos.

▶ROYALS, LIND AGREE ON 2-YEAR, $5.2-MILLION DEAL

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Second baseman Jose Lind, who has given the Kansas City Royals their best second-base defense since days of Frank White, agreed to a $5.2-million, two-year contract extension.

Lind, who won a Gold Glove with Pittsburgh last year, gets a $500,000 signing bonus, $2.1 million in 1994 and $2.6 million in 1995 under terms of the deal announced Sunday.

Lind is currently the top-fielding second baseman in the AL, with a .992 percentage and only four errors.

He went into Sunday's game with a .251 average. His lifetime mark is .254.

He and shortstop Greg Gagne, acquired as a free agent from Minnesota, turned a leaky infield defense into one of the toughest in the league.

Lind could have been a free agent at the end of this year.

Before coming to Kansas City, Lind spent 10 years in the Pittsburgh organization, then was traded on Nov. 19 for pitchers Dennis Moeller and Joel Johnston.

OUTDOOR COLUMN

Outlook for dove season looks good

Ron Ford, owner of RMF Guide Service in Manhattan, is a local expert on fish and game in the area. Ford said the dove season, which opens tomorrow, should be a good one.

He said hot spots for dove include wheat fields that have been plowed under, waterways, sunflower patches and even hemp patches.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

This area of Kansas is host to various areas which fit this description, Ford said.

Success this year should be found in the mornings when the dove are going into the fields and patches to feed on grains and seed.

The evenings should prove the most fruitful by hunting near waterways. Be selective when hunting ponds. There are vast amounts of standing water around the area, causing the dove to be more spread out and harder to find.

If you have found an area with all of these characteristics, you are in good shape.

I asked Ford for advice on places for students to hunt.

He said one possibility is to go out scouting for birds well before the day you are wanting to hunt and ask landowners for permission to hunt their land.

"Don't go out the Saturday you want to hunt and beat on a farmer's door," he said. "It may be their day off, and they may not want to be bothered."

Any outdoorsman should already know to go out and knock on doors and talk to farmers and rural landowners well before the time you plan to get out and hunt.

Some of the farmers will not only allow you to hunt their ground, but they will also give you tips on where they have seen game.

Once you do get permission to hunt the land, under no circumstances should you abuse this privilege.

Tell the landowner exactly how many will be in your group and when you will be there.

Another important thing to ask the landowner is if there is any sections of land which you should not hunt. Some farmers don't want people hunting around their livestock.

Ford also offered suggestions about hunting other people's land.

"Always thank them for letting you hunt when you are done. Offer them some of the game.

"And when the holidays come around, don't forget about them," he said. "Drop them a card, a ham or if you know a certain kind of beer or wine they drink, drop some by."

It is always important to let the landowners know you appreciate their generosity. Often, when you do, they will talk to neighbors, and this could even help you out in getting permission to hunt their land.

Not all landowners will let you hunt their land, which is their right.

Fort Riley has vast amounts of land and game on the base, all of which is accessible by the public for a very reasonable fee.

For more information on hunting land on the Fort Riley base you can call Fort Riley's Natural Resources Office.

Interns re-live 18th Century era

Students rebuild agricultural life at Mt. Vernon

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Two K-State students traveled back in time by spending their summer in 18th-century Virginia.

Craig Gross, junior in agricultural business, and Stephanie Loeppke, senior in animal science, served as paid interns at Mt. Vernon, George Washington's farm.

The two took part in the first year of a five-year program aimed at replicating Mt. Vernon as it was in the 18th century, said Cliff Gates, coordinator of interns at Mt. Vernon.

"I was exposed to many different things," Loeppke said. "I learned a lot about George Washington and his approach to farming."

Gross, Loeppke and six other interns dressed in 18th-century costumes during their 12 weeks at the farm. The interns built two clay pits, three shelters and an 18th-century brickyard. In addition, they cultivated crops using replica tools.

STEPHANIE LOEPPKE

"It took so much time. More craft and skill were used in a project," Loeppke said. "It made me appreciate what they built."

The focus of the five-year project is the replication of Washington's 16-sided barn, Gates said. The brickyard and clay pits Gross and Loeppke worked on this summer are part of the first phase of production, he said. The bricks they constructed will be used in the reproduction of the barn.

Although the barn is the focal point of the project, Gates said, there are many other aspects to the farm. Gross and Loeppke contributed their skills to specialized areas, he said.

CRAIG GROSS

Loeppke put her extensive experience with showing and raising animals to use when she worked with the oxen team, she said. The team consisted of Devondry yearlings, the breed Washington raised, she said.

After the oxen have been completely trained, she said, they will be put to work in the fields.

Gross concentrated on Washington's agricultural experiments. Washington's experimentation with machinery, crop rotation and construction is a vital part of agriculture, he said.

Gates commended Loeppke's and Gross' skills.

"The project started off well, principally because of the interns," he said. "Craig and Stephanie were absolutely superior."

In addition to their work, the interns attended two lectures a week geared for the interpretation of 18th-century culture, Gross said. The lectures addressed subjects such as dress, slavery, clothing and medicine, he said.

Gross and Loeppke commented on the talented people and the unforgettable experiences they had.

"We each had talents to contribute, and we got the project off to a good start," Loeppke said. "I will remember the people and friendships. I think of them every day."

Student researches history of outdoor art

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

No one seemed to question the story behind the big fork north of King Hall — until Ed Larson came along.

Larson, senior in fine arts, is in the process of researching the dozen remaining pieces of outdoor sculpture left on the K-State campus.

"My job is to catalog and do a conservation study on the state of each piece. It's just something I wanted to do. No one had a list of the sculptures on campus," Larson said. "I said I would do it."

Larson is archiving the pieces in accordance with the Save Outdoor Sculptures program.

The SOS program is sponsored by both the Smithsonian Institute and the National Institute for Conservation. Its primary function is to catalog outdoor sculpture and report on its condition.

The SOS program has further ties to K-State. Jessica Reichman, Curator of the Beach Museum of Art, helped write the questionnaire and the guidebook that is sent to people interested in archiving outdoor sculpture.

Reichman said the goal of the program is to record all existing outdoor sculpture in America within two years.

"Ed's doing a great job," Reichman said. "I'm impressed with his curiosity and his ability to follow through with this research."

Larson's first task is to find background information on each piece. The majority of this information comes from previous Collegian articles found in the University Archives.

Larson said he then investigates the sculpture itself. He figures out what the sculpture is made of and then studies the structural condition of the piece, looking for instability, missing parts, breaks or cracks. The surface condition must also be determined by photographing rust, algae and bird excrement.

Finally, Larson said he measures the piece and identifies its location in relation to potentially damaging extrusive factors such as trees, traffic or flying-disc golfers using the piece for a goal.

Through his research, Larson said he has found that most sculpture on campus wasn't done by established professional sculptors. It was done by K-State students in a workshop called Art in Situation held in the summers of 1969, '70 and '71.

The workshops were directed by Charles Clement, then director of Art in Situation, John Vogt, sculptor and faculty member, and Rex Replogle, associate professor of art.

"K-State matched other sponsors' contributions, giving students the capability to build large-scale landscape art," Larson said. "The purpose of the workshop was to bring together three disciplines — art, architecture and landscape architecture in the origination of aesthetically pleasing art."

He will be writing a brochure describing each sculpture in detail, Larson said. He will also be drawing a campus map that includes each piece for sightseers.

Larson said his favorite sculpture on campus is the piece between Kedzie and Fairchild Hall.

"It's an experiment in using industrial equipment," he said. "It's actually a railroad axle shaped with an industrial clip hammer, welded to a railroad wheel. It's called Spiral Jade."

Weather library keeps century of data

MICHELLE SCHROEDER
Collegian

K-State students have the opportunity to collect climate information from the Weather Data Library located on campus.

This library serves as an aid for the students, whether they are completing a simple project, such as a map based on climate, or an intense research study.

Mary Knapp, who supervises the observations in the library in Umberger Hall, said she recognizes the findings to be a useful resource for students.

"The most common elements people are looking for are temperature and rainfall for a class assignment," she said.

By storing consistent climate records that go back at least 100 years, the weather library can provide informational summaries compiled from the data, references to other data sources and films such as a weather-channel video.

Knapp said the weather library is the most centralized way of acquiring the climate information students might need.

Although there is a government document section in Farrell Library that might be useful in finding climate information, the weather library is more convenient, Knapp said.

"A lot of data is available electronically, so they don't have to search through paper copies to find data," Knapp said.

The weather library maintains the weather data archives, which were originally organized to aid research workers at the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Live on the edge. Road trip it to some unknown destiny and hang out at a 7-11 store while enjoying a slurpee.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)— Things are looking in your direction today, including that certain someone you've had your eye on. Tonight forget studying, the night air is filled with excitement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Today live a little. Put your hands over your head and run through the lawn sprinkler.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Reminisce on your youthful days. Who says you can't ride your bike around town and chase the ice cream man.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Remember Elvis loves you, baby. Break out the polyester and the Elvis records and sing at the top of your lungs for the king.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The worse is behind you so forget it and move on. Let the pyro in you come out, build a bonfire and belly dance around it with your friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Dare to be different today. Put your underwear on backwards and run around the house singing the underoo's theme song.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Be a total animal today. Perhaps an ant crawling through the dirt, constantly afraid of getting squashed by a smelly sneaker.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You are full of talent today. See how long you can stand on your head while blowing a bubble with bozooka bubble gum.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) —Share your talents with someone. Show them your technique you use to count the number of licks it takes to get to the tootsie roll.

REVIEW

Guitarist's album exhibits new style

DAVID EUGENE FRESE
Collegian

Suzy Bogguss. Bonnie Raitt. Kelly Willis. Jeff Healey. Delbert McClinton.

You know these names.

Hiatt is the songwriter behind many tunes the above singers have hit the charts with in the past three or four years.

Though music critics have almost universally applauded the efforts of John Hiatt's albums, he has not been able to turn them into commercial, album-selling successes like the artists who cover his songs.

It is possible this could change with his new album, "Perfectly Good Guitar," due in stores Sept. 6.

They have put together a "younger"-sounding album of old guitars and distortion pedals — something you would be hard-pressed to find in Hiatt's three previous solo albums.

Hiatt's patented poetic-with-a-grin lyrics remain on the new album, and his wit pervades throughout. The man can write a song. That's for sure.

Hiatt starts the album with an angry, growling version of "Something Wild," a song Iggy Pop performed on his 1989 album.

What follows roams the gamut of categories.

The title track laments the loss of every "perfectly good guitar" smashed by indiscriminate young rockers.

In a sold-out show in Lawrence last month, Hiatt received mixed reviews on his new songs. Some of his older fans wondered what had happened to that old John Hiatt. Some were impressed with his lack of fear in trying on a new style. To me, Hiatt is just playing rock 'n' roll, and it's perfectly good.

Forget the good china, wait for the stars

Dear Casssandra,

Recent experiences have been testing my faith in the virtues of morality. I once thought my life would turn out like a Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young video. Now I'm wondering if I should give in and worry about buying a jacuzzi and a sports car. I need advice. Right now only my dog and a pack of cigarettes understand.

Thanks much,
Naively idealistic

Dear Soul Mate o' Mine,

It was always a Joni Mitchell video for me ... yet I understand where you've looked up to find yourself.

For me, however, it was only my pillow and two packs of menthols that could empathize with my thoughts. I felt so displaced sometimes, I scared myself.

The virtues of morality will always be tested now and again. It's the pattern of life. It's the flaw.

But don't worry about the jacuzzi or the sports car or the "good china." They don't matter.

You know that.

They only exist to the people who have dried up inside. They only matter to the people who are just playing the game to win ... to the people who only care about what they've hoarded in their little corner of their world.

I think you'll be okay.

Go out to the Konza, friend.

Or perhaps fishing.

Take your dog and a pack of cigarettes. Watch the sun set. Wait for the stars.

You just may find what you need.

Really.

Fred Phelps, pastor of the Topeka Westboro Baptist Church, began his crusade against homosexuals in 1989. With the help of his nine children and their children, Phelps regularly pickets Gage Park and various churches around Topeka.

Above: a Phelps family member hauls a sign down the Gage Boulevard sidewalk. The family was picketing in front of The Vintage, a Topeka restaruant fomerly frequented by city officials.

Divine Hate

"Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded;

But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all."

— Luke 17: 28, 29

Fred Phelps hates homosexuals. In fact, he said it's his divine duty to do just that.

"It's a great luxury to be 100 percent right on an issue," said Phelps, pastor at the Topeka Westboro Baptist Church. He laughed and went on to quote the Bible.

Phelps laughed again and gave a smile as bright as his red hair. He said he likes his hate and he's good at it. After all, he said, he's been preaching against sexual promiscuity since 1951, and he's been spreading his doctrine of hating homosexuals since as far back as 1973.

However, it's only been in recent years that he's received much attention for his actions.

"Don't you understand the fags made me famous?" Phelps said. "They came out of the closet. They insisted not that they had the right to fornicate up the rectum in private — they already got that, and nobody bothers them about that.

"They demand to do it on Main Street, and by law everybody has to stand up and applaud them. That's what they want. They will be satisfied only when they've got federal laws that everyone has to applaud their filth."

Phelps, wearing red running shorts over pink spandex, stood up to get some papers. He looked less than his 63 years. Running triathlons keeps him young, he said.

So does his current campaign against homosexuals. Phelps said he began the campaign in 1989, after hearing homosexuals had approached his children and grandchildren for sex in Topeka's Gage Park, a place where the Phelps family regularly ran and bicycled.

Phelps said although he sent a complaint letter to Harry "Butch" Felker, Topeka's mayor, Felker's only response was a letter thanking Phelps for his concern.

"Keep us posted," the last line of the letter reads.

Phelps said he decided to take his own action. Since then, he and his family have regularly picketed the park, as well as churches in the area that perform homosexual wedding ceremonies. In addition, he has traveled to other cities to protest, sent faxes condemning homosexuality and picketed the funerals of homosexual AIDS victims.

Abigail Phelps crosses a name off a long list of fax numbers to which the Phelps family sends their faxes. The fax machine, located in the offices of the Westboro Baptist Church, is running constantly for many hours a day.

He said he sees his demonstrations, particularly his funeral pickets, as a way of reporting the adverse side of homosexuality. Too often, he said, the media portray homosexuals as heroes.

Phelps compared news reports mourning the death of an AIDS victim to Marlboro commercials.

"Somebody ought to tell them about the lung cancer," he said, referring to AIDS and his funeral pickets. "We tell them about the lung cancer."

"Relatives may not want or say they don't want me there, about this matter of life and death and eternity. But the dead fag wants us there, and if he could, he'd come back just long enough to tell those he cares about, 'Listen to Phelps. For God's sake, listen to Phelps.'"

Not everyone agrees. Phelps said he's been harassed by Joan Hamilton, Topeka's district attorney. He said her harassment was particularly strong after he sent faxes of a letter of hers that detailed her husband's infidelity.

In addition, he said, there have been more than 600 attacks against him and his family. Phelps pointed out the bullet holes in his church sign. Bomb threats are not unusual, he said, and phone threats come every day.

Phelps said those who refuse to condemn homosexuality are its supporters. As a result, he called the Kansas legislature "a stud farm for jackasses and a whorehouse for queers." Hamilton, he said in his Mississippi accent, is a "whore D. A."

Even the police, who Phelps said ignore the violence directed toward him and his family, aren't exempt.

"Of course, we're all 'militant, sodomite, fag cops,'" said Chuck Haggard of the Topeka Police Department. Haggard, who was parked by Phelps' picket near Gage Shopping Center, compared the man and his campaign to McCarthy and the fear of communism.

Phelps leaned on his sign on Gage Boulevard as cars drove by and clicked the runner's lap counter in his hand. At times, he said, he has witnessed 70,000 people drive by and who've seen him and his family with their signs.

A woman drove by with her horn blaring and her middle finger out the window. A protester across the street held a sign calling Phelps a hemorrhoid.

"I have not always been hated by everyone in town," Phelps said, cheerfully. He mentioned his Eagle Scout certification and his work as a lawyer in civil rights and sexual discrimination cases. He explained how his son Fred Jr. was Vice President Al Gore's state campaign coordinator for Gore's presidential run in 1988. Phelps showed pictures of Gore hugging his grandchildren.

Phelps said Gore won't publicly agree with him now because of politics, and Phelps said he had supported President Clinton "until he sold his soul to the fag agenda."

Despite the resistance, Phelps said, he has the same message for homosexuals:

"God hates you."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Last brother awaits death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Mark Ellis is ready to die.

The last of three brothers who contracted AIDS, he's wondering, as it ravages his own body, when the disease will claim him too.

"I see my brothers and friends drop like flies around me, and I wonder why I'm still here today," Ellis said. "I'm ready. I'd just as soon it be today as it is tomorrow."

But the disease operates on its own timetable. And as Ellis, his wife and children wait out his final days, the family struggles with the unanswerable questions of why they were chosen — and when it will end.

Long before it led him to the AIDS virus, hemophilia introduced Ellis to the medical system. The hereditary blood condition makes his blood unable to clot properly, and even a mild bruise or scrape could lead to dangerous bleeding and hospital stays of from two to eight weeks.

"I was practically raised by nurses and doctors," Ellis said.

In the late 1970s, though, he began taking the Factor 8 clotting agent.

For the first time in their lives, Ellis and his brothers, Larry and Joe, could live almost normal lives. Once bleeding started, they could inject themselves with the product — which was made from donated blood — to stop bleeding without the need for a transfusion.

It was a second chance at life, Ellis said.

But since then, he and thousands of other hemophiliacs have learned the terrible cost of the treatments: Blood products tainted with the AIDS virus slipped into blood banks before the disease was well known and reliable tests were developed to screen for it.

According to the National Hemophilia Foundation, 50 percent of the nation's 20,000 hemophiliacs are infected with HIV or have developed AIDS.

In 1985, on the day before he turned 30 years old, Ellis became the first of the three brothers to discover he had HIV.

"(It was) devastating," he said. "I was worried — my son was only 2 years old at the time. I had hoped I hadn't passed it along to my wife."

The progression of infection — first one brother and then the next, and the next — nearly crushed their parents, Pauline and Harry Ellis.

A truck accident in 1977 had already taken their oldest son, Harry Jr. — the only one who did not have hemophilia.

Joe died in 1989 of AIDS-related complications; Larry died in 1990. The next year, Mark found out he had developed full-blown AIDS.

Mark and his wife, Barbara, filed suit in 1985 against a manufacturer of Factor 8, but were unable to link Mark's illness directly to the company, and eventually settled for an undisclosed sum.

Whatever the amount was, Barbara said it would never be enough.

"You can't put a price tag on your husband's life," she said. "No amount of money is going to replace (him)."

Ellis has been unable to work because of the disease. He can walk slowly, but has frequent bouts of pneumonia and is very weak.

Barbara and their sons, Michael, 13, and Isreal, 10, have tested negative for the AIDS virus, but baseball and other typical father-son activities are out of the question.

They get by, somehow.

Family pictures fill their living room, and recent photos of Michael and Isreal show two boys smiling past the fear that AIDS will claim their father.

"They both handle it in different ways," Barbara said. "The older one reacts by keeping it in and then bursting into a big angry bubble when it gets too big.

"This one reacts by clinging to his dad," she said of Isreal, who hovered close to his father during an interview.

There are no shortage of strains to their 13-year marriage. Mark admits he is bitter and wonders why he was chosen for the disease.

Murder trial for JC man delayed

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Sentencing of Scotty R. Adam, 18, a Junction City man charged with the second-degree murder of a K-State student, has been postponed until Sept. 14.

Sentencing was set for Aug. 30, but the defense filed a motion for a new trial, alleging they weren't able to provide evidence beneficial to their client, said Jan Matthew Oleen, assistant Morris county attorney.

CLASS-B FELONY

■ A class-B felony such as a second-degree murder requires a minimum sentence of five to 15 years and a maximum of 20 years to life.

Adams has been charged with the second-degree murder and aggravated robbery of K-State student Scott Sanders in an incident that occurred Jan. 23, 1993.

Sanders, 19, a freshman in mechanical engineering, was on his way to Manhattan with two friends after visiting friends in Emporia when a confrontation with Adams occurred.

Oleen said the defense claimed some jury members were prejudiced or biased in the three-day jury trial that took place July 28-July 30, and this was the basis for the postponement.

A class-B felony such as second-degree murder requires a minimum sentence of five to 15 years and a maximum of 20 years to life, Oleen said.

Warning the wicked

Left: Martha, 1-year-old daughter of George and Cindy Smock of Newark, Ohio, tries to take a nap in the early afternoon sun while her mother preaches to students gathered outside of the K-State Union Tuesday afternoon. The Smocks, members of the Campus Ministry U.S.A., are on a two-week tour of the Midwest.

"Jesus said to go into all the world and preach the gospel," George Smock said, explaining the reason for their arrival.

The tour has taken them to Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, Mo.; the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.; Missouri Southern, Joplin, Mo.; and the University of Kansas.

"People need to repent their sin and believe in Jesus," Cindy Smock said.

Today will be the Smock's final day at K-State.

New law club begins largest chapter

Criminal justice students to find jobs, get experience

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Criminal-justice students now have a new club to help with career information.

K-State recently began the third national chapter of the National United Law Enforcement Officers' Association, or NULEOA.

This chapter is the largest chapter, with Kentucky State University and Clark-Atlanta University being the only other chapters in the nation.

Shawn Gordon, senior in sociology and criminal justice and NULEOA president, said the club gives criminal-justice students a better idea of what will actually be involved in their careers.

"It helps them to get a reality check," Gordon said.

The group also has had meetings dealing with forensic science, the "gruesome nasty stuff that most people don't want to deal with," Gordon said.

NULEOA began in 1992 when Clyde Venson, national executive director, began the collegiate version of the professional organization. Venson found criminal-justice students lacked a national organization prior to NULEOA.

"In my view we addressed a need. We decided to do this after we received calls and letters and found they had very little information on jobs or organizations dealing with criminal justice," Venson said.

Although Venson said he sent letters to more than 900 schools, he said he believes most of the schools have not started chapters yet, because they were waiting to see how the program would go the first year.

"I'm elated that three different schools with three different backgrounds and colleges of different sizes have joined. It leads me to believe there is a definite need for it," Venson said.

For K-State's chapter, Gordon said they plan to do more than just receive information.

"We plan on helping the community by talking with children, helping with D.A.R.E. and the Riley County Breadbasket. We are basically dealing with the public, since we will be working for the public someday," he said.

Gordon will also be attending the Street Survival '93 seminar in Wichita Aug. 31 through Sept. 2 with the help of NULEOA and the Geary County Police Department. He said he plans to use the information from the seminar in future meetings.

Gordon worked for the Geary County Police this summer and said he feels very lucky to be attending the seminar because they usually send two deputies only. He said he hopes more NULEOA members can attend the seminar next year.

Last semester NULEOA had 30 to 40 members, and Gordon said he plans on it growing this year.

Art museum receives $500,000 donation

KIM DILLON
Collegian

The K-State art museum received a $500,000 joint donation at a reception on Aug. 26, bringing them closer to the $5-million goal.

United Missouri Bancshares and the Crosby Kemper Foundation gave the money to the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum.

Crosby Kemper, chairman and chief executive officer of UMB, said his parents created the Crosby Kemper Foundation, and the family itself is a primary shareholder of UMB, which is why the two are working together.

Before the donation, the total amount raised for the museum was $4.1 million. The goal is $5 million, said Gary Hellebust, executive vice president of the KSU Foundation.

UMB acquired Citizens Bank in Manhattan through a merger that was effective July 1, said Andy Bell, vice president of UMB Citizens Bank and Trust Co.

Andy Bell said the bank is proud to be associated with Crosby Kemper in the contribution that has been made to the community through this donation.

Alan Bell is the chairman of the bank and also serves on the KSU Foundation Executive Committee.

Kemper said Alan Bell and several other key people in the organization are very involved with the University.

"We were delighted to do it. We think that K-State is very important to the state of Kansas," Kemper said.

Kemper said the KSU Foundation requested $500,000, and Crosby Kemper Foundations requested a wing in the new museum be named the Crosby Kemper Education Center, after his father.

The center's auditorium will be called the UMB Auditorium.

"It does underline a tremendous commitment by Crosby Kemper and the United Missouri Bancshares to the Manhattan community and to Kansas State University," Hellebust said.

In the last four years, the museum has been one of 11 projects the Essential Edge Campaign has focused on. During those four years, $4.4 million was raised for the museum, Hellebust said.

The art that will be housed in the museum is currently being stored in the KSU Foundation Center and is also on display throughout K-State, Jessica Reichman, curator for the museum, said.

The anticipated time for ground-breaking for the museum is spring 1994, she said.

Shoplifting laws make lifters pay for crimes

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Every time someone shoplifts, it is costing people other than the business.

Stanley Conkwright of the Riley County Police Department said shoplifting costs the paying consumer money.

"Businesses mark up the price of their merchandise to account for the losses they will have due to shoplifting," Conkwright said. "Every time someone steals something without paying for it the consumer suffers. Businesses have to pay for the security devices used in curbing shoplifting. The micro dot tags and the special packaging all comes at a price. The merchant must meet his overhead costs somehow."

Bud Grant, vice president of the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry said most businesses help to account for losses through a one to three percent mark-up in price.

"Most people don't realize the amount of money lost every year due to shoplifting," Grant said. "The national figure is around $24 billion."

A new law that went into effect July 1 is intended to give the retailer more of a chance to replace lost profit due to shoplifting.

"Beginning July 1, any merchandise recovered in non-merchantable condition will cost the shoplifter twice the amount of the merchandise or $50, whichever is greater and not to exceed $500," said Grant. "If the merchandise is recovered in merchantable condition, it will still cost the shoplifter half the retail price or $50 whichever is greater not to exceed $350."

In Kansas, shoplifting is defined as the theft of anything under $500. It is a misdemeanor, and it is punishable by a fine of up to $2,500 and a maximum jail sentence of up to and within one day of a year, Conkwright said.

Conkwright said businesses that do not prosecute hurt themselves.

"Businesses that go easy on shoplifters are immediately labeled as soft and become popular targets," Conkwright said. "We encourage all businesses to prosecute to the full extent."

Businesses can look for the various signs of shoplifters, Conkwright said.

"Garment bags, oversized clothing with many pockets, large coats, and even umbrellas are all tools of the trade. Shoplifters can drop merchandise down unopened umbrellas," he said.

Manhattan businesses do take shoplifting seriously.

Chris Green, manager of Dara's Fast Lane 1816 Claflin Rd. says employees are rewarded for catching shoplifters.

"Each employee is given $20 for every shop lifter caught. We also have two cameras in plane sight. I think they do deter the customers to a degree," Green said. They are reviewed every week and if I notice someone doing anything suspicious the employees are given a description and are told to be on the lookout."

'Wet' wins scrabble championship

NEW YORK — "Wet" was the word that clinched the World Scrabble Championship on Monday for a 26-year-old television producer from Leeds, England.

Mark Nyman's victory did not come easy. He battled Canadian Joel Wapnick from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. during five grueling games.

Down two games to none, the producer for Yorkshire Television's "Countdown" program rallied in the last three with words such as "velures" for 91 points, and "quint" for 53.

But it was "wet," for a mere 20 points, that Nyman created to clinch the fifth and final game.

Nyman's won $10,000. Wapnick, of Montreal, won $6,000.

Recording may expose Jackson extortion plot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man who was tape recorded threatening to ruin the reputation of Michael Jackson is purportedly the father of a boy Jackson is accused of molesting.

"Certain things are going to have to come out, and those two are not going to have any defense against me whatsoever," says the voice on the tape, broadcast Monday by a TV station that said it had confirmed its authenticity. "It's going to be a massacre if I don't get what I want."

Jackson canceled a Singapore concert Monday, saying through spokespersons that he was too ill with a migraine headache to perform. But after tests, his doctor today pronounced him fit to continue his "Dangerous" tour.

"This man (Jackson) is going to be humiliated beyond belief," the voice said. "He will not believe what's going to happen to him — beyond his worst nightmares. He won't sell one more record."

McDonald's healthier than Chinese food?

WASHINGTON — The Center for Science in the Public Interest decided to test the notion that Chinese food is better for you than, say, McDonald's burgers and fries, and came out voting for McDonald's.

For instance: An order of Kung Pao chicken has almost as much fat as four Quarter Pounders.

An order of Moo Shu Pork has more than twice the cholesterol of an Egg McMuffin.

And House Lo Mein had twice the salt of a Pizza Hut pizza.

But wait, General Tso's fans. You can make it all better if you eat a cup of steamed rice along with a cup of entree. "Chinese food suddenly becomes good for you," according to the newsletter.

Neo-Nazis forming network in Germany

BERLIN — The chief of Germany's internal security agency says neo-Nazi groups have taken the first steps to forming a national network and that his agents are busy infiltrating them in a massive undercover operation.

But the acts of hatred go on unabated. Gasoline bombs are hurled at another Turkish club. An Afghan immigrant's small grocery was firebombed, and swastikas and "Foreigners Out" signs are painted in black enamel on the wall.

Early Tuesday, about 100 refugees fled a burning asylum shelter in the western town of Detmold after it was apparently set on fire by right-wing extremists. Four of the newcomers suffered smoke inhalation.

A short drive from Berlin, an entire east German hamlet is under investigation for allegedly paying a neo-Nazi youth $1,200 to firebomb a vacant, newly built shelter for foreign asylum-seekers.

Division of former Yugoslavia discussed

GENEVA — Leaders of Bosnia's warring factions returned to the bargaining table Tuesday to resolve deep differences over a partition plan that the Muslim president calls worse than war.

The talks, set to resume Monday, were postponed a day after President Alija Izetbegovic had trouble leaving Sarajevo. He is seeking to wrest more land from his Serb and Croat foes.

Mediators Lord Owen and Thorvald Stoltenberg set Monday as the deadline for accepting the proposal, which gives the Serbs 52 percent, down from the 70 percent of Bosnia they now control, and Croats 17 percent.

The Muslim-led government, which controls 10 percent of Bosnia after losing the war, has rejected the package, demanding more land as well as U.S. and NATO participation in any settlement. The plan grants it 31 percent of Bosnia.

Former CIA director speaks against gays

WICHITA — Gay men shouldn't be allowed to serve as Boy Scout leaders since the organization is intended to instill values and build character in young men, former CIA director Robert Gates said.

Gates was honored at the meeting with the Distinguished Eagle Scout Award by the Boy Scouts of America's Quivira Council.

While Gates directed the CIA in the Bush administration, he said, he implemented a hiring policy that prohibited the agency from discriminating against gays.

But scouting is different, he said. Gates supports the Boy Scouts of America's policy excluding gays from its membership.

Last black residents flee Texas town

VIDOR, Texas — Ugly catcalls have taken their toll on Bill Simpson and John DecQuir. After just six months, Vidor's only remaining black residents are packing their bags, frightened by too many instances of harassment.

"There are good people here, don't get me wrong," said Simpson, a 7-foot, 300-pound transplant from nearby Beaumont. "But it's overshadowed by the negativity, the hostility, the bigotry of this town."

A federal judge last year ordered the eastern Texas town, home to 11,000 whites, to desegregate its 70-unit public-housing complex. A few blacks moved in last February, becoming Vidor's first black residents in at least 70 years. When they walked through town, they were hailed with racist slurs.

Simpson, 37, and DecQuir, 59, are the last of the arrivals to leave.DecQuir moved out some of his belongings Tuesday — he's heading back to his native Beaumont — and Simpson is planning to depart on Wednesday to an undisclosed location.

While no one has physically attacked them, the men say the derisive yells, the threats and the oppressive fear have become all too much to bear.

CAMPUS

Blue Key honorary promotes leadership

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Blue Key, a national leadership honorary fraternity, has set leadership as its existence, its goal and its focus in every campus activity for the academic year.

Jason Kastner, senior in food science and president of Blue Key, said the group has adopted its focus to take leadership to the next level for its 17 members and the University.

"The main purpose of Blue Key is to promote and develop leadership qualities for students within the University," Kastner said. "I would like people to develop a sense of leadership in everyone and have them realize it is important for success later in life."

Blue Key members teach an emerging leadership lab class for freshman leadership scholars along with Pat Bosco, Bernard Franklin and Susan Scott. The class is two hours. One hour focuses on lectures and presentations, and the other hour is used for discussion.

Karla Hommertzheim, senior in secondary education, is the director of the leadership laboratory class.

"Our main focus is to find ways to make leadership opportunities more available to everyone, and for student leaders to go beyond and above what they're doing," Hommertzheim said.

The class targets freshman scholars to expand their skills to the collegiate level.

"It's a great opportunity for students to discuss what they heard in the presentation and get to know each other through small groups," Hommertzheim said.

In addition, Blue Key sponsors the Peer Leadership Consulting program. Members are trained to work with leaders of campus organizations to provide assistance in leadership skills and organization of development concerns.

Several of the issues discussed in the PLC program include communication, delegation, diversity, goal setting, involvement opportunities, motivation and time management.

The PLC program is a free service and is offered through speeches and workshops. Speeches follow the more traditional lines for large groups or formal settings, and workshops involve a hands-on format requiring group participation.

Another program led by Blue Key is the Leadership Resource Center, located in the K-State Union.

Kastner said the center has established a good foundation, but members want to expand on information to include more books, periodicals, videos and various other resources. The center would be equivalent to the PLC, except students do their own research.

Student leaders also organize a Leadership Week Nov. 8-11 and sponsor a Multicultural Student Leadership Conference in the spring.

"We want to bring in K-State graduates mainly from all different colleges on campus to speak to the University during Leadership Week," said DeLoss Jahnke, senior in agricultural journalism and co-director of Leadership Week.

Jahnke said tentative speakers include Mitch Holthus, Voice of the Wildcats, and Randy Pohlman, former dean of the College of Business Administration. He said seven speakers are scheduled, but he is trying to arrange an additional three or four speakers.

Blue Key members said they agree their efforts to assist the University are worth the experience.

"We want to expand our leadership opportunities throughout the University and make K-State graduates more marketable. Ideally, we'd like to reach as many students as possible and have them realize what services we offer to them," Kastner said.

Hommertzheim said she agreed.

"Leadership isn't something everyone's born with, so my hope is to touch a lot of people, instead of the select few, on leadership skills," she said.

K-State Theatre Group will break new ground by being the first university troupe to present a performance of Vincent Cardinal's "Colorado Catechism."

The play will be performed at 8 p.m. Sept. 2-4 and Sept. 8-11 in Nichols Theatre.

K-State's performance of the play will be only the third in America. It has been preceded by a production in New York by the Circle Repertory Theatre in October 1990.

It was also performed in the spring of 1993 on the West Coast, where it starred Timothy Daly, star of the TV series "Wings," said Marci Maullar, managing director of theater and assistant professor of speech.

Cardinal will be at K-State Sept. 8-11 to work with the production and visit theater classrooms, said Charlotte MacFarland, director of the play and assistant professor of speech.

"We feel very excited and honored that Cardinal approved of our performance," she said.

"Colorado Catechism" is a romantic comedy focusing on the relationship of two people brought together at a rehabilitation center.

Ty Wain, played by Tim Aumiller, senior in theater, is a New York painter struggling to overcome his addictions, fill the emptiness in his life and paint again.

Donna Sicard, played by Laura Camien, senior in theater, is a teacher from Indiana completing her third round of treatment, hoping to regain custody of her 6-year-old son.

The story is told through flashbacks as Ty struggles to begin painting again by doing a portrait of Donna, MacFarland said.

Tickets can be purchased at Nichols Box Office or at the door. The price is $5 for students and senior citizens and $7 for the general public.

Possibility of more water still lurking ahead

It is a foregone conclusion the entire country is soundly familiar with the Great Flood of 1993. It has dominated the news since the rains first came in force back in late June. But now, with the advent of hurricane season and a new batch of late-summer storms, we cannot allow ourselves the luxury of thinking the floods may be over.

This idea that disasters just go away has been a mistake of history. Already, with heavy rains over the past weekend, parts of Iowa have encountered new flooding in the wake of the old. Streets and buildings under repair are now in danger again, while residents prepare for a repeat of this summer.

Parts of Des Moines suffered from backed-up sewage problems, while the waterworks were once again inundated with water from rivers that had overflowed their banks.

Tropical storms and hurricanes may further complicate the matter. The remnants of Pacific Tropical Storm Greg may send more moisture over the Midwest, and Hurricane Emily could complicate matters if it generates storms in the Mississippi Valley.

It should be remembered the soil throughout the Midwest is still saturated with moisture, and the reservoirs are still quite full. One only need look at Tuttle Creek Reservoir to get an idea of how tenuous the water levels still are.

If a new batch of storms strikes the Midwest, even with just a portion of the power they did this summer, then we must be prepared for further flooding.

Now that school is in session, precautions must be taken to ensure classes continue, displaced people have a place to go right away and state agencies stay alert.

The country stayed together in the wake of the last disaster. Should it occur again, the price for saving lives and homes is constant diligence.

TOLES

Therein lies the rub for Mr. Phelps and crew

WHAT GOD WHISPERS IN HIS EAR THAT HE IS RIGHT TO HARASS AND HURT AND DEMEAN THE RIGHTS OF OTHER HUMAN BEINGS?

Over the course of several years, I have been watching Mr. Fred Phelps on the news and in the papers. Every time I pass a street corner by Gage Park in Topeka, I look for him in his neon-pink spandex, sashaying with his signs. I watch for him, and when he is not there, I get disappointed like a child who has missed the chance to see the circus clowns.

What is the fascination? I have not decided. At first I thought it was just because I wanted to see the manifestation of everything that every fiber in my being is against. I wanted to know what my antithesis looked like, and what he sounded like. I have this wonderful masochistic streak.

I thought that I was drawn to Fred Phelps and his followers the same way I am drawn to watch most other hate-mongering groups like the Ku Klux Klan and neo-Nazis.

I go to see his ignorance, and it gives me the chance to examine my own. But that wasn't it. I didn't see anything different enough between him and those groups that offered me any new insight as to why they exist and how they can thrive.

Then I thought I wanted to see the kind of man who would really protest funerals. I mean, protesting churches that offer solace and comfort to the families of those who have been dying slowly right in front of them seemed a pretty heartless thing to do.

I guess when I saw him for the first time I was expecting him to be wearing bell-bottomed leisure suits and drooling out one side of his mouth. That is the picture in my head that I get for most people who I don't think have any sense of tact or taste.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

I also wanted to see what kind of brave man would call the Kansas Legislature "a stud farm for jackasses and a whorehouse for queers" and call Topeka's district attorney a "whore D.A." But I have seen examples of that kind of bravery before from lynch mobs. That wasn't it.

I guess the real reason I have been watching Fred Phelps is because I have been trying to figure out what god he is worshiping. What god whispers in his ear that he is right to harass and hurt and demean the rights of other human beings? What god does he worship that says it hates?

I have read the Talmud, the Torah and the Koran. I have read the King James Bible, the Book of Mormons, the works of Confucius, Buddha and Socrates. I have read everything from Greek mythology to Anton LeVey's Satanic Bible, and nowhere have I read that God is as hateful and unforgiving as Mr. Phelps bellows that God is.

Nowhere have I read that as it made him and me, that it did not also make every gay and lesbian human being on this earth in its image.

But I shall probably never speak to him. First, because I would not change his mind.

Secondly, because I personally think of him as a waste of skin. But if I ever did stop watching and say something to Mr. Fred Phelps, Reverend of the Hateful God, I would probably quote St. Matthew 12:36, 37: "But I say unto you, that every word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For thy words thy shalt be justified and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Editor,

After reading the editorial about NASA space experiments on rats, I could not stay indifferent to such a nonsense article.

First, NASA is not a headsman as you tried to make it sound in your editorial. Thousands of rats are killed everyday throughout the nation for scientific purposes and not sadistic ones, as you may think. If scientists could avoid using such a method, they surely would. I'd like also to remind you that the guillotine was originally designed to avoid any suffering to the subject and not to torture people.

Secondly, have you ever taken a biology class? It doesn't seem like it. If so, you would know that research is a long-term commitment. That's why treatments for diseases like cancer, AIDS, etc., take so much time to be developed.

My third point will be about the purposes of these space experiments because you obviously missed them. Have you ever thought of all the spin-offs coming from these space mission? Do you know what an MRI scan is? Basically, it saves lives everyday thanks to space technology. Have you heard about a disease called osteoporosis?

Well, you might get it some day, and you might be thankful to receive a treatment elaborated thanks to space experiments. Space is a long-term investment, not a waste of money.

Also, next time you write a like article, have more respect for scientists, because professors and graduate students (like myself) from the KSU Division of Biology are working hard to obtain useful information from these space experiments. You know, Ackert Hall is not far from Kedzie. Why don't you stop by? You just may learn something!

One more thing: Do you know what people like you who write such nonsense articles deserve? They should have their tongue cut off by one of those guillotines! You'd better watch out because I'm good at it ... I'm French!

Union tobacco idea should go up in smoke

Editor,

I am writing to let Trent LeDoux, UGB member and chairman of the task force, know that I do not want smoking in the Union. If Alex Corum doesn't like smoking in the rain or outside when it is cold, then he should wait until he gets home to smoke in his apartment.

I really don't think the issue is lost revenue from loss of smoking. If Ed Skoog would walk through the Union during lunch hour, he would see that it is hard to find a place to sit and eat lunch. Instead of selling products to harm our bodies, why not open a business that would help service other student needs. Why not have a place to get a haircut or a place to buy shoes? The possibilities are endless. That would help with the "lost revenue."

Union Director Jack Sills is right in his statement in the Aug. 31 Collegian. If smoking were allowed back in the Union, it would be the opposite of a nationwide trend. It would the opposite of a Kansas trend. If you didn't know that KU is already a smoke-free university, then let me be the first to tell you. It is sad to think that K-State is falling behind the high standards of KU.

Rush whines while Bill is getting the job done

Editor,

Oh, Sara Smith, you crack me up. I found your article defending Rush Limbaugh more than interesting. It was quite entertaining. At least it was appropriately placed beneath Toles so readers can view your work as literary political comedy.

Are you blind? President Clinton said the only reason Rush Limbaugh accused Rep. John Conyers Jr. of being rude was because he is black. Your reptilian use of the president's words was a neat tactic attempting to stir resentment. The only problem is that the president is a whole lot closer to being correct than your pathetic commentary.

Are you blind? It makes no difference that Limbaugh did not mention race. In fact, he probably avoided mention of race intentionally because it is quite possibly the reason he did not defend Rep. Conyers. This is what President Clinton was pointing out, right or wrong. I think it is a minor jab at Limbaugh, comparatively speaking.

I've watched Limbaugh and Clinton closely for more than a year and a half. I saw Limbaugh publicly accuse the Democratic party of being a bunch of blacks, gays and long-haired, pot-smoking motorcyclists. ... as if any of those attributes would make someone less of an American. And I've watched Mr. Clinton take progressive action toward protecting human rights.

President Clinton has shown greater leadership in provoking action (instead of mere debate as is the case with Mr. Limbaugh) when it comes to individual rights than anyone in 25 years.

Your article seemingly uses mirrors to try to switch the two men with their beliefs because of one comment. Yet, the facts are concrete evidence that show which one of these men has a sincere interest in securing the rights of the individual.

Let me remind you that it is easy to critique and criticize anything and everything. Anyone can do that. Rush is living proof. On the other hand, it takes sincerity, creativity and action to actually accomplish something that will have any effect on improving people's lives; of that, President Clinton is certainly living proof.

Try to look beyond the sound bites. Assess what goals each of the men have and the means by which they accomplish them.

"The girl of my dreams wobbled into my shoe store with tears in her eyes. 'I hope you just broke up with your boyfriend,' I said. 'No,' she replied, 'these heels are killing me.' So I slipped a Birkenstock® onto her perfect foot.
She was drying the tears when I realized Birkenstocks were beautiful.
I explained how the cork footbed absorbs shock and how the molded heelcup evenly distributes body weight. Then, she smiled and said, 'You sure know how to make a girl feel good.'"

Wide Receiver
Andre Coleman pulls down a catch during last year's 19-0 victory against the New Mexico State Aggies, Oct. 3, at KSU Stadium. Coleman, a senior co-captain this season, led all receivers in the game, catching four passes for 88 yards, including a 26-yard touchdown.

Coleman thinking bowl game

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Andre Coleman has had his share of accomplishments at K-State, but one goal still remains.

"If there was ever a year that the Cats were going to go to a bowl game, this is the year," Coleman said. "I mean, we had a 7-4 (in 1992) season which was all right, but we're looking way beyond that."

A year-ending bowl game for the Cats would only be the second in the program's history. Coleman said K-State's favorable schedule and recent history has him thinking positive.

"K-State's been on the up-and-up," said Coleman, a wide receiver and co-captain of this year's squad. "And if there was a year we were going to turn the corner, this is the year, with the seven home games.

"Two of the away games, Iowa State and Oklahoma State — we've beat these guys three years in a row. We have the perfect schedule. The guys are working hard, and if K-State's going to do it, this is going to be the year that we are going to do it."

Those are some pretty high expectations for a team that took a small step backwards after setting the school's best stint in 37 years in 1991. A 5-6 record in 1992 marked the first time in four seasons the Cats didn't improve their overall record.

But Coleman still feels confident that the senior class, a class that has been through the turmoil as well as the progression, will resurge.

"This senior class has really played an important role in the turnaround at K-State," he said. "We want to go out with a bang, and we will.

"I'm really surprised that the offense is jelling together so quickly. I'm looking forward to getting out on that field Sept. 4 and seeing how we can do against our different opponents."

Coleman, 5 feet 10 inches, has won three letters for the Cats and has amassed 795 career yards with 53 receptions.

He needs just 205 yards to join four other receivers in Coach Bill Snyder's tenure, and be the 11th in K-State history, to reach 1,000 career yards.

His duties also include returning kickoffs, and his 1,024 career yards is just 274 shy of Dimitrie Scott's school record of 1,297.

"He's come an awfully long way, and sometimes that is hard to do when you have been a three-year starter," Snyder said. "He has made a concentrated effort to improve as a player, and he has. He's made some great strides. I've been awfully pleased with the way he has come along.

"He wants to be a good player, and he is one. Andre knows he has the ability, and, like a lot of guys that have been around here that haven't been to a bowl game yet, that is certainly on his mind."

What exactly has Coleman done to improve himself?

"I'm in the best shape I've been in since I have been here," Coleman said. "I'm stronger and faster than I have been, too."

Coleman will fill the leadership role gap for the receivers left by Gerald Benton. Benton finished seventh in the Big Eight Conference in both receiving yards per game and receptions per game. Coleman, who has been surrounded by quality receivers since he was a freshman, also follows Michael Smith, who finished his career in 1991 as K-State's all-time leading receiver with 179 receptions and 2,457 yards.

Frank Hernandez, who played with Smith, finished third in career pass receptions and fourth in receiving yards.

Coleman is stepping into a similar situation as a senior, and said he sees himself in a leadership role.

"The guys look up to me," Coleman said. "We've got some very talented young guys — they work hard; they know the offense, and they are going to play. They may not have the big names now, but when Saturday comes, they'll play hard."

Players that should join Coleman this season at the wide receiver position include sophomore walk-on Mitch Running, sophomore Tyson Schwieger, junior-college transfer Tony Roberts, redshirt freshman Kevin Lockett and sophomore Henry Smalls.

Running finished the 1992 campaign with 10 catches for 158 yards and has the only other receptions from last year's team.

Despite the young batch of receivers, Coleman said the group should still be strong.

"You can't zero in on one receiver because we'll all hurt you," Coleman said. "Kevin Lockett — the freshman that nobody really knows about — he's going to step in and make some plays for us. Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running, these guys are going to make plays for us."

Receiver adjusting to new QB

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Working relationships need communication.

A little humor doesn't hurt either.

Wide receiver Andre Coleman and the rest of the football team have spent the past month adjusting to the latest quarterback to lead the Cats, Chad May.

"I joke with Chad a lot and tell him I can outrun his arm. He went out once and stood on the 20-yard line and threw the ball in the end zone. He can throw the ball over 80 yards, so he has a very strong arm."

The relationship between those two areas of the offense has had more of a chance to mature, due to the unexpected departure of Jason Smargiasso. Even though May was the No. 1 quarterback at the end of the spring, Smargiasso's absence allows May to take more repetitions on the field.

"Our timing is down, and we are starting to learn each other," Coleman said. "I can look Chad in the eye, and he'll know what I'm going to do — we've jelled in that kind of way. And that is something we didn't have in the past.

"And that is very exciting. I'm confident in Chad, and I know that if he can't get the ball to me, he'll get it to another open receiver."

Coleman said May's patience in the pocket, coupled with his strong arm, should cause a domino effect for the entire squad.

"At every position, we're going to make each other better," Coleman said. "Chad is going to make me better, and if I'm better, I'm going to make the running backs better. If our offense is better, it will give our defense a chance to rest and make them better. It works its way around."

Last season, the offense sputtered, finishing last in the Big Eight in total offense per game, gaining just 244 yards per game.

"Jason was more of a rusher with a pretty good arm," Coleman said. "Chad is your typical drop back quarterback. Chad will sit back in the pocket and deliver a ball, where Jason had a tendency to run out of the pocket when he shouldn't have.

"Chad doesn't think no one is better than him. He's not cocky, but he feels he's the best when he steps behind the center, and that is what we need."

Royals edge Brewers 6-5

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE— Gary Gaetti and Hubie Brooks each hit two-run homers to power the Kansas City Royals over the Milwaukee Brewers 6-5 Tuesday night.

The Royals remained six games behind first-place Chicago in the AL West heading into September.

Kansas City snapped a 5-5 tie on George Brett's sacrifice fly in the seventh inning. Jose Lind walked to open the inning, moved to third on Brian McRae's one-out single and scored on Brett's fly ball to left.

Gaetti's eighth home run of the season, a two-run shot in the sixth inning off starter Angel Miranda (3-4), tied it 5-5.

Brooks pulled the Royals even at 3 all in the fourth with his first home run of the season. The two-run shot was his first since Sept. 25, 1992.

Greg Cadaret (1-0) pitched three innings in relief for the victory. Stan Belinda worked the eighth, and Jeff Montgomery pitched the ninth for his league-leading 41st save.

John Jaha drove in a career-high four runs for Milwaukee with a two-run homer in the fourth, his 13th, and a bases-loaded single.

Abundant talent in AFC might lead to Super Bowl win

TROY COVERDALE

The National Football League gets set for week one of the new season this weekend, and the big question is whether any AFC team will ever win a Super Bowl.

Maybe that's overstating the point a bit, but losing nine straight championship games as a conference isn't exactly a feat to be proud of.

Mark my words, though, this will be the season that an AFC team defeats the NFC champ for the title.

There are just too many talented teams in the AFC this year not to have one of them actually pull off the win.

The AFC this year can be split into three very solid categories: contenders, pretenders, and rear-enders.

In the contenders category, Buffalo and Miami look to be the class of the AFC East, while Denver and Kansas City check in from the West, and Houston might be the biggest surprise coming out of the Central.

Buffalo continues to have the greatest amount of talent on its team, but three straight losses in the Super Bowl does something to the confidence of anyone — even Jim Kelly. Miami, on the other hand, has overhauled its offense, getting rid of the "Marks" Brothers — Duper and Clayton. The Dolphins still have the nucleus of a great team with Dan Marino taking the snaps from center. Look for Miami to capture the division title for the second year in a row.

Denver appears to be the most improved team, both physically and mentally. An average day at training camp outside Denver last year consisted of at least three fights and three TV stations doing battle with 10-minute "updates" after the late local news. The mood has changed because of two reasons: Dan Reeves isn't the coach, and the media has to deal with the Rockies now. That lightened the mood considerably.

Physically, the Broncos improved where they needed to — the offensive line — as well as changing the offense to better suit John Elway's passing style. The recent trade of local pain-in-the-neck Vance Johnson to Minnesota for Pro Bowler Gary Zimmerman gives Elway plenty of time to work his magic from a five-step drop, instead of the seven-step that Reeves forced upon his bread-and-butter quarterback.

In Kansas City, the biggest problem may not be what the Broncos have done, but what everybody is expecting from Joe Montana. Keep in mind that this is a quarterback who hasn't seen a regular-season snap that has meant anything in two years, and everyone is talking Super Bowl.

Add in major changes in the offense — Marcus Allen running the ball instead of Barry Word will take some adjusting to — and the Chiefs will be close to the top of the West, but won't get over the "Elway always beats us" syndrome.

Houston is the most interesting of all the contenders because the defense is looking to go to the next level after its embarrassing loss to Buffalo in the playoffs. Buddy Ryan takes over the "D" in Houston, and couple that with Warren Moon firing passes out of the "run-and-shoot," and the Oilers might bring Moon a rare division title as time runs out on his career.

Those five teams look to be the ones to watch in the AFC. Now, if one of them can just figure out how to stop the NFC's "smash-mouth" attack in the Super Bowl, AFC fans might have reason to celebrate in January.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sep. 22) - Today is a good day to get your life organized. Re-arrange that pesky bulletin board.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct 22) - Music is important for you today. Go out and buy a new albumn. Or, if you prefer, dust off the Anne Murray and Captain and Tenile collection. KISS is good too.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Business is only business; keep that in mind at work today, don't get uptight about that promotion or raise.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is the day to get serious about that landscaping. Take of your shoes, walk through the yard, and squish the grass between your toes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Try a new recipe, even if you don't cook well.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Relive the carefree, immature days of high school today, make a bunch of prank phone calls.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20) - Buy some flowers and hand them out to people you don't know today. It will make you feel good to make other people feel good.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Today is a good day to get things done; put in an extra hour at work or go to the library and study.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Today is a day to let those creative juices flow. Get some cheap enamel paint and decorate all the trash cans in your living quarters with large flowers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Go for a walk in a new area today and read a poem by a poet that you have never read before.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - You should bowl today. Bowling is an under-appreciated form of recreation and physical exercise. Bowling is good and good for you. Bowling is fun.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) - Eat a granola bar today while you read the newspaper. It is a good day to try wierd combinations. Tonight try mixing chili and macaroni.

REVIEW

Maltese Falcon showcases Bogart

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

With the possible exception of "Casablanca" and "In a Lonely Place," there is no film that shows the on-screen essence of Humphrey Bogart quite like "The Maltese Falcon."

Directed by cinema cornerstone John Huston and adapted from the novel by Dashiell Hammett, the film is an icon preserved on resin.

Bogart, with his cool disdain and quiet control of the typhoon within, paved the way for later Hollywood bad boys. This is his best form.

"The Maltese Falcon" follows Bogart in the role of Private Detective Sam Spade, a white knight in a rogue menagerie of desperate characters and dark shadows. After being confronted by a mysterious woman and the death of his partner, Spade is hurled into a plot awash with double-crossings and smoking guns, all to find the elusive jeweled statue.

AT THE MOVIES

■ "The Maltese Falcon" will show at 8 p.m. Wednesday, and at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75 with a student ID.

Performances by Peter Lorre, whom Bogart was later teamed with in "Casablanca," Mary Astor and Sydney Greenstreet give the film its foundation and complete it as a true force.

The film stayed true to the novel and became the first in a long string of great private-detective movies that ended in 1974 with Jack Nicholson's "Chinatown."

Huston takes the straight fury, laced with honor, doubt and finally concession and molds it into a masterpiece. Though a grim picture, the film has its moments of fun.

Woman shares decades of smoking wisdom

Dear Cassandra,

Love your column — literate, funny, wise. This is a good Collegian staff. Lajean Rau's column on front porches was great. Even though I am now in my 70s, I read the Collegian every day and enjoy it.

One thing I wish you would do — take another look at your buddy, the cigarette package. Both you and Lajean said you relax with your "friend." I don't have an awful lot of friends my age, partly because of that "friend."

When I was at the University, it was cool,-relaxing (in those days they said it was good for sinus condition), sophisticated and somewhat rebellious to smoke, so we all did. Most of us thought it was just for now, and we'd quit later.

Most of my friends have quit now — because they're dead from lung cancer and heart conditions. The toughest to watch are the ones who are chained to an oxygen tank because of emphysema — dragging that long, plastic hose everywhere like a leash. And God knows how many of our children and non-smoking partners we have poisoned, over the years, with second-hand smoke.

Please just tell people to go fishing or star gazing without that extra "friend."

Signed,

Sometimes, UNFORTUNATELY, older is wiser

Dear Wiser,

Thank you for writing. Thank you very much.

You're right. Smoking is harmful, and it's something we definitely know now as opposed to 50 years ago.

I can't speak for why other people my age smoke, but I know I've got it conveniently justified inside my own head.

I know smoking is bad, and I know if I smoke my entire life, there won't be much of my life left to smoke. But I thank you, again, for writing and reinforcing my determination to quit smoking soon.

I hope others will hear your voice of wisdom as well.

REVIEW

Old Chicago Bar and Grill a refreshing change of pace

Food served promptly, decor only drawback

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

A recent dinner at the Old Chicago Bar and Grill turned up a filling dish that was quite enjoyable, but the restaurant's overall concept was slightly disappointing.

Located at 3003 Anderson Ave., Suite 901, Old Chicago has been open since March and emphasizes catering and accommodating its guests.

With this in mind, an evening visit provided a perfect opportunity to test their claim. The dinner rush had ended, and the accompanying chaos was winding down. Now was a perfect time to test the weary staff.

A seating request in a quiet, remote area was met promptly. The hostess complied without hesitation, and a waiter quickly appeared at the table.

With a warm smile, he explained Old Chicago serves a variety of foods ranging from fettuccine Alfredo to Cajun catfish. The average menu price of an entree is under $8.

When asked about preferred dishes, the waiter gave a brief list of choices — Bourbon Street steak, scampi primavera and Cajun chicken.

Being a lover of spicy poultry, the choice was simple.

Enjoying any meal requires a large and extremely appetizing entree. Flavor is the essential key, and the Cajun chicken dish didn't disappoint.

Resting on a rice pilaf, two spiced-chicken breasts shared the plate with grilled onions, green peppers and broccoli. The chicken was tender, juicy and slightly hot from the Cajun spices. It also had a smoke flavor that tasted like home barbecue.

Unfortunately, the salad was rather small, but the hot-bacon house dressing was quite good when chilled (Just add ice — it works!).

Overall, the atmosphere of the Old Chicago Bar and Grill was laid-back and clean.

The staff was courteous and on-their-toes the entire meal. They should be commended on trying to please the customer by any means possible.

The only mentionable drawback is the scenery within the restaurant.

The menu tries to give the feel of the early 1900s, but the surrounding walls and booths fail to complete the picture.

Perhaps if some authentic memorabilia were scattered about, the mood of Old Chicago would be better expressed.

MUSIC

'Blue Plate Special' canceled; unplanned host absences blamed

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

One of two bluegrass programs in the state of Kansas, KSDB-FM's "The Blue Plate Special," was canceled in June by DB92 general manager Joe Montgomery.

The program, hosted by campus personalities Student Body President Ed Skoog and Vice President Eric Henry, along with two other K-State students, had been airing since spring. The station's executive staff approved, at that time, a formal proposal defining the show's content, relevance and expected audience.

Even after other ill-fated attempts by Skoog, senior in English, to host a successful radio program on DB92, the staff decided he had matured enough to be given another chance.

Previously canceled programs such as "Leftovers," another Skoog vehicle, gained attention for what Montgomery said was a lack of "decency." In spite of that, Montgomery said he and the gang at DB92 felt more confident with Skoog after Skoog had become involved in student government.

"He got elected student body president, so I'd think that would testify a little bit about his personal character," Montgomery said.

Skoog said the show did digress. By summer, "The Blue Plate Special" had walked the wicked path, Skoog said, away from the agreement in the original proposal.

Bluegrass music was defined in the proposal as guitar, banjo, mandolin and other stringed instruments. Skoog and Co. broke the agreement by fading from one song to another without commentary, playing music from the rock group KISS in between two gospel songs and using sound

"Bluegrass music is folk music. And folk music is music of the people. So we felt that any music played or sung by people was appropriate for a bluegrass show."

ERIC HENRY
GRADUATE STUDENT IN JOURNALISM AND MASS COMMUNICATIONS

effects. During one show, they continuously played a radio announcement, rather than music, and then poked fun at it on the air.

"Bluegrass music is folk music," said Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications. "And folk music is music of the people. So we felt that any music played or sung by people was appropriate for a bluegrass show."

So, who exactly were the "folk" artists featured on the program?

"KISS, Anne Murray, some rap artists and the words of former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew fit quite comfortably within the parameters of bluegrass — i.e. — folk music," Henry said.

However, despite such examples of unorthodox programming by the bad boys of bluegrass, Montgomery blamed unplanned absences as reason enough for the program's cancellation.

The hosts had missed two weeks in a row during the summer, which violated the agreed-upon terms in the proposal. But Montgomery said he had heard the popular radio personalities were asking in the spring if their show had been canceled yet, like they were waiting for it.

Montgomery was unfamiliar with any specific incidents on air.

He said the KISS incident was something he had heard about, and he said he had monitored the program only occasionally because airchecks, or recorded audiotapes of the actual show, were not required as part of the particular policy of the "The Blue Plate Special."

Nevertheless, Montgomery said after the hosts had missed two shows, he lost confidence in them. So, in accordance with the original proposal, he decided to cancel the program in June.

Although "The Blue Plate Special" was a short-lived program, Skoog is hopeful for a return with new hosts.

"Maybe we're not cut out for radio, but radio's cut out for bluegrass," Skoog said.

Henry said the show's purpose from the outset was simply to entertain.

"Our goal was to provide a show on Saturday mornings where they could turn on DB92 — the students' radio station — and listen to some sounds that they might have difficulty finding elsewhere in this radio market," Henry said.

"Our goal wasn't to do anything unorthodox.

"In fact, our religious convictions never even came into play."

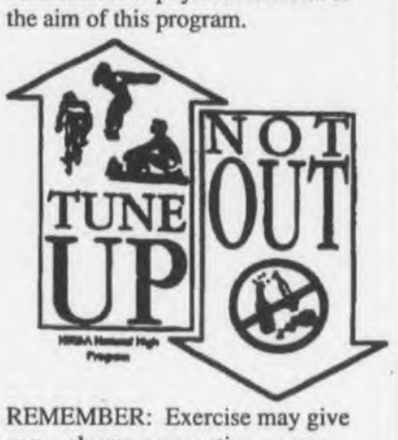
The Rec Report

Your Fitness Connection



KSU Recreational Services, Kansas State University, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

Watch for our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

"Natural High"

"NATURAL HIGH" will be a part of the programming efforts of Recreational Services this year. This program is co-sponsored by the National Intramural and Recreational Sports Association. Over 150 member institutions from over 40 states are working with this new program.

Through the use of our facilities and programs we hope each participant can find their own natural high. Participation in physical activities and exercise can help you attain this feeling. The reduction and/or elimination of the use of alcohol or drugs in your life and the substitution of physical exercise is the aim of this program.

REMEMBER: Exercise may give you a clearer perspective on your problems, life's challenges and help you manage the stress and anxiety associated with these.

Working it Out

Wildcat Workout Workshop

Sat., Sept. 11, 9:30 - 10:30 AM

Ever wish you could learn those tricky step aerobic combination moves BEFORE you did them at the regular workout pace?

Would you like to learn how to effectively stretch to maximize your warm up and minimize injury?

Do you know how to count your heart rate and what the count indicates?

If you have ever asked yourself these questions, this workshop is for you! Rec Services Exercise Leaders will provide that extra help in choreography, body alignment, stretching, improving cardiovascular endurance, building muscle tone and strength, and increasing flexibility.

WILDCAT WORKOUT "where cats work out on the wild side"

Aerobic:		Step:
M, W, F	6:30 - 7:30 a.m. 4:20 - 5:20 p.m.	M-F	11:45 - 12:45 p.m.

Pool Action

WILDCAT WATERWORKS "aqua aerobics keep cats cool and comfy"

A cool comfortable workout; is that an oxymoron? It isn't if you are describing Aqua Aerobics. Water exercise provides lessened impact on all joints and the spine. Additionally, the water resistance may increase muscle strength and tone.

Wildcat Waterworks begin Mon., Sept. 20. Get wet and wild with the cool cats at the Ahearn Natatorium: Mon., Tues., and Thurs. at 12:30 p.m., 7:30 p.m., and 8:30 p.m.

POOL DATES TO REMEMBER

Monday	Sept. 6	Labor Day, pool closed
Wednesday	Sept. 8	Possible opening of 8 lane pool
M, T, Th	Sept., 13, 14, 16	IM Swim Meet, pool closed 7:30-10 p.m.

Starting Off on the Right Foot

With all the specialized athletic shoes, it is hard to know just which one to wear for what activity. Starting off with the right shoe will start you off on the right foot to exercising. The following guidelines are taken from the University of California, Berkeley's WELLNESS ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Athletic shoes. There are two basic kinds of athletic shoes--running shoes and tennis-type shoes. Active people generally need both kinds, and athletes only require other specialized shoes for their sport as well.

Running Shoes. These are good for activities that primarily involve forward movement. These light weight shoes have a durable, deeply patterned outer-sole; a thick heel wedge to tilt the body forward; a firm, shock-absorbent mid-sole; and a breathable upper.

Tennis-type shoes. Good for any activity that primarily involves side-to-side movement, such as tennis and other racquet sports. These are heavier and stiffer than running shoes, and they usually have a herringbone outer-sole and a reinforcement under the toes for stop-and-go action.

Aerobics shoes. Because aerobic dance calls for multidirectional, high-stress movement, these shoes combine the features of running and tennis-type shoes. You can use tennis-type shoes in aerobics classes, but not running shoes.

Walking shoes. Shoes for everyday walking should have a rigid shank for support. Rubber heels are a must--they absorb shock and are replaceable. Shoes specially designed for long treks may have curved soles to facilitate the rocking motion of walking and extended heel counters at the backs.

Insoles. Most experts don't think that insoles significantly increase the shock-absorbing ability of good athletic shoes. Your best bet is to concentrate on choosing shoes that provide sufficient cushioning by themselves.

Sports-specific socks. Nearly all of these are made of Orlon, polypropylene, or other synthetic materials that draw (or "wick") away perspiration. They do provide extra cushioning and can help decrease foot abrasion. But the sock is less important than the right athletic shoe. Thus, good shoes and all-purpose socks that wick away moisture will do the trick for most people.

Intramural Mania

FACULTY/STAFF GOLF TOURNAMENT

The Fall Faculty/Staff Golf Tournament will be held Friday, Sept. 24, at Rolling Meadows Golf Course in Junction City. Call Steve at 532-6980 to reserve your tee time or if you have any questions regarding this tournament. An entry fee of $1 per person, as well as green fees, will be collected at the course.

Soccer Officials Wanted

Recreational Services will be hiring officials for the upcoming Soccer season. KSU students who are interested in becoming an official must attend these mandatory meetings:

-Wed., Sept. 1, 6:30 p.m. K-State Union, Rm 213
-Mon., Sept. 6, 6 p.m. Intramural Fields

Pay begins at $4.50 a game, more for experienced officials. Call Bryan at the Recreational Services Office (532-6980) for additional information.

The Great Outdoors!

The Outdoor Rental Center provides a large inventory of outdoor equipment, including canoes, sleeping bags, tents, ice chests, lanterns, stoves and more. This equipment may be rented by the University community and is available for reservation up to two weeks in advance. You must present a validated KSU student ID, KSU Faculty/Staff ID, or current facility use card when making reservations and renting equipment. September is a great month to enjoy the outdoors!

Business Hours: Sun. thru Fri. 4-6 p.m.
Sat. 11 a.m.-noon

EXPANSION UPDATE

Progress continues on the Rec Complex expansion. The plans are available to possible contractors now. Bid opening will be September 2 and construction should begin in late September. Construction will take approximately 20 months.

During construction, the entrance to the building will be through the door on the east end. With rare exception, activities should go on as planned in our current facilities as construction proceeds on the west and north sides of the building.

My Favorite Workout!

Chester E. Peters, for whom the Recreation Complex is named, continues his exercise regimen. Chet retired in 1985 as the Vice President of Student Affairs. His current workout incorporates 2 miles of race walking followed by 2000 meters on the rowing machine.

Words of Wisdom: "The most important part of working out is discipline. Develop a routine that fits your needs for time and schedule. Each person should establish their own workout schedule and not base it upon what others do. Mental capacity is affected by one's physical well being!"

Blood Pressure Checks

Lafene Health Center will be conducting blood pressure checks at the Rec Complex. Tues., Sept. 28, 5:00 - 7:00 p.m. in the lobby on the 2nd floor.

Weight Room Assistance

If you work out in the weight room between the hours of 3:00 p.m. and 9:00 p.m., Sunday - Friday, you've probably noticed a Recreational Services staff member working in that area. In an effort to keep an already crowded area safe and clean, weight room attendants will be ensuring that participants are replacing dumbbells and plates when finished, collars are being used on all barbells, and that the equipment is not being abused. They will also be available for spots and basic instruction. We are making every effort to keep the weight room a clean and safe area in which to work out. The new staff members are not here to pick up after you. They are here to make sure you remember to pick up after yourself. Your cooperation is appreciated.

Eligibility:

Recreational Services facilities are available to authorized users only. Participants must present a current validated student ID or facility use card each time admitted. Cards may be purchased in the Recreational Services office (second floor of the Recreation Complex), Monday - Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Cards are not sold to the general public. Facility users must be affiliated with KSU. Proper ID is required. Call the Recreational Services office at 532-6980 for further details.

Exercise Assistance

Are you eager to get in shape, but just don't know where to start? Have you noticed a new piece of equipment and are interested in using it, but you aren't sure how to operate it? We have the answer for you--introducing Corey Long, our new exercise consultant. Corey graduated with a degree in kinesiology and is now fulfilling requirements to get into physical therapy school. Corey will be glad to meet with you and discuss any exercise related questions that you may have. To set up an appointment call 532-6951 and leave a message for Corey.

Pool use on T/Th, 5-6 PM is shared w/ the Kinesiology Dept. Use is restricted to adult, fitness swimming only.

WILDCAT WATCH

Hey, sports fans!

Welcome to the first edition of Wildcat Watch, a special section of the K-State Collegian. If you like sports we hope you will enjoy our new section.

Because of space constraints, we often don't get to write as much as we would like about K-State athletics. This section was created to give our staff the freedom to report on more than football and basketball.

The Collegian is a part of Student Publications Inc. We are an independent student daily newspaper. This gives us the freedom to cover all aspects of K-State athletics, from game coverage to the debt of the athletic department.

Wildcat Watch will be published every Wednesday. We hope this will not only get you excited about the week's game, but also get you interested in some of our less publicized sports, such as lacrosse, rugby, cross country and volleyball.

I hope you enjoy Wildcat Watch.

THEN —

The first football team, 1893, played its first out-of-town game against St. Mary's Academy on Thanksgiving Day in 1893. They beat St. Mary's 18-10. The team played without a coach until 1897.
This year will mark 100 years of K-State football.

Cats begin 100th year

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

One hundred years ago, football had a rocky start at K-State.

In 1893, the school was known as the Kansas State Agricultural College, and any kind of intercollegiate athletics was frowned on by the instructors of K.S.A.C.

In December 1893, the faculty voted that "no body of students shall engage in contests with other than local organizations without the consent of the faculty," stating that "the maxim of this college, 'Attend to business,' is inconsistent with the excitement and distraction of such contests."

Students organized their own team anyway, and the team captains asked permission to play a squad from Fort Riley.

The faculty held another meeting on the topic, but again voted no.

After the vote, Dr. Nelson Mayo, an instructor in physiology and veterinary science rose during the faculty meeting and asked those in attendance who had ever seen a football game.

No one on the faculty would admit that they had, and Dr. Mayo nodded his head in triumph.

"I thought so," Mayo said, at which point Professor John Walters, an industrial drawing instructor, looked up from his paper to give rebuttal:

"That does not prove anything," Walters said. "One does not have to sound the depths of infamy to know what infamy is!"

But the faculty eventually gave in to student requests, and in October1894 two football teams were organized at K.S.A.C.

On November 2, the faculty gave the team official permission "to go to Abilene on Saturday p.m. to play football per arrangement already made," the students having already scheduled the match before getting permission.

The team from Abilene walloped K.S.A.C., then known as the Aggies, 24-0.

The team also played a "practice game" against nearby Fort Riley, and logged its first win against St. Mary's Academy on Thanksgiving Day, 18-10.

Graduation losses during 1895 suspended play of football at K.S.A.C., but in '96, K.S.A.C. played a home-and-home series with Fort Riley. The results — one loss, one tie.

Through the 1890s into the 1900s, football remained more of a club sport at the college. The head coach was usually someone who had from a nearby college and had football playing experience.

That practice continued until 1905, when Mike Ahearn got the job. Ahearn was a foreman of the campus greenhouses, and a popular figure with the students at the college. He would end up writing the record book for K-State.

Ahearn served as the Aggie coach for six years. From 1905 to 1910, the Aggies compiled a record of 39-12 under the young coach, Ahearn has been the only football coach in the last 100 years not to ever have a losing season.

The crowning jewel of Ahearn's coaching career was the 1910 season, in which the Aggies went 10-1 and outscored its opponents 336 to 23.

That team went 10-1, suffering its only loss against Colorado College in Colorado Springs, 15-8. That squad still stands as K-State's most winning team in school history.

After that season in 1910, the Manhattan Nationalist wrote, "The College baseball team and football team, called 'The Aggies', are famous all over the western country for their splendid success on the field of sport."

The team's original field was located in a meadow which is now home to Bluemont Grade School, and had a wooden grandstand which seated about 300 spectators.

The success of the football team under Ahearn and heightened fan interest spurred the construction of a football field on campus.

Around 1910, the team was moved to a newly-constructed field southwest of Anderson Hall, which is now the southern-most parking lot of the K-State Union.

But the team's early fields left much to be desired for the powerhouse squads at K.S.A.C.

The fields had no sod, and

BIG EIGHT PREVIEW

Texas vs. Colorado

FAST FACTS: 6:30 p.m., Folsom Field in Boulder, Col.
RECORDS: Texas (6-5 in 1992), and Colorado (9-2-1 in 1992)
ABOUT THE BUFFALOES: The No. 11 Buffaloes went 9-2-1 last year and made it to the Fiesta Bowl, marking the fourth consecutive season that Colorado went to a bowl game. This season, Coach Bill McCartney will try to combine his passing attack from last year with the running game that took them to their first national championship in 1990. Defensively, Butkus Award-candidate Ron Woolfork and four other starters return to the Colorado team that ranked ninth in the nation.
ABOUT THE LONGHORNS: Former Chief coach John Mackovic takes over the reigns of head coach for Texas and finished the 1992 campaign with a 6-5 record and tied for second in the Southwest Conference. Running back Phil Brown returns as the leading rusher and receiver for the Longhorns. Middle linebacker Winfield Tubbs had 157 tackles and four sacks last season.
THE SKINNY: Texas leads the series, four-games to two games, but Colorado has won the past two meetings. The Horns were 2-3 away from Austin, Texas, and the Buffaloes were 5-0-1 at home last year. This two statistics should give Colorado the advantage over Texas.

North Texas vs. Nebraska

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Statdium in Lincoln, Neb.
RECORDS: Nebraska (9-3 in 1992) and North Texas (4-7)
ABOUT THE HUSKERS: The AP Top 10 ranked Nebraska for the 31st-consecutive winning seasons. It has been in 24 consecutive bowl appearances and 188 consecutive weeks of being ranked in the AP poll. The Cornhuskers have two of the most explosive offenses in the nation with the 1992 Big Eight Offensive Freshman of the Year Tommie Frazier at quarterback and the 1992 Big Eight Offensive Player of the Year Calvin Jones in the backfield. Bring in four veteran receivers and an offensive line that averages nearly 300 pounds, expect Nebraska to be ranked near the top 10 in total offense in the country. Six returnees are back for the Cornhuskers, including all-America candidate linebacker Trev Alberts and Mike Anderson, that ranked 24th in total defense.
ABOUT THE EAGLES: North Texas finished fifth in the Southland Conference and went 4-7 for the 1992 season. The offense returns running back Terrance Brown, who rushed for 976 yards and 10 touchdowns. North Texas will have eight other starters back on the offensive. The Eagles have six starters return to the defensive side.
THE SKINNY: Because this is the first meeting between the two schools, the Eagles will get an awakening when they enter Memorial Stadium. The stadium has been sold out for every game since 1962. The Big Red Machine should win its eighth-consecutive season opener over the Eagles.
FAST FACTS: 7 p.m., Amon G. Carter Stadium, Ft. Worth, Texas.
RECORDS: Oklahoma (5-4-2 in 1992) and Texas Christian (2-8-1 in 1992).

Oklahoma vs. Texas Christian

ABOUT THE SOONERS: Oklahoma returns to the top 25 after a two-year absence. Quarterback Cale Gundy returns in the offense after throwing 1,914 yards. Along with Gundy, Oklahoma has seven other starters returning to the offensive. All-America candidate Aubrey Beavers heads a list of eight defensive starters from the 1992 season.
ABOUT THE HORNED FROGS: Texas Christian was 2-8-1 for the season and 1-6, eighth place in the Southwest Conference. Four offensive starters return — including wide receiver Jimmy Oliver, who caught for more than 300 yards. Seven defensive starters return for TCU.
THE SKINNY: Oklahoma has won 10 straight season openers. The Sooners should handle the Horned Frogs easily.

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against New Mexico State. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

POSITION		Aggies
LINE	Despite all the losses in this area, K-State will have five players who have started a least one game in their careers. The veteran of the line is defensive end John Butler, who earned an honorable mention in the Big Eight last year. Coach Jim Hess will use a six-man rotation. In that rotation, none of players has previously been part of the defensive line for the Aggies.	☑
LINEBACKERS	K-State lost Brooks Barta, Brent Venables and Chris Patterson, but will have a much faster linebacker group with Kirby Hocutt, Laird Veatch and Percell Gaskins filling their spots. Three starters come back for the Aggies. Inside linebackers Tim Mauck and Mike Wall ranked first and second in tackles last season.	☑
SECONDARY	The Wildcats have one of the best secondaries in the nation. Senior Jaime Mendez returns to spearhead the group, which will attempt to improve on the school-record 21 interceptions set last year. Kenny McEntyre and Mendez each picked off a pass against the Aggies in the 19-0 victory at KSU Stadium. NMSU hopes to rattle new K-State quarterback Chad May with everyone returning in their secondary.	☑

OFFENSE

POSITION		Aggies
LINE	The Wildcat offensive line has four returning linemen who are led by all-America center Quentin Neujahr. The experienced line looks to improve on the 104th ranking in total offense last year. When they played the Aggies last year, they helped K-State collect 355 yards. NMSU brings back three starters, but they need to open holes for their runners if they are to break down K-State. The Aggies gained 62 yards on the ground last year.	☑
WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS	Experienced receivers Andre Coleman and Mitch Running return for K-State. Coleman caught 25 passes for 336 yards, while Running opened last season with a 73-yard catch against Montana. Brad Seib takes over tight end for the injured Brian Rees. Three starting receivers are gone this season from the Aggies, leaving David Osborne, who caught three passes last year. NMSU also lost all-American Todd Cutler.	☑
RUNNING BACKS	The loss of Eric Gallon will hurt K-State, but it has three capable running backs to take up the slack in J.J. Smith, Rod Schiller and Leon Edwards.The Aggies lost Lawrence Truehill, who became academically ineligible. Truehill gained 53 of NMSU's 63 rushing yards in last year's game. The main back for the Aggies is Troy Dublin, who ran for 448 total yards last season.	☑
QUARTERBACKS	Chad May and Aggie quarterback Cory Ledbetter have traveled down similiar paths. Both were redshirted last year after starting in their first year of eligibility. Expect these two men to have several butterflies in their stomachs. The back-ups for both teams haven't played in game situations. The advantage goes to NMSU since Ledbetter can run as well as pass the ball. When he played two years ago, he was the team's second-leading rusher, despite participating in only six games.	☑

SPECIAL TEAMS

POSITION		Aggies
PUNTING	Chad Zecha averaged 40 yards per punt and had 10 punts go 50 yards or more. Coach Snyder won't decide who will kick the ball until game time. Tate Wright and Eric Hardy will battle for the starting job but haven't handled the ball in a game for the Cats.	☑
PLACE KICKING	New Mexico State will use Bubba Culin for kicking field goals and the extra point. He missed only four field goals in nine tries in the 1992 campaign. K-State's Tate Wright has hit his last nine of 13 kicks, even though he lost his job to Warren Claassen for six games last year.	☑
RETURN	The Aggies lost their top kickoff return specialist, Fred Montgomery, who became the fifth player in NCAA history to lead the nation in kickoff return yards in two consecutive seasons. Polee Banks and Brian Pizula will handle both catching duties for New Mexico State. Andre Coleman ranked 17th in the nation last season in kickoff return yards, while Thomas Randolph and Kitt Rawlings accounted for punt returns.	☐

INTANGIBLES

AREA		Aggies
MOMENTUM	K-State has lost four of its past six games, while the Aggies finished last season by winning their last two games, marking its first winning season since 1978. Both teams need the win if they are to prove that they can maintain an improving program. New Mexico State would like to end the series with a road victory over K-State, who beat them 52-7 just three years ago. The Cats have won three consecutive season openers.	☑
COACHING	Jim Hess has conquered many barriers since taking over the position in 1989. He went from 1-10 three years ago to 6-5 last season and was named Big West Coach of the Year for his work. He has narrowed the point margin against K-State from a 52-7 thrashing three seasons ago, back to a 19-0 loss last year. But Bill Snyder, a two-time Big Eight Coach of the Year, has a 15-2 home record since 1991 and the second-longest home-game winning streak with six victories.	☐
THE EDGE	No one has an edge like there was last year. When the two teams met a year ago, New Mexico State's season was half over while K-State was entering its third game, and had a record of 2-0. K-State will be playing in front of a home crowd and considering it is the season opener, the edge should go to the Cats. K-State has also beaten the Aggies twice in as many years.	☐

Q and A with Bill Snyder

Coach responds to questions from the media

Q: Has your thinking changed on night non-conference games?

A: Our main intention was that it would enhance our attendance. Workers in Manhattan and in western Kansas that worked during the day on Saturdays would be able to attend Saturday evening ball games.

What we've come to find out is that it really hasn't enhanced our attendance. It stays virtually the same whether we play a night game or day game. The second consideration is that our players heavily favored daytime games to night-time games so they would have an opportunity to be with their families after the ball games.

Q: Do you, as a coach, have any preference?

A: I think, obviously, that if it's one of those scorching August or September day games that I prefer a little cooler weather in the evening. Overall, it doesn't matter.

Q: How do you prepare for a team that has lost many players in skilled positions and hasn't played a game yet?

A: Well, carefully is the first word. Particularly because you are playing a football team who you have not seen. (New Mexico State) has new personalities and new characteristics, and you really don't know what you're going to see.

They've lost some of their personnel, particularly at the skilled positions — quarterback, running back, wide receiver, tight end — and all the personnel they lost were prominent personnel in their program.

I'm sure Jim (Hess, NMSU head coach) will play with what his strengths are. They know better than we do, so that adds some mystery to what to expect.

Q: What do you expect from them?

A: Well, No. 1, I expect them to come in with the attitude and approach that they have an excellent chance to win the ball game.

Secondly, I think they have to rely offensively on a lot of things they did last year because they were very successful and although they don't have the same personnel, they may have the same kind of personnel that can get the job done.

Q: They were labeled one of the worst football programs in the country. What do they say now?

A: They are by no stretch of the imagination that type of football team. Any team that goes 6-5 couldn't be in that category.

I think they've made very significant progress in their program, and they're not the worst. They're far from it. They've upgraded a lot of things at New Mexico State that they had problems with in the past.

Neujahr no longer 'a young buck' for Cats

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Quentin Neujahr has seen many changes in the K-State football program since he came from Ulysses, Neb., in 1989.

Back then, he was in a different role.

"I came in like I was a young buck," said Neujahr, K-State center who begins his last season Saturday against New Mexico State. "I came in weighing about 220 pounds and was redshirted."

Four years later and 65 pounds heavier, Neujahr has helped K-State climb out of the Big Eight basement while gaining local and national attention.

Since taking his first snap against Western Illinois in 1990, Neujahr and his teammates have set several school records.

He helped the Wildcats collect 4,231 yards of total offense and a 7-4 record in 1991 and 3,752 yards of total offense in 1990.

Prior to his arrival, the Cats averaged nearly 60 yards a game, but that has increased by 114 percent over the past three years.

Coach Bill Snyder said Neujahr is simply a great player.

"I think Quentin is an awfully fine player," Snyder said. "He has played in all 33 games and has done well against great players."

Many sports publications agree with Snyder's assessment.

The Sporting News' 1992 College Football Yearbook ranked Neujahr as the third-best center in the country, and he was the only non-senior on the magazine's top-six list.

Neujahr said he doesn't pay too much attention to the preseason honors.

"It is just one of those things that carry a lot of hype," he said. "The only way to take care of those things is to play the 11 games.

"But my dad goes out and buys every football magazine known to God to show what his son is doing," he said.

"The attention's nice, but I don't worry about it."

Even though he wanted to play for Nebraska out of high school, he said he is glad he made the decision to go to K-State.

Since this is his last year at K-State, Neujahr said he wants to reach his goals.

"This is my senior year. It's my last shot to get things done," he said.

"I hope that we go to a bowl."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶CATS WIN AT KSU STADIUM

The Wildcats play seven games at KSU Stadium this season, including four Big Eight games.

Since the start of the 1990 season, the Cats are 15-2 at home — the best home record during a 17-game stretch since the Cats went 15-1-1 from 1916 through the third game of the 1919 season.

The Cats also were perfect at home last season, marking the first time since 1934 that the Cats have won all of their home games.

Non-conference teams haven't fared well in KSU Stadium, with the Cats beating six straight non-league opponents — the second-longest current home winning streak in the conference behind Nebraska.

K-State's home record of 15-2 is third-best mark in the Big Eight behind Colorado and Nebraska.

The Wildcats have posted 30 opening-day shutouts.

The most recent was in 1970 with a 37-0 drubbing of Utah State. The Cats went 6-5 that season.

▶RECORDS FALL IN PRACTICE

The Wildcats set six new team records in the fall-testing period two weeks ago.

Cornerback Thomas Randolph tied the defensive back school record with a vertical leap of 40 feet 1/2 inches.

Offensive tackle Bryan Campbell also set a record in the vertical leap for the offensive line when he leaped 31 feet.

Tight ends Brian Rees and Brad Seib both set new records for tight ends doing the incline bench-press. They both recorded lifts of 336 pounds.

Defensive tackle Kelly Greene had the top bench press for K-State.

Greene finished with a 418-pound lift.

True freshman tight end Jarrett Grossdidier of St. Paul set a new tight end record with the fastest 300-yard shuttle run among the freshmen with a time of 44.69 second.

BIG EIGHT

More than just football

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Avid K-State fans know exactly how tight this season's Big Eight race will be in football, but other athletic programs are also involved in difficult conference races.

The Big Eight race in volleyball could come down to two teams, coach Patti Hagemeyer said.

"Both Colorado and Nebraska are ranked in the top 10 in the country," she said. "But the race for three through seven will all be close."

The Wildcats will have four starters returning after finishing with a 7-22 record last season. and last in the conference.

"The Big Eight will be very tough this year, but it still is anybody's match," outside hitter Stephanie Leister said.

The men's and women's cross country teams will be led by new coach Terry Drake. Officially, Cliff Rovelto is in charge of both teams, but Drake will coach both teams.

After tying for the Big Eight crown last season, the women's cross country team will be led by new coach Terry Drake. Officially, Cliff Rovelto is in charge of both cross country teams, but Drake is coaching them, Rovelto said.

Rovelto said the women's team has good, quality runners and the men are capable of being in the top 12 or 13 in the nation.

"The Big Eight meet will be difficult," he said. "Colorado has quality runners, and Nebraska has a lot of young players. Kansas is a decent team. They have quality top runners, but they have no depth through the rest of the team."

Tennis coach Steve Bietau said this year's team is large, but he expressed uncertainty about other aspects of the program.

Bietau's recruiting class of six players is the largest he's had at K-State and is due to the graduation of players, injuries and players who left the program.

"The team will have a total of eight or nine players," Bietau said. "We still have a couple of girls trying out to be walk-ons."

The team was second in the Big Eight two years ago, and he said he thought this team has more depth than that team.

Golf coach Mark Elliott said the men's team will have depth this season. The team only lost two seniors from last season's squad, and the Cats return three for this season.

"This will be the deepest team, talent-wise, that I have ever had," Elliott said. "We have solid players, and our goal is to be in the top half of the Big Eight."

Elliott is also in charge of the women's golf team and said the team had an up-and-down season last year.

NEW MEXICO STATE

Aggies face Cats for third time in four seasons

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The one-time owner of the nation's longest losing streak turned its program around and came up with a winning season for the first time in 14 years.

Does this sound familiar?

The team in question is not K-State, but the Wildcats' first opponent of the season, New Mexico State.

At the forefront of the metamorphosis is 1992 Big West Coach of the Year Jim Hess. However, the improvements were not immediate as the Aggies suffered through a 1-10 season in 1990 and a 2-9 season in 1991.

"When I accepted this job, I knew it was going to be bad, but I didn't realize that it was going to be this bad," Hess said.

In 1992, the Aggies finally broke through with a 6-5 overall stint and a 3-3 record in the conference, good enough for third place in the Big West.

The 1992 campaign matched the Aggies' 6-5 record in 1978 — their last winning season. The dry spell included a 10-78 record between 1984 and 1991.

"In my first year, we had 42 scholarships — today we have 77. That greatly improved the depth of the team on both sides of the ball," he said.

In addition to the added depth, Hess attributes most of the resurgence to improved speed and quickness on both sides of the ball.

The improvement has been evident in the series with K-State. In 1990, the Cats beat NMSU, 52-7. The score last year was 19-0.

"They have been a shadow of K-State," said Quentin Neujahr, K-State center, who played in both games. "We were both called the worst football team in the nation at one time. When you are pond scum, it inspires you to prove people wrong."

Neujahr also noticed the Aggies' added depth in last year's game, when he faced three different nose guards in the same game.

"They are a fine football team with tremendous potential. They proved that last year," Neujahr said.

One Aggie who K-State offensive linemen should beware of is inside linebacker Tim Mauck. Mauck was a second team all-Big West performer with 113 tackles, 52 of them solo.

Although the Aggies will be starting the untested Cody Ledbetter at quarterback, they have a solid running attack led by Troy Dublin. Dublin finished second on the team last season with 448 yards.

"I think they are a good team," John Butler, K-State defensive end, said. "The second time we played them, they seemed to play with much more desire. When you get down like that, you really get sick and tired of it."

"I feel like it will be a good game. We have seen some of K-State's players, and I feel like we can compete," Coach Hess said.

Gaskins leaps from sports mag

Although he has yet to play a down at K-State, he quickly ascended to a No. 1 linebacking position in the spring and had 10 tackles against the No. 1 offense in the spring game in April.

He originally signed with Tennessee out of high school and won the NCAA indoor high-jump championship for K-State last winter with a school-record jump of 7 feet, 5-1/4 inches.

Gaskins has been chosen the preseason Big Eight Defensive Newcomer of the Year in a vote of the Big Eight Skywriters, a group of touring media that spent a day on each conference campus during August.

Another incoming player to watch is senior transfer Bryan Campbell. He started at offensive tackle on Colorado's 1990 national-championship team and also spent a season at Cal-State Fullerton before coming to Manhattan.

Campbell will back up Eric Wolford at right tackle Saturday against the New Mexico State Aggies. He is expected to see some playing time.

Volleyball team to host round-robin Invitational

Five teams come to town for the K-State Invitational this weekend

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team opens the season when it plays host to the K-State Invitational in Ahearn Field House on Sept. 3-4.

The five-team invitational will feature Drake, Oregon State, Baylor and the Tulsa. The Wildcats will get a chance to play each team once in the round-robin tournament.

"Opening weekend is usually interesting for everyone," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "The invitational will give us a chance to focus and incorporate what we have worked on for the past two weeks.

"I always prefer to open at home," she said. "It allows the players to be more comfortable because you don't have to get them out of class, and they can sleep in their own bed."

The Cats will play in the second game of the tournament Friday against Tulsa at 2 p.m. Later, they will face Baylor at 8 p.m. On Saturday, the team will open the day against Drake at 10 a.m. and finish with a game at 8 p.m. against Oregon State.

"We are really excited," senior Stephanie Leister said. "We have had a lot of practice, and it will be good to play against an opponent."

Both Tulsa and Oregon State will enter the invitational under the direction of new coaches.

Dawn Colston enters her first year at the helm of the Golden Hurricane. Last season, the Hurricane failed to post a victory in 24 matches.

"We're looking for success in whatever form it takes," Colston said.

The Hurricanes return four starters, but the team will still be young, Colston said. The lone senior on the squad is outside hitter Kristina Mitchell. Last season, Mitchell led the team in kills and digs.

Even though Oregon State finished with a 15-18 record last season, the Beavers will open this year under the direction of new coach Jeff Mozzochi. The Beavers lost only three letterwinners this year, and they return eight letterwinners to this year's squad.

Four of the Beavers' eight returning letterwinners are returning starters.

The starters are led by potential all-America candidates Shelly Smith and Tonya Lifa.

Smith led Oregon State the past two seasons in kills, and Lifa was the Beavers' top blocker the past two years.

Drake enters the invitational after having a losing record last year. The Missouri Valley Conference team finished with a 9-18 record last season under coach Martie Larson. This season the Bulldogs will return 10 letterwinners.

The Baylor Bears come into the invitational after a 21-15 record last season. The Bears will have four starters returning from last season's team.

"The invitational should be very helpful to all the teams. It allows us to play four matches in a short amount of time," Hagemeyer said.

A plumber hooks up the water to the urinals on the fourth floor of the newly constructed press box at KSU Stadium. Plumbers, carpenters, painters, electricians, flooring installers and facility crew are all working in an effort to get the press box completed for the first football game on Saturday against New Mexico State. The fourth floor will house the skybox suites for the visiting team's athletic personnel as well as other paying customers.

3 Wildcats listed in draft report

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Three seniors on the K-State football squad are listed among the best in a national draft report by the National Football League.

The report is an archive information library and publication used by the NFL and more than 600 national media outlets.

It supplies the NFL scouting and public relations departments with extensive profiles on seniors.

Collegiate seniors are ranked by 188 scouts across the nation on a weekly basis.

Thomas Randolph, a 5 feet 10, 175-pound cornerback, is rated the third-best senior defensive back in the nation behind Nebraska linebacker Trev Alberts and Texas A&M cornerback Aaron Glenn.

Randolph set a school record in the 40-yard dash, running a 4.28 in winter conditioning.

He is also a three-time all-American in the 55-meter dash, including a third-place finish at the NCAA indoor track meet last spring.

Free safety Jaime Mendez, a co-captain on this year's team, is listed as the third-best senior safety in the country behind USC's Jason Seahorn and Western Michigan's Steven Hawkins.

According to the report, Mendez is one of the top three or four candidates for the Jim Thorpe Award and will go no later than the third round of the NFL draft.

Mendez set the K-State single-game interception record with four against Temple last year and has 13 career interceptions.

Andre Coleman, a 5'10", 170-pound wide receiver, was listed as the 11th-best senior at his position.

Coleman, a senior, has 53 receptions for 795 total yards in his career. He has played in all but one game since his freshman season.

He ranked 17th nationally in kickoff return yardage, averaging 24.5 yards per return a year ago for the Wildcats.

A century of Cat football tradition

rainstorms had a tendency of turning the K.S.A.C. field into a mudbath of sticky clay. During a 9-0 win over Oklahoma A&M, the Aggies scored their only touchdown on a trick play set up by Ahearn:

"The umpire, as was custom, stood near the sideline under an umbrella," related Ahearn in an interview years later.

"Our quarterback, Harry Bates, took the ball, wheeled back and threw toward the sidlines. Out from behind that umpire and his umbrella came our halfback Bunt Speer. He caught the pass and splashed to a touchdown."

Another rainstorm in 1923 caused a K-State-Missouri game to end up in a mudbath of sticky clay. So sticky that a Wildcat punt stuck fast when it banged into the chest of a Tiger lineman.

The field's poor conditions in weather and increasing attendance led to the building of Memorial Stadium in 1924.

Glory years continued for K-State, which officially became the Wildcats in 1915. From 1911-34, the Cats accumulated a record of 108-67-17, and grabbed its first — and only — conference championship along the way.

In 1934, in the cold, gray air of Lincoln, Neb., K-State rallied in the second half to defeat the Cornhuskers, 19-7, and laid claim to sole possession of the Big Six title with a 7-2-1 record.

To this day, that conference crown remains the only one K-State has ever won in football.

But in that first 40 years, K-State football came a long way from its beginnings in the 1890s when the campus newspaper reported this incident: "One of the football players received notice from the faculty that he crippled a chicken belonging to a man who lived near the ball park. He was requested to call and settle up the bill with the irate owner of the bird."

Adam convicted in murder trial

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Editor's note: Due to reporter's error, a version of this story that appeared on page one Wednesday contained several inaccuracies. What follows is a clarification of that story. The Collegian regrets the errors.

Scott R. Adam, 18, Council Grove, has been convicted of second-degree murder and aggravated robbery in the stabbing death of K-State student Scott Sanders, 19, Junction City.

The murder took place on Jan. 23, three miles north of Council Grove on Kansas Highway 177.

Charges of first-degree murder were filed against Adam on Jan. 25.

Robert Daub, Morris County attorney in charge of the case, said a May trial was originally set, but the defense council withdrew because there was a conflict of interest.

The trial was continued to July 28-30. The jury convicted Adam of second-degree murder and aggravated robbery.

Sentencing was originally set for Aug. 31 but was postponed until Sept. 14 in order to give adequate time for a pre-sentence investigation report.

The defense filed a series of motions asking the court to grant a new trial for the defendant.

The court will hear these motions Sept. 24.

If the judge grants any of the motions, a new trial will be heard. Otherwise, the jury's verdict from the July trial will stand, and Adam's sentencing will be Sept. 24.

Student shot following dispute

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

A 14-year-old female student at Junction City High School was shot Wednesday, following an argument involving two other students.

The incident occurred in the school cafeteria during lunch. The victim was not involved in the dispute, a Junction City Police Department release stated. She was eating her lunch when the shooting occurred.

The victim, who remained unidentified late Wednesday, was transported to Geary Community Hospital and later flown to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka. Her condition was reported as critical.

A 15 -year-old Junction City student believed to be involved in the shooting fled the cafeteria. School security officers pursued the subject and apprehended him in the area of Northwest Avenue, east of the high school.

A semi-automatic handgun was recovered in the Northwest Avenue area, the release stated.

After interrogation by the Junction City police, the suspect was arrested for aggravated battery. The suspect, who was also unidentified Wednesday, is a Fort Riley dependent, according to the JCPD release.

The police investigation continued, and the cafeteria was roped off when school was dismissed at 1:30 p.m.

Superintendent Mary Devin issued a statement about 12:45 p.m. to assure parents that all other

Faculty Senate examines diversity proposal

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs Committee is examining a proposal that would add a multicultural overlay proposal to the K-State curriculum.

"There is opposition to the proposal, but that is normal with most curriculum changes," said Anne Butler, director of the Women's Studies Program and co-chair of the Diversity Overlay Requirement committee.

"We're encouraging debate," she said.

Student opinions will be solicited during an open forum at 3:30 p.m., Sept. 9, in Leasure 13, Butler said.

Some of the debate may come from a misunderstanding concerning the proposal.

Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of anthropology and director of American Ethnic Studies and co-chair of the diversity requirement committee, said she has heard students ask if one class will fulfill the diversity requirement.

Many courses could be used to fulfill the proposed diversity overlay requirement, Ottenheimer said.

The multicultural overlay idea began after the first Rodney King verdict.

During the summer of 1992, ethnic studies and women's studies proposed the multicultural overlay curriculum change and formed a committee to draft a proposal.

A diversity overlay would be parallel to the College of Arts and Sciences international overlay, Ottenheimer said.

Following the drafting of the proposal, the committee sought the approval of the American ethnic studies and women's studies programs. Approval was granted in August 1992.

Since then, the committee has presented the proposal to other academic units.

During the spring presidential race, a campaign idea of Ed Skoog, now student body president and senior in English, was to require a multicultural overlay class for all students instead of the physical education class that is currently required.

"I'm committed to get this passed," Skoog said. "I'll organize a few forums to try to bring it to

Student remembers peace in Sarajevo

Bratovic keeps eye on Bosnia for news from war-torn homeland

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

Elma Bratovic was 17 when she left Sarajevo, Bosnia. She said it was a place she remembers as nothing but peaceful and beautiful.

She lived with her family in their apartment in the capital city, adjacent to the Bosna River and surrounded by the Dinaric Alps.

Most of her family lived there. The sound of children playing was heard after school, and both her mother and father worked. No one suffered, and no one starved.

"It was a very good life," Bratovic, now a K-State sophomore in architectural engineering, said. "We had a lot of freedom and everyone went to school."

Bratovic said she never thought when she boarded her flight to the United States to be an exchange student in Dodge City, it would be the last time she would see her home or family.

Bratovic stayed in Dodge City with Bob and Gayle Youngberg and attended Dodge City High School during her senior year. On April 2, 1992, just weeks before her 10-month stay was over, Bratovic said she received some startling news from Bosnia.

War had broken out in Sarajevo. The war, which had already started in Croatia and other parts of the nearby countries, had finally filtered into Bosnia.

"There was no way I could get in," Bratovic said. "The war had started, and the airports and roads were closed."

Elma's younger sister, Lejla, then 13, immediately caught the next to last flight out of Sarajevo for the U.S., to live with her sister and the Youngbergs.

However, when she stopped at Belgrade to pick up her visa at the American Embassy, she encountered difficulties.

Bratovic said the embassy didn't grant Lejla a visa.

"She filled out the papers, but they still told her 'no,' and she didn't know why,'" Elma said.

When Lejla's mother, Spomenka, discovered the trouble Lejla was having, she left on the last flight out of Sarajevo before the airport closed and was eventually destroyed.

In October, Lejla finally received her visa and came to the United States. Spomenka moved to Croatia to help out with the thousands of refugee children whose parents were murdered or fled the country.

"It was a very good life. We had a lot of freedom and everyone went to school."
ELMA BRATOVIC
SOPHOMORE IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING

Elma stayed in Dodge City and continued her education at Dodge City Community College.

But her mind constantly stayed in Sarajevo, she said.

"It was terrible. I was afraid to even pick up the phone, for fear that it would be bad news. It was hard to even watch the news because I was afraid I'd see someone I knew. I know many of my friends have been killed," Elma said.

Elma's father was captured and was forced to stay in his garage for four weeks. Like most Muslim prisoners, he was traded for Serbian prisoners.

Elma received letters from her grandparents detailing the constant sights of devastation in Sarajevo.

The once beautiful city of Sarajevo was in shambles. The sound of children playing had long since stopped and was now replaced by cries for help and sounds of machine gun fire. Almost every building standing in the city of Sarajevo was destroyed, and those still standing were occupied by snipers perched on the roof or by a window.

Editor's note: Anyone wishing to provide assistance to the Bratovic family may contact Mr. Chuck Burton, chairman in Department of Architectural Engineering/Construction Science at (913) 532-5964.

"They're so used to death that they know every time they leave to even get food, that they may not come back again. Death really doesn't matter to them now," Elma said.

Snipers will shoot at anything that moves and often play games with other soldiers to see how many Muslims they can kill each day.

"They're animals," Bratovic said, "They're not people."

When asked, Elma doesn't hesitate to describe the constant struggle her family has to endure everyday trying to survive at the place they once referred to as home.

She said her family has been left without electricity, heat or food. Humanitarian packages are distributed by the United Nations but when the food runs out thugs can often be found selling stolen rations through the black market, for as much as five times the value.

Crime is rampant. People will do anything for money.

Old bombs found in WW II vet's belongings

NEWTON (AP) — Relatives cleaning out a footlocker that belonged to a World War II veteran who died last week were surprised to find two grenades and a "pencil" bomb kept since the war.

Thomas H. Gordon II, a retired foreman for the Santa Fe Railroad and a U.S. Army veteran, died Aug. 25. His family was going through his belongings on Tuesday when they found the weapons.

Bomb squad members determined after the grenades were destroyed that they were not live.

Black men bring civil rights suit against KU

TOPEKA (AP) — The University of Kansas and six members of its police department are being sued in a civil-rights complaint.

The lawsuit, filed Tuesday, asserts that four university police officers violated the civil rights of three black men during a car stop.

Jonathan Jasmine and Ted Newman, both of Douglas County, and Chad Clark, of Missouri, said they were stopped by the four officers while leaving a campus parking lot. The officers, they said, ordered them from the car at gunpoint, handcuffed them and forced them to kneel on the ground while the car was searched.

The police had been told by an unidentified informant that one of the men had earlier brandished a handgun, officials said. No weapon was found.

The plaintiffs, all in their 20s, are seeking more than $1 million in compensatory damages and more than $750,000 in punitive damages.

Jim Denney, director of the KU police department, declined comment on the lawsuit. He said the officers used the department's felony car-stop procedures based on the information that there might have been a gun in the car.

"They do it in such a manner to make it safe for both the officers and the occupants of the vehicle," he said.

Denney, officers Jeff D. Neavitt, Herb L. Martin Jr., Gayle T. Reece and Mark D. Witt are all named in the lawsuit. An unnamed university dispatcher is also being sued.

OSU president resigns after criticism

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — John Campbell, the beleaguered president of Oklahoma State University, conceded to his critics and decided to do what he had promised he would not — resign.

Campbell told supporters and faculty Tuesday he will quit to take a teaching job effective Sept. 15. He literally fled reporters and photographers after reading a four-page, 20-minute statement.

"For some, today will be a day of happiness," Campbell said. "For others, it will be one of sadness. I hope it will be a day when we put aside the things that have divided us in the past."

Campbell had found himself facing criticism virtually from his first day in office in 1988.

Most recently, he paid $35,000 from an OSU Foundation account to the Tulsa Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce, with most of that money funneled to support the campaign for a state lottery.

Rhino disappears from wildlife sanctuary

GAUHATI, India (AP) — The last rhinoceros in a wildlife sanctuary has fallen to poachers.

Game wardens found the carcass — with its valuable horn cut off — in the Laokhowa Wildlife Sanctuary, a park official said Wednesday.

The shooting Sunday wiped out the last of the 50 rhinos that once roamed the 30-square-mile park in the state of Assam, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

During the past two years, poachers have killed the park's rhinos for their horns, which are used in aphrodisiacs or smuggled to the Middle East to become dagger handles.

Wardens are having better luck protecting rhinos in nearby Kaziranga National Park. Officials counted 1,160 rhinos there on April 31.

In the past year, game keepers have shot and killed 23 poachers in Kaziranga.

Dave wins battle, talk show war continues

NEW YORK (AP) — The first round goes to Dave.

"Late Show with David Letterman" got a 10.9 rating, reaching about 10.3 million TV homes, on Monday night, for a hearty 32-percent share of the viewing audience in Letterman's new 11:35 p.m. EDT neighborhood at CBS.

But NBC's "Tonight Show with Jay Leno" held much of its ground with a 4.1 rating and 11 share.

Man rapes women, uses condoms

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A rapist who used condoms in two attacks and ordered his victims to bathe after he assaulted them appears to be targeting women alone in upscale homes, police said.

The rapist also usually cuts the phone lines in the house and puts a pillow or sheet over the victim's face during the attack, said police Sgt. Joe MacKay of the sex crimes unit on Tuesday.

Four rape-burglaries and three additional burglaries have occurred since November in neighborhoods on the city's far north side.

Investigators said Monday the rapist has targeted women who were alone in their homes, attacking them at knifepoint between midnight and 6 a.m.

Ancient egg pawn in hide-and-seek game

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Everyone wants the ancient egg.

However, the child who reburied the 2,000-year-old fossilized find will only speak for a price: $102,000.

The 9-year-old boy, Jamie Andrich, hid the egg when officials blocked him and two friends from selling it to a foreign collector.

The Western Australian state government argued it owned the egg because it was found on state-owned land. It has offered a $17,000 reward for the egg, believed to be from the extinct elephant bird.

The elephant bird, a flightless ostrich-like creature that became extinct in its native Madagascar about 400 years ago, never lived in Australia.

Runner raises money for leukemia

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Manhattan resident Chuck McCarthy will achieve a two-fold dream Nov. 14 by running in the New York City Marathon and raising money for the Leukemia Society of America.

A few months ago, McCarthy heard a radio advertisement placed by the Leukemia Society of America. The organization was looking for volunteers to run in the marathon to raise money.

McCarthy, co-owner and estimator for Superior Roofing in Manhattan, said he decided to become one of the 50 runners who will represent Kansas. Nationwide, 2,500 participants will be raising funds as they run in the 26-mile race.

"Not only will I get in shape, I'll be helping people who have leukemia," McCarthy said.

McCarthy said he will run in honor of Mary Hammel, director of media for the College of Education at K-State.

Hammel has been on a medical leave of absence ever since she was diagnosed with leukemia. She had a successful bone marrow transplant one year ago.

Hammel said she appreciates what McCarthy is doing for the Leukemia Society.

"People need to be aware that this can happen to anyone," she said.

Since high school, McCarthy has been involved in athletics. He said he is a believer in physical fitness.

His running career began in 1978 when he ran in the two-mile Fun Run in Aggieville.

Now, at the age of 43, McCarthy has two marathons to his credit. In 1985 and in 1990, he ran the Omaha Marathon.

He said he ran the marathons in three hours and 56 minutes, and four hours and one minute, respectively.

"My goal is to finish the New York City Marathon under four hours," McCarthy said. "Realistically because of the late start, I'll probably run it in five hours."

McCarthy has already started his rigorous training schedule for the marathon. He said his family is supportive of his efforts to help leukemia patients.

At 5:30 in the morning, four days a week, he starts his day with leg stretches, followed by a six- to eight-mile run.

McCarthy said when he is exercising he's a lot happier, gets more done at work and has more energy.

As marathon day approaches, McCarthy said he will increase his training to prepare himself for the 26-mile run.

McCarthy's nutritional regimen is not a specifically chosen diet. He eats energy foods — fruits, vegetables, yogurt — and drinks plenty of water.

Prior to participating in the marathon, McCarthy had to join the New York City Runners Club and pay the marathon entry fee of $55. His travel and lodging expenses will be paid by the Leukemia Society of America.

He said the most difficult part of preparing for the New York City Marathon is the soliciting of sponsorships.

As part of the participant's commitment to the race and to the Leukemia Society of America, each runner has agreed to raise at least $3,500 by November.

To date, McCarthy has raised about $300. He has set his goal more than the required amount. He said he wants to raise $5,000.

Motivation is not a problem for him.

"When I set my mind to do something, I want to finish," he said.

Beginning this month, he will focus not only on the individual but private business and corporate sponsorships, McCarthy said.

He said anyone who would like to be a sponsor can pledge either a flat-rate or per-mile donation.

HOW TO JOIN IN THE BATTLE AGAINST LEUKEMIA

Anyone who would like to be a sponsor can make either a flat rate or per-mile donation.

Student injured at spillway

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

A geology lab trip Tuesday morning proved to be dangerous for a K-State student.

Matthew Secor, sophomore in chemical engineering, fell and received a head injury and cracked a rib at the Tuttle Creek spill way during the lab.

The class was studying the affect of erosion on the spill way.

"We heard a crack and he was crumpled up on the floor of the spill way," Wendy McGrew, geology student and public relations major, said. "If the rock hadn't crumbled on the way down, he would have been crushed."

McGrew, who had been an athletic trainer in high school, and another student who had first aid training, the other students and the instructor went to the Secor's aid.

Someone went to get a park ranger and call an ambulance, McGrew said.

McGrew said she went to get the first aid kit out of the University van, but there was not a kit in the van.

"We couldn't even clean him up," McGrew said.

It took about 20 minutes for the ambulance to arrive at the scene, she said.

Before the ambulance arrived, the student went into convulsions and passed out for a time, McGrew said.

Secor was treated at the hospital and released a couple of hours later.

Jennifer Elick, graduate student in geology and graduate teaching assistant for the class, said they tried to keep Secor calm and conscious until the ambulance arrived.

Secor said his classmates did an exceptional job trying to take care of him after the fall.

EDITORIAL

Speech, the Klan, and just one man

Freedom of speech is not something we can redefine to fit our personal beliefs.

It is a right that must be accorded all people, despite their personal beliefs. That we disagree with the message is irrelevant.

Anthony Griffin, an attorney in Galveston, Texas, is an example to all Americans because he realizes this.

Griffin, a black general counsel and member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has agreed to defend a Ku Klux Klan grand dragon's right to free speech.

Michael Lowe, the grand dragon of the Knights of the KKK Realm in Waco, Texas, has filed a civil liberties suit to keep financial records, membership lists and other documents from Texas Attorney General Dan Morales. The state has accused Lowe of using threats and intimidation to thwart the court-ordered desegregation of public housing in east Texas.

Defending a person's right to privacy and free speech, even when it may demean your very existence, is an amazing tribute to a nation that professes to strive for multiculturalism.

In our great melting pot gone awry, no group can be silenced, regardless of what its message may be.

The NAACP has demanded Griffin resign his post.

"We think it's inconsistent that someone has an association with them and with us," Texas NAACP leader Gary Bledsoe said.

The NAACP's failure to understand that everyone — regardless of race, background or viewpoint — has the right to speak freely is inconsistent with the basis of that organization.

"I don't like the Klan," Griffin said, "but if I don't stand up and defend the Klan's right to free speech, my right to free speech will be gone."

Here are a plethora of parking problems

Parking Services is a $1.2 million a year operation. It pays $110,000 in student salaries each year, Public Safety Director John Lambert said.

But Parking Services also takes away a great deal of student money. Last year, students, faculty and visitors plugged about $100,000 worth of nickels, dimes and quarters into the parking meters on lots across campus. Students, faculty and administrators also paid out about $300,000 in parking tickets last year.

All money is reported to go into the operation itself, such as paying for costs like snow removal, which cost about $140,000 last year alone.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

The money also goes to rebuilding and resurfacing lots across campus, such as those near Haymaker Hall and east of Shellenberger Hall.

The service is also using incoming funds to pay back a $3-million loan it took out three years ago to pave the residence hall lots north of Weber Hall. Payments on the loan are about $350,000 a year.

At this point, you may be saying: Dave, what's the point?

To that I would say — Good question.

Concerning me this day is the Parking Problem.

Student Senate used $7,000 of your money to commission a graduate student to study the Parking Problem during the course of three months.

They hired Bharath Vellanki, graduate student in civil engineering. He told me over the phone Tuesday that although there are 1.4 permits sold this year per stall, he does not consider that a shortage of parking spaces.

The problem, however, is that parking spaces are poorly distributed in relation to the hubs of campus activity.

For instance, there are a ton of newly-paved parking stalls way up north of Weber Hall. Another big lot exists out west of the old stadium.

The majority of classrooms, however, are four or five city blocks away from the nearest parking lot.

The lots closest to the center of campus are the lot north of Willard Hall and the lot east of McCain Auditorium.

To add to the problem, parts of the McCain lot will be filled in with an art museum soon, and about 300 spaces will be lost when they start construction on the new library.

The two most talked about remedies for the Parking Problem are a Parking Garage and a Shuttle System.

A fundamental problem with the shuttle system has been from where students will be picked up.

It has been suggested that students be sold a permit to park in the football stadium parking lot and then be shuttled off to class from there.

A major reason against using the stadium lot is folks worry the asphalt there is not heavy-duty enough to withstand the kind of treatment it would receive being used every day.

Vellanki said the stadium parking lot will be redone soon. So, perhaps whoever is in charge of this project will be forward-thinking enough to put on a surface able to support day-by-day use.

The idea of a parking garage is a sticky one in that no one knows from where the hypothetical money for this hypothetical parking garage will come.

One thing is for sure: The government won't kick in any dinero. K-State had to drag legislators to the table to get monies for the Farrell Library renovation and expansion, and that happened only after lightning burned Hoch Auditorium at the University of Kansas.

Anyone thinking our wonderful Kansas Legislature will give us cash money for a silly ol' parking garage is taking too many pulls on the crack pipe.

And barring the city of Manhattan annexing a large portion of K-State and building a parking garage to finance its softball fields, the only option left is the student pocketbook.

It is hard to know what a shuttle system or a parking garage could cost each student.

I don't know about you, but after paying for things like rising tuition, "Newly Revised" editions of textbooks rewritten by my professors, my rent and greenskeepers for President Wefald's complimentary housing at 100 Wilson Court, I just don't feel comfortable paying more money for a Solution to the Parking Problem, which I don't think is much of a problem at all.

My wife hopes I graduate soon so I may never have to deal with the Solution to the Parking Problem.

So, I'm warning you. It's time for those of you who are going to be here a while longer to start worrying about your money because with the conclusions of Mr. Vellanki's parking study due out around the end of September, someone may soon ask you for more cash.

Perhaps the biggest problem with parking at K-State is that someone may soon try to fix it, and fix it but good.

PARKING SERVICE'S BALANCE SHEET:

OUTCOME
–Student Salaries: $110,000
–Snow Removal: $140,000
–Loan Payments: $350,000

INCOME
–Parking Meter Income: $100,000
–Parking Fines: $300,000

–Parking permits sold per stall: 1.4

The bald truth about follicle loss

This past summer I suffered yet another birthday.

And I must say, after years of microscopic (yet increasingly detectable) physical and mental deterioration, I have unfortunately reached a critical point all of the "good" numbers are gone.

What is left are the "F" numbers — two whole decades of "F" numbers. "F" numbers are in a disgusting class all by themselves — kind of like "F" words — only there are a whole lot more of them.

Not a pleasant scenario.

Now, I know most of you thought I was much older judging from my picture. This common error in age assessment is due, in large part, to my eyebrows ... and the fact that there is not much hair above them.

Believe it or not (and this can be verified with actual, non-grocerystoretabloid photos), I had hair down to my shoulders when I was a senior in high school. And if I had known at the time that the long hair I had at 18 was actually all the hair I would ever grow before the sun turned into a blazing, !@#$?%& supernova, I would have begun the laborious process, then and there, of trying to shove each individual hair back into my head with a pair of tweezers so there would be something left when I turned... well, the age I am now.

Actually, I have plenty of hair — it has just lost its sense of direction. Instead of normal outward growth, my hair is now growing into my head and out my nose and ears (and you thought I wear a mustache. Ha!).

BRAD SEABOURN

At the current rate, by the time I am 50 I should have a sufficient amount of hair growing out of all my major orifices to comb back over the top of my head (like you see some bald men do with the hair on the sides of their head in an obvious attempt to shield their scalp from harmful alien "sex-change" rays that cause male menopause and make sheep lust after farmers).

This hairstyle gives the head a rather "fashionable" look similar to a lost golf ball that has sat in the sun long enough to begin growing a rare Amazonian fungus. I sincerely hope there are hundreds of bald, dedicated (fungus-covered) scientists out there who are spending many long hours trying to find a cure for this obscene affliction.

My wife, however, is always understanding and never fails to point out: "I love you anyway." Anyway? The Elephant Man and the Hunchback of Notre Dame heard more reassuring words from rock-throwing rabble. Yet, I know she secretly worries when we are out together in bright sunlight that high-altitude military aircraft might accidentally mistake my head for an open runway ("You should wear a hat today, dear, just in case the Air Force is flying one of those nasty surveillance aircraft.").

Then, as if hair loss were not enough, there is the problem of Middle-Aged Fat, which if the truth were known, is not fat at all but rather undigested snack food that my body has efficiently seen fit to accumulate over the past two decades and deposit in cavernous, pouch-like areas in my lower anatomy in the unlikely event that my airplane goes down in the Himalayas and I am stranded without food.

Each time I look in the mirror I am reassured that I (and my family) could live for months on my personal "survival kit."

Middle-Aged Fat is also the reason why I no longer like to dance. Although today's so-called "modern" dance has all the appearance of 50 billion simultaneous epileptic seizures occurring during a 9.7 magnitude earthquake, at least all parts of the body are moving when told to do so (I think).

However, Middle-Aged Fat moves on its own, under its own power, and I find this highly disturbing. As an example of this phenomenon (and my wife still doesn't know), I always go and sit down after the first song and have a few beers while my wife dances with my fat. By the end of the evening, she is raving about how good a dancer I am, and after 20 beers I adamantly agree.

No. If this is what it is like at ... this age, then I am not looking forward to the "F" numbers.

What's that, dear? You don't think I am getting older? You actually think I am getting better?

See what I mean? My wife turned 40 this year, and she is already losing her mind.

UPDATE

As of 5 p.m. Wednesday, K-State administration has not responded to the Collegian's open-records request for a copy of Coach Bill Snyder's contract.

▶ OH, RATS

Would you raticule all the benefits NASA research provides?

Editor,

I am writing in response to your column of Aug. 27. Would it be too much to ask that you do some background research before complaining? The deaths of these rats, to which you object so strongly, will in fact provide much necessary data in space life-sciences research. I hate to remove your rose-tinted glasses, but no, after 20 years, we still don't know everything there is about metabolism in microgravity.

In fact, after 2,000 (and more) years, we still don't know everything about metabolism in one gravity. These rats, once deceased, will be parceled out to many different researchers in the United States and probably some from other countries. Each and every piece will be used. The same can be said about the control rats, which will be killed on Earth.

But suppose NASA decided to cancel the experiments — what would we lose? Well, we'd be that much further behind in research on how to keep humans alive on trips to other planets. We'd lose some data on cellular and anatomical responses to microgravity. We wouldn't get a better understanding of how metabolism works in one gravity, because we'd have nothing to use as a comparison. And we'd be one more step closer to sinking into the great shortcoming of Americans: apathy.

With regard to the proposed budget, if you can design a humane, safe, instantaneous, launch-capable device to kill rats for less than $100, I'm sure NASA would love to hear about it. Remember to do your homework on this one too; it must be completely sterilizable, made of NASA-approved materials, able to withstand the vibrations of launch, work without the use of gravity, not have the capability to injure the astronauts, kill instantly with little blood loss, and fit in specified power consumption and available storage parameters.

To conclude, scientists of the world unite! Stop the senseless belittling of research and make other humans understand your position on this terrible issue. Until you do, your grant money will only continue to die in the press' onslaught.

God and His Book instruct that you only take the straight path

Editor,

I am elated Erin Mansur-Smith has read the Bible, but I find it unfortunate she didn't understand it.

God is the supreme judge of all the earth. So, what God says goes! God strongly opposes homosexuality. It seems as if Erin considers homosexuality a right of human nature. This belief is wrong. God has given us (human beings) the freedom, or choice, to choose which way to live our lives.

Deuteronomy 30:19 describes this by stating God has set forth a "blessing" and a "cursing." The choice in how to live our lives is ours to make. Right or wrong, milk or tea, Heaven or Hell, K-State or KU, white or wheat bread, smoking or non-smoking, Democrat or Republican.

If we choose the "dark side of the force," then we must be prepared to pay the consequences for our actions. Therefore, no one has the "right" to be homosexual; he or she has the freedom or choice to ignore God's word.

I agree Rev. Phelps' methods are extremely radical and inappropriate, but what he says concerning vile behavior is true.

Our God is not a God of hate and vengeance as Fred proclaims. But instead, I believe God sheds a tear every time another person decides to turn from his path.

We should hate the sin, but love the sinner. Fred and I would disagree on this theological issue I'm sure, but the fact remains that homosexuality is wrong and should not be endorsed here on earth, no matter who is speaking or holding a sign.

High school studies security changes

p.m. to assure parents that all other students were safe. School officials met to discuss the shooting after the students were released.

JCHS Principal Greg Springston said the school will conduct classes today. Springston said he hopes to provide updates to teachers and students.

"This is an unfortunate isolated incident," said Mary Devin, superintendent of Unified School District 475.

Devin said teachers and students will continue to cope for some time.

The high-school administration is examining possible security changes, Springston said.

Short-term security changes could include additional law enforcement officers on the school grounds, more faculty members to supervise the students and the use of two hall monitors.

Long-term changes may include the installation of metal detectors, which were discussed by school officials prior to Wednesday's incident.

Springston said the lunch hour is the worst part of the school day because faculty members have the least supervision of students at this time.

Lunches are staggered at the high school.

Springston said about half of the students were in class when the shooting occurred. Students who were not in class were encouraged to go into the auditorium, where faculty members discussed the shooting, Springston said.

All students were encouraged to attend sixth hour, and about half of the students did, he said.

Springston said he didn't know if there anything could have been done to prevent the incident.

"No locker searches have been conducted this year," he said. "We felt no need."

While school officials said they had no reason to believe the incident was gang related, a Junction City Police Department release stated the dispute may have been gang related.

A forum will take place at 7 tonight at the high school. Springston said the purpose of the forum is to answer questions from the community.

Overlay class may begin next fall

students' awareness."

Skoog selected Dan Lewerenz, director of multicultural affairs for the Student Government Association and junior in philosophy and American ethnic studies, to oversee the multicultural overlay proposal.

"There is very little talk now about forming a multicultural class, but rather adopting the present curriculum," Lewerenz said.

Lewerenz said the requirement should not add to the total number of credits needed to graduate but would direct people to selected courses that would fulfill a social science course as well as the multicultural overlay.

"Nothing is firm — that is why the Sept. 9 forum is needed," Lewerenz said.

Faculty Senate must approve any curriculum changes. The original plan called for adoption of the multicultural overlay by fall of 1994.

"With the best of both worlds, there is a possibility it (the multicultural overlay requirement) will be implemented by next fall," Ottenheimer said.

If necessary, the requirement proposal will be revised by a committee before being sent to Faculty Senate for approval and implementation, Lewerenz said.

"As America's population becomes increasingly diverse, the need for a greater understanding of people and their culture, different than our own, will be necessary regardless of career choice," Lewerenz said.

"The diversity overlay will enable students of all disciplines to further that understanding."

Tonya Foster contributed to this story.

of geology, said there was a first aid kit in the geology van when it was used this summer.

After the accident, the geology department replaced the first aid kit in the van and checked all the other department vehicles for kits, Graf said.

This is the first time, Graf said he was aware there was an accident on a Geology trip since he took his position in 1985.

Secor said he was not upset that there had not been a first aid kit in the van.

"There wasn't much a first aid kit could have done to help me," he said.

Secor had done some rock climbing before. He pulled himself up on the rock, before he stepped on it and it seemed stable, he said.

Elick said the climbing at the spill way was not difficult.

"The rocks were in a stair-like profile," she said. "I would not have been concerned for an elderly person or child to climb it."

Elick said no one could have known the rock Secor stepped on was unstable. It was an unpreventable accident, she said.

"It was obvious that the situation warranted some caution," she said. "I reiterated several times to the students that they should be careful."

Graf said the department will continue to take trips to the spill way.

"It is extremely difficult to teach geology without such trips," Graf said.

Jennifer Elick, graduate student teaching the class, said she plans to take the class back out to the spill way before the end of the semester.

Bring It escapes with 27-20 victory

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Bring It, an independent league team, used a last-second punt return for a touchdown to post a 27-20 victory over the Hell Cats Wednesday in the opening day of intramural flag football at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area.

"It was the key play of the game," Kevin Sweatland, senior in political science and Bring It captain, said.

Sweatland started the game-winning play when he received the punt around mid-field. Sweatland ran the ball to the 20-yard line, and he then pitched it to Cory Latham.

Latham, a junior in pre-professional secondary education, dodged several would-be tacklers and passed the ball to Von Francis, junior in business administration, in the back of the end zone for the game-winning touchdown.

A team can pass twice during play from anywhere on the field in flag football

"We all know where to go, and we just try to split the field," Latham said. "I knew that somebody would be there."

The Hell Cats jumped out to 20-12 lead in the first half behind the arm of quarterback Tom Bradshaw, senior in agribusiness. Bradshaw connected on three touchdown passes of 50 yards or more.

He also had two 20-yard completions in the first half to give him more than 240 yards passing in the first half.

While the Hell Cats were having success in the air, Bring It dropped its option rushing game for a passing attack.

The switch resulted in two long touchdown plays by Latham and Sweatland.

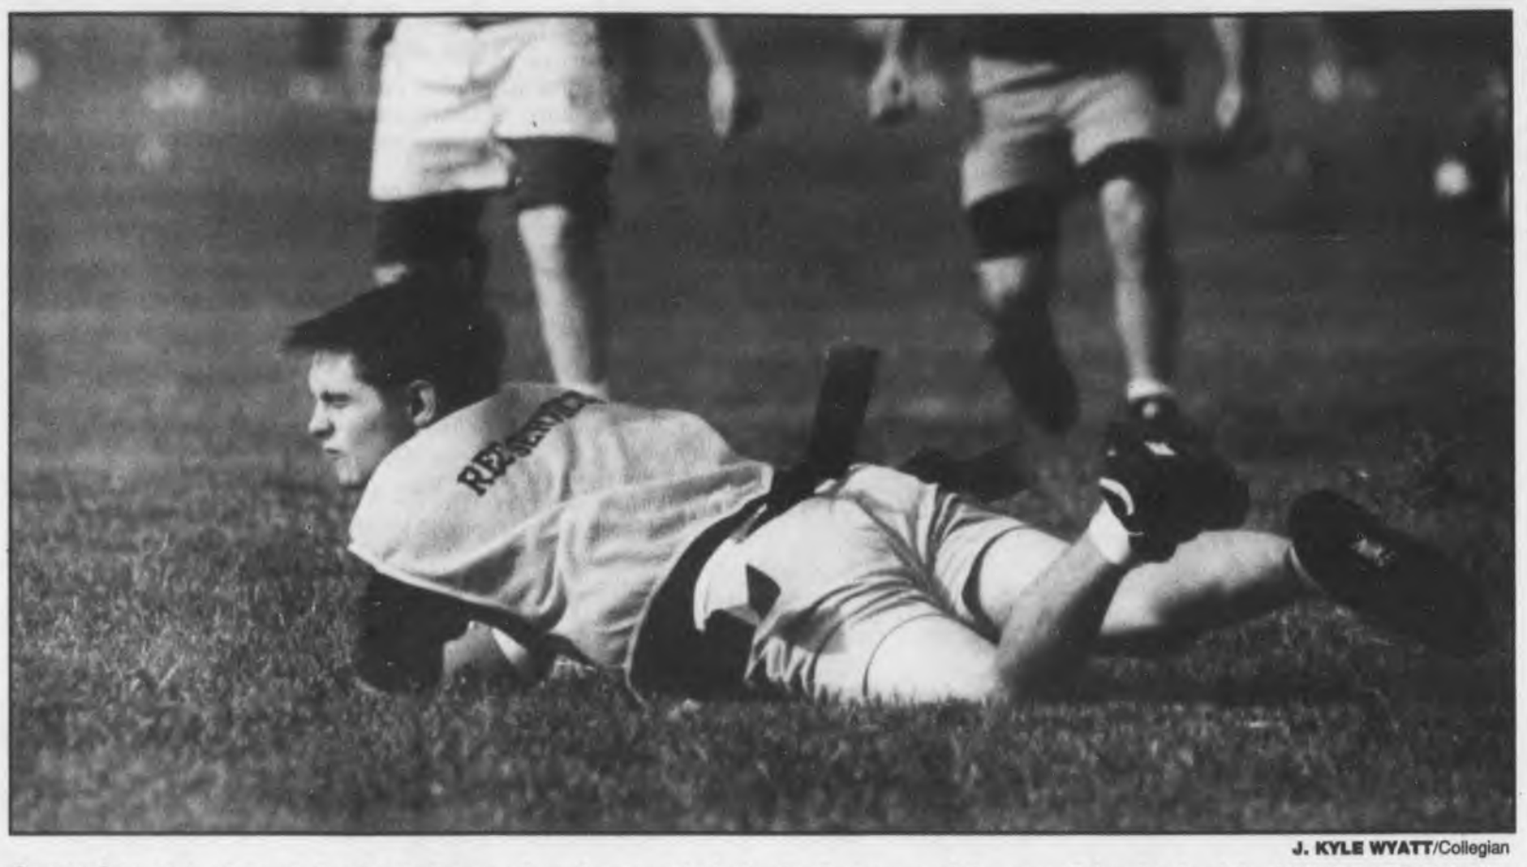
Trailing at halftime by the score of 20-12, Bring It also switched its defense.

"We switched to a 3-3-1 zone defense," Sweatland said. "We also started figuring out where to go."

The defensive switch worked as the Bring It defense held the Hell Cats scoreless for the rest of the game and forced them to punt three times.

"Von did a good job of rushing and keeping the quarterback in the pocket," Latham said.

While the defense was holding the Hell Cats in check, the Bring It offense got rolling again behind Latham. Latham mixed option rushes and short passes before connecting with a receiver on an out-and-up pattern for a 40-yard touchdown with around five minutes remaining in the game.



"I think in the second half, we were a little more polished," Sweatland said. "We had never practiced, and no one even knew the plays before today. The second half went a little bit smoother."

After the touchdown, the Bring It defense held the Hell Cat offense and forced them to punt, resulting in the winning play.

The game was also full of penalties by both teams. The Hell Cats were penalized seven times and Bring It was penalized six times.

The experience factor could have played a role in the outcome of the game as the Hell Cats had never played together, while it was the third year that Bring It had played together.

"This is the first time ever that we have played together," Hell Cat captain Donald Classen, junior in agronomy, said. "We are going to learn how play and compete."

Trio of running backs to succeed Eric Gallon

K-State's 2nd all-time leading rusher gone; Cats will rely on Schiller, Smith and Edwards

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

When Eric Gallon finished his eligibility at K-State, it left a gaping hole in the offensive backfield.

However, the threesome of Rod Schiller, J.J. Smith and Leon Edwards said they feel they are capable of filling that hole successfully.

Schiller enters his third year as a starter for K-State where he has proven himself as a leading blocker and a proven runner in short-yardage situations.

"He is a hard and tough runner," Smith said of Schiller.

"He always fights off the first tackler and manages to gain more yards."

Schiller was K-State's most efficient runner last season with an average of 4.8 yards per carry.

He is also one of the strongest players on the field for the Wildcats.

During winter conditioning, he bench-pressed 408 pounds and squatted 531 pounds.

The heir apparent to Eric Gallon looks to be J.J. Smith. Smith comes into the 1993 season with plenty of experience, despite backing up Gallon for most of the last two years.

Smith started four games last season, including the Missouri game. In that game, he gained 109 yards on 17 carries, an average of 6.4 yards per carry.

"Eric was a great runner, but I don't really try to replace him," Smith said. "I try to do my own thing and give 100 percent on every play."

With his breakaway speed and surprising inside toughness, Smith rarely loses yardage and has averaged 5.6 yards per carry during his career.

At 5 foot 6 inches and 160 pounds, Edwards is by no means a physically imposing figure.

"I am a quick, cutback, jitterbug style of runner," Edwards said. "I don't try to run over many people,"

Edwards appeared in six games last season and carried the ball only 14 times.

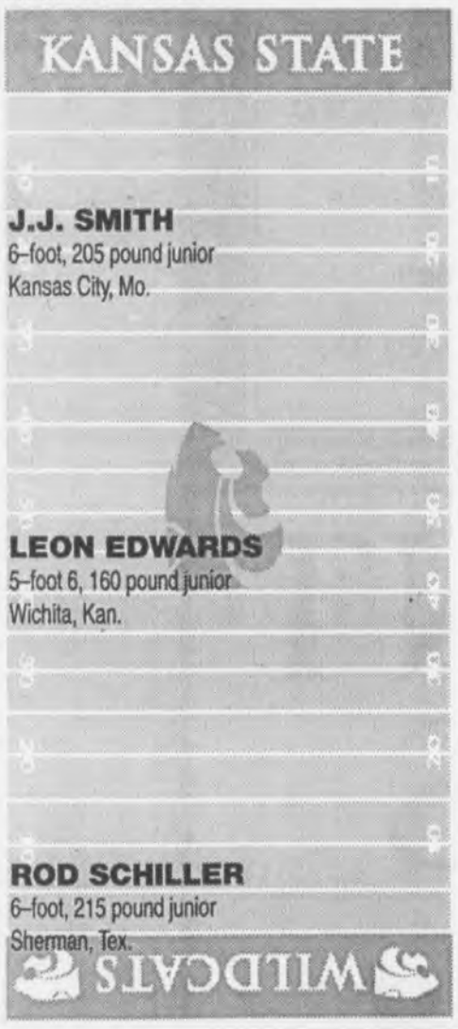
His role should be a bigger one this season due to the absence of Gallon.

"I just want to do the best I can with the chances that I am given. If it is only 30 seconds or one minute, I am going to make the most I can out of that time," Edwards said.

A prolific rusher at Wichita Southeast High School, Edwards broke Barry Sanders' league and 6-A state rushing records.

He averaged 235 yards per game as a senior and led Southeast to its second-consecutive Wichita City League title in 1989.

"We have become a tight trio during the practices this summer," Edwards said. "We try to stick together and push each other to become more consistent."



THREESOME IN THE BACKFIELD

Three junior running backs are being watched closely as the Wildcats enter the '93 season without the assistance of Eric Gallon.

SARA SMITH/Collegian

Smith not concerned with personal goals, would rather see Wildcats play in postseason

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

J.J. Smith has one concern this season — winning.

"I want to be the best," Smith said. "Last year, we let our guard down, and several teams got to us. We can't let that happen again."

Smith will have some say on whether the Wildcats let their guard down this year as the starting running back.

He, along with Leon Edwards and Rod Schiller, will be assigned the task of holding down the position owned by former K-State standout Eric Gallon.

"I am a different runner than Gallon was," Smith said. "I like to slash and cut more than he did. He was more of a power runner."

Edwards said Smith runs with agility and power up the middle.

"J.J. is a slashing runner with surprising power to run inside," Edwards said.

However, Smith is by no means a pushover when it comes to running the ball inside. Last year, he lost only three yards on 51 carries.

"I tried to bulk up a little bit in the off season," he said. "I gained about 10 pounds, and I feel much more powerful."

Like any running back, though, Smith will depend on his offensive line to get him out of the backfield.

"I am tickled to death about our offensive line," Smith said. "Every time I see them, I smile. They work really well together and make my job so much easier."

Smith has ample reason to smile, as the starting offensive linemen, led by all-American candidate Quentin Neujahr, have 11 years of combined experience.

"If the line doesn't block them, Schiller will," Smith said. "He is an outstanding blocker."

Much like the offensive line, Smith, Schiller and Edwards also work close together during practices.

"Rod and Leon push me to be more consistent during practice," Smith said. "It really helps to have teammates like that."

Smith has shown flashes of success throughout his career at K-State. On his first carry as a freshman, he ran around the left end of the defensive line for a 72-yard touchdown against Idaho State.

Last season, when Gallon went down with an injury, Smith was given the starting spot before the Missouri game. He responded with 109 yards on 17 carries.

"I won't consider this year a successful year unless we are playing after the regular season is over," he said.

"(Running back) Coach Griffith tells us to stay focused, execute and play mistake-free football. We didn't stay focused last year on and off the field."

Lendl exits U.S. Open due to knee injury

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Ivan Lendl, a three-time U.S. Open champion and seeded 13th this year, quit during the third set of his first-round match today because of an injured knee.

Lendl trailed Neil Borwick of Australia 4-6, 6-4, 3-1 on stadium court when he told the chair umpire he could not continue.

Pete Sampras, a blue-collar type who believes hard work pays off in tournament titles, opened his bid for a U.S. Open title to go with his Wimbledon championship by beating Fabrice Santoro 6-3, 6-1, 6-2. The victory by the tournament's No. 2 seed came after Andre Agassi, seeded 16th, tripped over Thomas Enqvist of Sweden 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 6-7 (3-7), 6-2.

No defending men's champion ever lost in the first round of the U.S. Open, much less a two-time defending champ like Stephen Edberg. Yet he barely survived a 3 1/2-hour match against France's Olivier Delaitre 6-2, 0-6, 7-6 (9-7), 5-7, 6-3.

Less fortunate was Jennifer Capriati, the women's No. 7 seed, drummed out in the first round by Leila Meskhi 1-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Michael Stich, the men's No. 6 seed, tumbled to another Swede, Henrik Holm, 6-3, 7-6 (10-8), 3-6, 6-3.

Baseball season full of 'sadness and madness'

SCOTT FRITCHEN

What a Major Leauge Baseball season it's turning out to be.

With the unfortunate string of events baseball has encountered during the 1993 season, Major League Baseball could very well go down as the year of "sadness and madness."

When pitchers Tim Crews and Steve Olin were killed during a boating accident at Baseball City in Hanes City, Fla., the gloom that hit the hearts of baseball fans echoed not only around the Cleveland Indians' training camp, but throughout the country as well.

People were once again reminded of the unspeakable truth that, yes, even superstar athletes are not immortal.

But what about the madness that has tormented baseball this season?

It seems predestined that during the course of ball games, actions will be provoked on the field, and those actions will call for swift and violent retaliation. Most people have felt the end result would be an insane batter attacking a defenseless pitcher.

But as Nolan Ryan was quick to point out, pitchers aren't defenseless anymore.

Ryan dropped his glove, put the charging Robin Ventura in the head-lock and beat him senseless until teammates mobbed the two players.

When Baltimore Oriole pitcher Mike Mussina hit Seattle Mariner catcher Bill Haselman with a pitch, Haselman attacked the mound and a 20-minute riot ensued on the field of Camden Yards in Baltimore, Md.

Then, we have Brian McRae of the Royals.

When he was hit by Texas pitcher Bob Patterson on July 29 in Kansas City, Mo., instead of charging Patterson, he went after Texas manager Kevin Kennedy — in the dugout.

However, he was restrained before he got the chance to show Kennedy how it feels to get plunked in the back.

The climax of the madness literally blew up in the face of baseball, and on the face of a fan on July 24, when the New York Mets epitomized how not to act when you're a baseball player.

The first incident happened to outfielder Vince Coleman when he showed his stupidity in throwing M-80 firecrackers out of the car of Los Angeles Dodger Eric Davis.

The firecracker hit 2-year-old Amanda Santos under the eye.

A month later, he was sent packing — explosives and all.

Then there's pitcher Bret Saberhagen, who is wanted in connection with throwing an open container of bleach on sportswriters in the Met locker room. He is still at large.

While baseball still is on the quest of finding a commissioner who can be there to keep baseball together during the sadness of a tragic incident and control the madness that can often develop among the league, it's nice to see that even without a leader, baseball has been able to survive.

Sort of.

■ Chemists exchange ideas in Chicago

Chemists from all over the world converged on Chicago for the 206th American Chemical Society national meeting last week.

"It's the largest meeting of chemists in the country. It's a great place to present your research results and network with other chemists," Eric Maatta, professor of chemistry, said.

About 4,500 papers were presented at the six-day convention.

Maatta gave a lecture and said his research will be used as a teaching tool. In the future it could also have industrial implications, he said.

Charles Riordan, assistant professor of chemistry, attended the convention to talk of his findings about sulfur-rich metals.

"This may bring about a better understanding for biological research," Riordan said.

Research of the metals lasted more than six months and may help with the study of health and diseases, he said.

As many as 200 lectures at a time were given on various chemistry topics.

"It's just a great place to get together and exchange wisdom," Riordan said.

■ Human resource director goes to Washington

New responsibilities and a pay increase lured the K-State director of Human Resource Services into a job at Washington State University.

Alonzo White said he has an opportunity to broaden his horizons as assistant vice provost.

"It's an opportunity to be involved in not only staff personnel affairs, but in academic personnel affairs as well," he said.

Alonzo White

White will receive a significant pay increase, additional recognition and will broaden his career expertise, he said.

White said he has enjoyed his time here at K-State but feels there is room for improvement.

"K-State is a nice place to work, and it is a good university," White said. "I've enjoyed working with the faculty and staff."

However, every employee dislikes something about the job or institution that employs them, White said.

"K-State isn't a place that has had a history of a lot of Afro-American professionals.

"I can say that I feel, as an Afro-American, that I haven't been sorely mistreated at K-State, but within K-State and within Manhattan there are still people who are unaccustomed to dealing with Afro-Americans in administrative positions," he said.

White said he feels the situation is changing and becoming easier as time passes but still runs into some problems at K-State.

In general, White said he thinks the atmosphere at K-State is improving, but once there is a larger critical mass of blacks in faculty and administrative positions, it will help the atmosphere improve more.

White has been the director of Human Resource Services since October 1990.

During the past three years, he has acted on several ideas that led toward the development of a new human-resource system and the installation of mediation as an alternative to the grievance-resolution process, he said.

White has also been instrumental in getting funding for computers in Human Resource Services, Jennifer Gehrt, assistant director of payroll operations, said.

"He has worked very closely on this project since he came to K-State. This year the University has allocated across the board all department budgets, and reallocated them toward the purchase of a new Human Resource System," Gehrt said.

White said when he arrived at K-State there were fewer than 10 personal computers in Human Resource Services.

"As I leave here, every employee has access to update technology and knows how to use that technology in a more efficient manner," he said.

■ Lawyer returns to work at alma mater

A K-State alumna has returned to campus to start a new era of legal assistance to the University attorney's office.

Cheryl Strecker began new duties in June as assistant to the University attorney.

She was appointed by Richard Seaton, University attorney, after associate attorney Dorothy Thompson died of cancer early last year.

"Cheryl brings valuable legal skills and experience to K-State. We're extremely pleased to have her and to bring our staff back up to full strength," Seaton said.

Strecker's duties will include doing general research, counseling, training and litigation.

"I see everything I do as a challenge," Strecker said. "I find my work interesting and full of variety."

A graduate from K-State, Strecker received her bachelor's degree with honors in interdisciplinary social science in 1984.

She attended Cornell Law School in Ithaca, N. Y., where she received a juris doctoral degree in 1987.

Strecker's roots run deep in the Manhattan community.

Her father, George Strecker, is a professor in the mathematics department.

"I really liked going to school here. I grew up in a college town, and that is were I wanted to end up," Strecker said. "It's the best of both worlds."

Band directors have high hopes

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

The tradition of the "Wabash Cannonball," K-State's unofficial fight song, will carry on under the direction of the music department's new director and assistant director of bands.

Frank Tracz, associate professor and director of bands and Jim Kull, assistant director and coordinator of jazz studies, have many goals for the band, they said.

The main goal of both directors is to draw more participants to the band department.

"The whole department wants a place for all interested students on campus to be able to play and participate, majors and non-majors," Kull said.

A massive recruiting effort is planned with the possibility of future band scholarships.

"There is tremendous potential here — we are on the tip of the iceberg for what we can accomplish and do at K-State," Tracz said.

Tracz said he is committed to work with the students to make it happen.

"There is a tremendous potential here — we are on the tip of the iceberg for what we can accomplish and do at K-State."

FRANK TRACZ

Tracz received his bachelor's and doctoral degrees from Ohio State and his master's degree from the University of Wisconsin.

He has taught elementary, high school and college bands. Tracz said he likes teaching at the college level because of the challenge and the organization it takes.

"I wanted to teach students how to be teachers. As director of bands, there is a feeling of artistic and organizational control," Tracz said.

Kull received his bachelor's degree from VanderCook College of Music in Chicago and his master's degree from the University of Illinois.

He is working on a doctoral degree in wind conducting and jazz studies at Indiana University.

Kull has taught for eight years in public schools and is happy at K-State, he said.

"I'm lucky to be at a place like this for my first college job," Kull said.

As assistant director, Kull works more closely with the jazz bands.

He has one other goal he would like to see accomplished.

"I want the jazz band to perform in Aggieville once a month to get more exposure," he said.

Both directors agree the students have dealt well with the new circumstances.

"The students have been a pleasant surprise in dealing with the change," Kull said.

Kim Alfano, director of Haymaker Hall, is the first woman to be appointed the director of the male residence hall. Breaking the stereotypes men and women have of each other is one goal Alfano said she hopes to accomplish during her stint as director of Haymaker Hall.

Haymaker gets first female director

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Breaking the stereotypes men and women have of each other is a goal of Kim Alfano, the first woman director of Haymaker Hall.

Men and women have a lot to learn about each other, and programs the hall provides may change some of these ideas, she said.

Alfano said she hopes her position also will change the notions about women in the work place.

She also has the task of producing an environment students will want to return to.

Haymaker must facilitate an atmosphere where students can sleep, study and be able to grow and develop in, she said.

Alfano accepted the job because she was impressed by several aspects of K-State.

This includes positive interaction between staff and directors in the residence halls.

"Men and women are treated like adults," she said.

Alfano recently finished her bachelor's and master's degrees in elementary education and education administration from Texas Tech University.

She also worked there as an assistant director of a co-ed residence hall.

"Kim has a lot of energy, enthusiasm and great ideas for new programs," Cole Stanley, assistant director of Haymaker Hall, said.

The director position requires dealing with several issues and problems at once.

Her degrees have helped her learn how to focus on the group but still be able to meet the needs of individuals, Alfano said.

SCHOLARSHIP

Local memorial scholarship created

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

A memorial scholarship, created to benefit undergraduate students in any curriculum, was created to honor a former Manhattan businessman.

Friends and family of Jim Buchanan, a K-State graduate and president of Buchanan and Company, a local brokerage firm, created the scholarship.

Buchanan died of cancer May 13 at age 40.

The Jim Buchanan Scholarship Committee will recommend recipients of the scholarship to the KSU General Scholarship Committee.

Preference will be given to students majoring in agricultural economics or animal sciences and industry.

"We chose K-State for the memorial scholarship because he was a die-hard K-State fan," Teresa Buchanan, Jim's wife, said. "He just had that K-State spirit."

Buchanan wanted to give something back to K-State and pass the same benefits he received on to others, she said.

"I knew him well. He was a great guy," Gordon Dowell, director of publications for KSU Foundation, said. "He had no enemies. He was well-liked."

Buchanan was a native of Little River and moved to Manhattan in 1971. He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at K-State and was a member of Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity.

He was known for his involvement in community activities and church groups in the area.

"We have 391 pages of names who contributed to the scholarship," Dowell said.

The list shows how well-liked Buchanan was by Manhattan residents, he said.

Graduate students have dual roles as teachers, students

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Most students at K-State attend school to graduate and earn a degree, but some earn a degree and gain teaching experience at the same time.

Graduate teaching assistants, or GTA's, must learn to juggle their time between teaching classes and studying.

Lynda Ballou, graduate of the University of Southern Colorado, is a GTA in the statistics department.

Ballou has two years of coursework behind her and two more years to go before qualifying for preliminary exams. She teaches Elementary Statistics for Social Sciences.

Ballou prepares for class during the day and studies three to four hours a night, she said.

She said she tries to study in between classes but sometimes finds it impossible.

"The week before an exam, a lot of students come in asking for help," Ballou said. "The week after, no one comes in."

It is hard to find time to do extra things, she said.

"By the time you teach and help students, there's not a lot of time for anything else," Ballou said.

After receiving her degree, she said she hopes to continue teaching.

"Teaching is relaxing to me. I like to try and help people understand things," Ballou said.

Lokar is also a graduate research assistant.

Similar to a GTA, a GRA helps the professor conduct research.

Lokar studies at night and during his office hours.

It is not hard to find time to prepare for teaching as long as you budget your time, he said.

"You have to tell yourself you're going to work on teaching stuff in the morning and study in the afternoon," Lokar said.

He said he tries to get everything done during the week, leaving his weekends free.

"You are so busy during the week, you must make time for yourself on weekends," Lokar said.

After graduating from the University of Detroit, he received his master's degree from California State University.

He hopes to work for a large company as an internal consultant and maybe teach at a community college, Lokar said.

Being a GTA is time-consuming but gives graduate students valuable experience in teaching, he said.

"It's great experience in terms of presentation skills and speaking to people. It also helps pay the bills," Lokar said.

STUDY RESULTS IN CHANGES

During the past semester, several university offices were examined by Provost James Coffman and Vice President of Administration and Finance Thomas Rawson. As a result, the following administrative reorganization took place effective Monday, August 16.

- Jane Rowlett: Director of Unclassified Affairs and University Compliance. She will hold seminars and assist deans and department heads with issues unrelated to Affirmative Action.
- Dawn Peters: Associate Unclassified Affirmative Action Officer. She will recruit unclassified positions and maintain the Affirmative Action Plan.
- Danielle Dempsey: Assistant Director of Human Resource Services. She will implement the Classified Affirmative Action Program and review complaints of discrimination.
- An internal search will begin immediately for a staff member who will review claims of discrimination and harassment.
- A national search will be conducted for an Affirmative Action Officer.

Teaching abroad found rewarding for professor

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Professor Maurice Stark spent a year in Europe providing an education in business administration. As it turned out, he received one, too.

Stark, a professor in accounting, returned to Manhattan in August after an 11-month teaching sabbatical in Italy and Germany.

While overseas, Stark was part of a diverse faculty, responsible for providing international master of business administration degrees from Clemson University. The course was available to graduate students world wide.

While his responsibility as a teacher was a fulfilling part of his experience, it was by no means the only one, Stark said.

"An important purpose of the sabbatical was to internationalize myself and the college of business administration by gaining more exposure to international business," Stark said.

There are some pronounced differences in how capitalist countries observe accounting and business practices, but the basic principles are the same, Stark said.

"An official from Slovenia came and spoke one day about the transfer from communism to capitalism in their republic," Stark said. "We discovered they don't even have any basic accounting principles."

The desire of former communist countries to convert to capitalism was partially responsible for the diverse makeup of the students he taught, especially in Italy, Stark said.

"The Italian program was made up of about one-third American, one-third Italian and one-third Eastern Bloc students," Stark said. "The Eastern Bloc students represent Slovenia, the Czech Republic, Albania and Russia."

In addition to differing business practices, Stark was exposed to an educational system that is less structured than K-State.

"In Italy there is much less time spent lecturing. The professor tells the students what they are supposed to do, and then they come back the last day of class and take the test," he said.

Now that he has returned to K-State, Stark said he thinks he has a responsibility to share his experience with students and faculty.

"The experience has made me more understanding of foreign students at K-State and the cultural and language barriers they face," he said. "Because of that experience, I think I can bring some of our cultural differences into perspective and get more of Paul Parsons, professor of journalism and mass communications and assistant director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism, recently returned from a sabbatical in Beijing, China. Parsons went to China through the Fulbright Scholarship program and taught Western journalism courses.

Chinese students learn about freedom of press

MIKE HIND
Collegian

Four years ago tanks rolled through Tiananmen Square in Beijing to stop pro-democratic students from demonstrating.

In July, Paul Parsons, professor of mass communications and assistant director of A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, returned from Beijing after completing an 11-month sabbatical where he taught Chinese students about freedom of the press.

"I never once publicly mentioned the Tiananmen Square massacre. It is still a very sensitive subject that is rarely talked about publicly," he said.

The American textbook the students used was chalked full of references to the massacre, but no student ever once brought it up in class. The Chinese refer to it as simply 'the events of 1989.'"

Parsons went to China as a Fulbright professor to teach Western journalism courses to students at the Xinhua School of Journalism in Beijing.

The Fulbright scholarship program is a global organization of scholars and professors whose main emphasis is international education.

Simon Xu, graduate student in mass communications, and Parsons' teaching assistant while in China, sees differences in the freedom felt by Chinese and American professors.

"Chinese educators are much more cautious in their use of materials. American professors are given the freedom to teach anything they want as long it is not material that promotes unrest," Xu said.

The Chinese embraced Western journalism ideas but also were quick to point out flaws.

"The students know their own media have very little credibility within their own country, but they also feel Western journalism encourages sensationalism and lacks respect for authority," Parsons said.

The differences between Chinese and American students were a matter of strengths and weaknesses, Parsons said.

"For the fall semester I did not have one student absent. The students were in class from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. five days a week and a half day on Saturday," he said.

Chinese students are very disciplined but are not as creative as American students, he said. Creativity isn't encouraged in China, Parsons said.

Parsons began his sabbatical in August 1992 and found China a place with good and bad aspects.

Beijing, the capital, is beautiful but very polluted, he said.

The workmanship in China, at times, is poor, he said.

"We went through seven stoves in 11 months. Our children's bicycles were in for repair every other week," Parsons said.

Parsons found China's pace to his liking, noting it as being a less hectic lifestyle.

People still take afternoon naps, he said.

"The crime rate is very low because the government owns most of the guns. Beijing has a population of close to 12 million. I could walk in the city at any time, day or night, and never feel threatened," Parsons said.

Ecologist to research wetlands

KIM DILLON
Collegian

K-State ecologist Geoff Henebry, research associate in the division of biology, left in August for the National Institute for Space Research in São José dos Campos, Brazil.

Henebry has received a grant from the Fulbright Commission to help with his travel expenses.

He will be working with other scientists studying satellite images of the Pantanal, the largest wetland area on the planet, he said.

The Pantanal covers 57,000 square miles, which is 60 percent of the size of Kansas.

There are three components to the Pantanal: an area that always has water, peninsulas of trees that are never under water, and an area that floods every year.

It is maintained by flooding, much like the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area is maintained by fire, he said.

"We are trying to characterize the yearly variability of the extent of the flooding across the Pantanal," Henebry said.

While in Brazil, Henebry will mostly do research on the Pantanal, but he will also do some specialized teaching, seminars and course tutorials.

The National Institute for Space Research is an international center — people come from all over the world to use the facilities.

It has the best facilities in South America, he said.

"The Institute produces maps of the extent that the Amazon is being deforested," Henebry said.

His research done at K-State will help him while he is doing research in Brazil.

Henebry came to K-State for a post-doctoral position, working with the Konza Prairie Long Term Ecological Research Program.

The Konza Prairie is one of 19 research sites spread across North America and is funded by the National Science Foundation, Henebry said.

Henebry's research involves finding out how the Konza Prairie changes over time.

He researches what changes take place on the Konza Prairie from year to year, Walter Dodds, assistant professor of biology, said.

New methods to interpret the data from satellites were developed by Henebry for his research, Dodds said.

our students and faculty thinking about international standards."

Stark said he hopes a greater understanding of the international community will inspire both students and faculty to get involved.

"Hopefully we can get students and faculty more interested in taking part in an international experience," he said.

His sabbatical has already sparked additional interest, Daniel Short, dean of the college of business administration, said.

"We will be sending another accounting professor over to Italy next year," he said.

Short said he believes Stark's sabbatical addresses deeper concerns.

"The real issue is sensitivity and awareness," Short said. "These international experiences teach people to look at problems through a different set of eyes."

The biggest obstacle to overcome for American students participating in the program was the language barrier, Stark said.

"The program requires competency in a language other than English," he said. "All of the American students in the program took a course in Italian and German before they went over there."

Stark said he wants to find a way for more American students, especially from K-State, to be a part of the program.

"We can send students over there," Stark said. "I want to do everything I can to help."

Cancer claims former professor

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Ann Kammer, former K-State professor of biology, died of cancer at her residence on Aug. 28, 1993, in Tempe, Ariz., at age 57.

She was born in Auburn, N.Y., and graduated from the New York State College for Teachers in Albany. She received her master's degree from the University of New Hampshire and a doctorate from the University of California.

She became a member of the K-State faculty in 1973 and was promoted to full professor in 1984.

Kammer also received several grants from the National Science Foundation and the National Institute of Neurology and Communicative Disorders and Stroke during her tenure at K-State.

"She was instrumental in getting students to enrich their interests in neurobiology, a significant area of scientific research," Weis said. "She was a good academic scientist."

Gary Conrad, professor of biology, said Kammer's expertise was in electrophysiology.

"We collaborated on a research project in the 1970s," Conrad said. "She was an ideal colleague and great scientist. She was stimulating, innovative, and interesting — always curious about the next hypothesis.

"She did many things outside of this building to make the University and community aware of the importance of professional women. I will miss her."

Survivors include Judy A. Akers of Tempe; a brother, Paul A. Kammer of Switzerland; and two nephews.

Contributions may be sent to the Marine Biological Laboratory, Woods Hole, MA 02543.

Religious leaders decide on ethic standards

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Thou shalt not kill, abuse the environment, discriminate against women or forget the poor.

In an historic attempt to find common values among the world's religions, leaders of Christianity, Buddhism, Islam, Judaism, Hinduism and other faiths have drawn up a Global Ethic setting out basic ethical standards.

"We commit ourselves to a culture of nonviolence, respect, justice and peace. We shall not oppress, injure, torture or kill other human beings, forsaking violence as a means of settling differences," said the statement signed by 20 presidents of the 1993 Parliament of World's Religions.

Signers range from the Dalai Lama, leader of Tibetan Buddhism, to the Rev. Wesley Ariarajah, deputy general secretary of the World Council of Churches, which represents most major Protestant denominations.

The document goes before a larger assembly of more than 200 spiritual leaders for their consideration beginning Thursday. They will be asked to sign it, but no other changes may be made, parliament officials said.

A list of the major signers will be released at a ceremony Saturday.

The statement said a common set of core values is found in the teachings of religion and expresses hope "that the ancient wisdom of our religions can point the way for the future."

But the religious leaders reserve their harshest criticism for the sins of their own faiths in a world where up to two-thirds of armed conflicts are fought in the name of religion.

"Time and again we see leaders and members of religions incite aggression, fanaticism, hate and xenophobia — even inspire and legitimize violent and bloody conflicts. We are filled with disgust," the statement said.

FULBRIGHT SCHOLARSHIPS
for the 1994-1995 academic year

More than 600 awards providing round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year abroad.

In addition to graduate students, seniors are also eligible. Selection is based upon grades, recommendations, and a plan of study that underscores the need to study abroad. In all cases an applicant must have a particular country in mind, as well as suggest a particular school, institute, or research center where he or she would like to study. While the competition for these awards is rigorous, 23 K-Staters became Fulbrighters during the past decade. For further details and application forms, contact Walter Kolonosky, Chairperson, Fulbright Scholarship Committee, Eisenhower Hall 23. Office Hours Tuesday and Thursday 9:30, or call 532-6760.

To get one of these cards, students must be prepared to answer this multiple choice question.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. Dear Cassandra,

I have a problem. I am going out with this guy. He's good looking, but above all he's nice, and he treats me good.

The big problem is this, I'm not in love with him and further more, I'm not really attracted to him any longer.

Before we met, I was kind of seeing this guy, but he would never let us get serious. The problem with that is he couldn't make up his mind.

We've kept in touch while I've been going out with my boyfriend, but things have fizzled out for me in this relationship.

I don't know how to break it off with my boyfriend so he won't get hurt. I know he still loves me. Plus, there's no guarantee the guy I'm in love with wants a serious relationship. What do I do?

Signed,
Hopelessly in love with the other guy

Dear Hopelessly,

Whoa! One thing at a time, girl.

The first thing you need to do is examine your relationship with your current boyfriend. And make sure you examine it separately from anyone else.

If you're not in love with him and don't feel attracted to him any more, then talk to him. Explain to him that your feelings have changed, but try to emphasize to him you want to maintain your friendship.

Then you can deal with this other guy. Of course there aren't any guarantees he wants a serious relationship. But that's OK! Surely you don't need a boyfriend all the time.

Just hang out. Have fun. And develop a really great friendship. Whatever happens after that is like cool whip on your pie. It makes it taste that much sweeter.

Cassandra

Pep rally promotes purple pride

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Eat 'em up, eat 'em up— K-S-U!

To help welcome back students and kick off the 1993 football season, a giant, all-weekend pep rally will begin today at 5 p.m.

Power Play on Poyntz, a tradition that began as the Purple Pride Party in 1986, will take place between Third and Fourth streets in downtown Manhattan.

"It will be a lot like Midnight Madness with special things being planned," Scott Morrill, director of Manhattan Main Street, said.

This year, a total of 75 individuals and organizations have raised more than $44,000 to have the community festival.

Morrill said the event will let folks enjoy themselves.

"It will be nice for a community party," he said.

Besides food vendors and games, live entertainment will begin Power Play on Poyntz and is scheduled to run until 8:30 p.m.

Performers appearing at the event will include magician Rex Getz, gospel singer Anna Buckland, Brother Jeb Bolan, the Manhattan Pops Choir, contemporary country-and-western singers Double Exposure, the K-State Theatre Group and a cappella singers Streetside.

Angie Johnson, assistant director of marketing for Intercollegiate Athletics, said other guests will address the crowd at 8:30 p.m.

Scheduled to appear are K-State Athletic Director Max Urick, football coach Bill Snyder, the 1993 Football Captains, Willie the Wildcat, Mitch Holthus, the K-State Marching Band and the K-State Cheerleaders.

Tonight's Power Play on Poyntz will also feature K-State merchandise and tickets, football video highlights and the traditional money toss.

Free tutoring assistance allows students to acquire confidence

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Tutoring assistance is available for a variety of classes this semester from the Tutoring Center, located in Leasure 201.

Cassandra Nicholson, graduate student in student counseling and personnel services, and Aaron Lorenzen, graduate student in history, are the coordinators for the center this semester.

"Some departments, like athletics and the center in Holton Hall, have tutoring programs, but they have certain requirements for students," Nicholson said. "We are a campus-wide program open to everyone who attends the University."

Nicholson, a part of the tutoring program since 1989, said the program is a student-run operation sponsored by Academic Assistance and funded through the Equal Opportunity Fund.

"The program is a free service to the students. It is actually paid for through student fees," she said. "I urge everyone to come in and use it, even freshmen. At the first sign of trouble, get help. We have had too many people come to get help with a class the second time."

Courses that offer tutoring include technical courses in math, history and anthropology.

"We have the usual courses like math and physics, but we also have had sessions for courses like Russian and German," Nicholson said. "If several students want a particular course, we will try to find them a tutor if we don't have one."

To become a tutor, a student must apply for the position and meet several general requirements. A prospective tutor must have good communication skills, a 3.0 cumulative grade point average, have received an A or B in the classes they want to tutor and be enrolled in the University at least part time.

"We have room for 40 tutors in the program, and right now we have about 30 on staff," Nicholson said. "If they meet the requirements, we then look at where the most help is needed and hire based on that."

Brian Tesene, senior in mechanical engineering, is one of the tutors on staff.

"This is my third semester working as a tutor," Tesene said. "I tutor several sessions a week in calculus and physics."

Nicholson said the program tries to make the students feel comfortable with the subject and become independent.

"We don't want the students to be intimidated. We try to get them to be confident about the material so they don't have to rely on tutors for help," Nicholson said.

"I try to field the questions as best as I can," Tesene said. "In physics, I try to use analogies to relate the material to something the student might understand."

Shawn Klingele, junior in civil engineering, said the tutoring services are good for technical classes.

"I used the program for Engineering Physics 1 and 2 as well as Calculus 2," Klingele said. "It helped a lot with the homework and for preparing for tests.

THE TUTOR TRAIL

Students needing assistance should go to the Tutoring Center in Leasure 201 and fill out an application for tutoring. Office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday-Friday.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

and you can hire somebody to kill somebody else for five dollars. So the price of life and one cigarette is about the same," Elma said.

With food and water scarce to find, Elma's 15-year-old cousin must often walk six blocks to the nearest pipe and stand in line for 12 to 15 hours to get his family's water, she said.

"It's really hard for me to sit and picture everything that's going on there. As I remember, everything was beautiful and peaceful. The people who are doing these things are the same people who used to be so nice and friendly. It could be your next door neighbor.

"The war won't be over for a long time, unless America steps in and kills everyone," Elma said.

Elma said she enjoys Manhattan and feels lucky to be at K- State, but one day she may be confronted with the decision of whether to stay here or return to Sarajevo.

"I'd go back there right now if I could. Here I have my future, my education, a place to live and a luxurious life. People here are nice. I get anything I want," Elma said.

"Over there, all I have is my family, my country and someplace to call home. It's tough to decide, but I'd choose home," she said.

The only way Elma is capable of attending college is through financial aid.

She will be considered an out-of-state student until next semester.

Elma is trying to arrange for her sister to come to Manhattan and live with another family next year.

Then the two sisters will be able to see each other more often.

"I don't have a car, so I only get to see her about once every one or two months," Elma said.

"Lejla is a freshman in high school, so she'll stay. Next year we'll see about her coming here.

"Right now, all I have is my sister."

Emily forces evacuation in N.C.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANTEO, N.C. — Hurricane Emily blew away roofs and swamped the Outer Banks on Tuesday. It slowly brushed by the fragile island chain, pounding the sandy shoreline with 15-foot waves during a full-moon high tide.

But the hurricane's eye, with 115 mph wind swirling around it, stayed just offshore. Forecasters said it likely would be the storm's closest encounter with the U.S. mainland, though hurricane conditions were expected overnight in southeastern Virginia.

"The house is shaking terribly from the wind and waves. Water is pouring in everywhere, from cracks in the doors and windows and from the roof," Irene Nolan said from her home in the tiny seaside village of Frisco, where she rode out the storm.

"Everything under the house is floating down the street with the current," she said.

Many buildings along Ocracoke and Hatteras islands lost their roofs as wind gusts topped 90 mph, said Dare County emergency management officials, who abandoned their operations center on Hatteras because of flooding.

Cars were floating in a bank parking lot in Buxton, and fallen trees were blocking roads, said the National Weather Service in Buxton.

The extent of the damage wouldn't be known before morning. "It's too dark to say. There's no power down there. But at the crack of dawn, we'll be down there," Dare County spokesperson Ray Sturza said.

The center of the hurricane got as close as about 20 miles due east of Cape Hatteras late Tuesday afternoon, and the eye wall — the region of strongest wind around the calm eye — moved over Hatteras Island, said Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center.

No part of the eye crossed land, however. The eye had grown to 45 miles wide Tuesday evening and was 35 to 40 miles due east of Oregon Inlet at 10 p.m.

The slow-moving hurricane was passing as an exceptionally high full-moon tide peaked at about 8 p.m. It was expected to create a tidal surge six to eight feet high, though the weather service said flooding reports on Hatteras indicated the surge was even higher.

The storm also was forecast to dump four to eight inches of rain in its path.

Yeltsin ousts supporters amidst corruption probe

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin suspended Vice President Alexander Rutskoi and deputy prime minister Vladimir Shumeiko Wednesday, saying the allegations of corruption against both of them were damaging the government.

Rutskoi, once a Yeltsin ally, has become one of the president's leading rivals and critics. Shumeiko is among Yeltsin's closest aides and is a staunch proponent of the president's market reforms.

Corruption allegations on both sides have intensified the power struggle between Yeltsin's reformists and the hard-liners who dominate the Russian legislature.

The suspensions were temporary and would depend on the outcome of investigations into the allegations, Yeltsin's office said.

An aide to Rutskoi challenged the validity of the decree. But Shumeiko had asked Yeltsin to relieve him of his duties temporarily, said Shumeiko's spokesman, Grigory Bukhvalov.

"Even at first glance, there are no constitutional grounds for making such a decision," Nikolai Kosov, Rutskoi's aide, said.

Yeltsin spokesman Anatoly Krasikov defended the decision and said the suspensions were legal.

"Since the suspension of Rutskoi's duties is temporary, questions of unconstitutionality don't arise," he said.

A presidential corruption commission charged two weeks ago that Rutskoi had funneled money into a secret Swiss bank account.

Rutskoi has denied the charges and said they are retribution for his role in uncovering corruption among members of Yeltsin's administration, including Shumeiko.

In turn, Shumeiko has filed a libel suit against Rutskoi.

The power struggle between Yeltsin's reformists and parliament has hindered much of the country's attempts to recover from economic disaster in the 21 months since the Soviet Union disintegrated.

Yeltsin's chief of staff, Sergei Filatov, said Tuesday the president would try to circumvent the Congress of People's Deputies by creating a new legislative body next week.

Tom McRae, Junction City resident, argues a point during a forum held in the Junction City High School auditorium Thursday evening about Wednesday's shooting.

Residents discuss high school security

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Parents and administrators discussed possiblities to secure Junction City High School from guns and gang related violence during an emotionally charged forum last night.

The problem the school faces is no different than many other large metropolitan schools. The building is very large. Students out number teachers , administrators, and other school officials by a large ratio.

"I don't believe it is physically possible to secure this building," Greg Springston, principle of Junction City High School, said.

Weapons are easily disguised and can be concealed in bookbags and coats said one student.

Parents said metal detectors would solve the problem. Administrators said that would help, but not solve the problem.

"I have this picture of a metal detector being used at a school. The kids are in a long line waiting to get in the building. In the background you can see one kid handing a gun through the window to another student. The kids will always find a way to get a gun in the school," Bob Hertzel, director of the Fort Riley Counciling Center, said.

Chris Biggs said the issue is being addressed from the wrong direction. He said the kids are getting away with violent acts because the parents are not being held responsible.

"There needs to be changes. There is an idea we can solve this

Panel studies preventing violence

BOB FLEENER

Emotions ran high last night when parents, students, administrators, local government officials and concerned citizens crowded into Junction City High School to speak about Wednesday's shooting of a student.

JCHS student Shannon Ingle, 14, remains in critical condition at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center, but is said to be improving.

A bullet fired at another student during a fight in the school lunchroom struck Ingle.

An unidentified 15-year-old boy, also a student of JCHS, is being detained in connection with the shooting. He was apprehended by school officials after fleeing the school grounds.

A semi-automatic pistol was found in the area where he was apprehended.

JCHS Principal Greg Springston spoke of the fear and the anger experienced Wednesday.

"I looked into the eyes of those parents last night," Springston said. "I never want to see that again."

The panel of counselors, city officials, and school administrators listened as people vented their frustrations and offered ideas on how to prevent future violence in the school.

"There is no question that this and other schools are experiencing gang intimidation," Springston said."These students want to take the school back, and so do we."

Many people said using metal detectors would prevent students from bringing guns and knives into the school. Others suggested having random locker, coat and book bag searches.

Chris Biggs, Geary County attorney, said he believes the students don't take the law or the school administration seriously.

"Students have learned to get around the system," he said. "They know crime pays. They know the worst that can happen to you is to be sent to a youth center."

Biggs said he believes parents need to be more responsible for the actions of their children. The only reponsiblity that parents have is a curfew law, he said.

Senate OK's secretary

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Student Senate allocated $1,440 Thursday night for the Office of Student Activities and Services to hire a student secretary.

Todd Lakin, senior in engineering, and Trent LeDoux, sophomore in animal science and industry and intern coordinator, said they opposed the bill, which passed by roll-call vote 30-27.

Lakin and LeDoux said the senators, interns, and executives should step in and help fill the the need, instead of spending the money.

Sarah Caldwell, senior in English andarts and sciences senator, wrote the bill.

"This is something that is worthy," Caldwell said.

The student secretary will assist the student body president and his or her cabinet, the student body vice president, Student Senate, Finance Committee University Activities and Consumer Relations boards.

A proposed amendment to the bill was made by Clayton Wheeler, business administration senator, to give preferential treatment to work-study applicants. This would save $740.

Yugoslavian student sees tragedy in homeland war

Refugees flock to Belgrade, tourists visit

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

"Nonsense!"

That is what Lydia Halda Alija, graduate student in agronomy, calls the war in her home country, the former Yugoslavia.

Halda Alija is a new arrival at K-State. She has only been in the United States for a few days and spent last week visiting her parents in her hometown, Belgrade.

"It is such a tragedy," Halda Alija said. "People are suffering so much, and it's all for nothing."

Halda Alija said she sees no reason why the warring ethnic groups cannot co-exist peacefully.

"We have all been told the cause of this war is the historical animosities among the ethnic groups, but that is nonsense," she said.

It is her opinion that very few people in the former Yugoslavia have an ethnically pure background.

"I'm half Serbian, and my husband is half Muslim and half Croatian, so we have all three groups in our family," she said.

Government propaganda and the news media are to blame for fanning the flames of ethnic hatreds, Halda Alija said.

The ethnic groups co-existed peacefully for decades under the previous government, and there is no reason they cannot now, she said.

While Halda Alija's hometown, Belgrade, has not been the site of any fighting, there is still some tension.

"People are so nationalistic now," she said. "The atmosphere has changed completely."

Many other things have changed in the Belgrade area. The nearby war has caused high inflation and other economic problems, she said.

The most visible change is the refugees that have flocked to Belgrade.

"The town is covered with refugees," she said. "Driving around town you can see many people without legs, without arms or hands. It is really sad."

Other parts of the country are relatively unaffected by the war, however. Tourists from many countries still come for recreation at the resorts, Halda Alija said.

Sobriety checkpoints set for Friday

If you are having a tough time keeping the auto between the yellow lines Friday evening, it may be a good idea to stay away from Bluemont Avenue east of Juliette Avenue.

Riley County Police Department officers will be conducting sobriety checkpoints along that route after nightfall.

The route was specifically chosen by the RCPD because of the large amount of alcohol-related incidents and the number of drunk drivers caught by police in that area.

Extradition hearing date set for Dunn

TOPEKA — A judge has scheduled a hearing on Lisa Dunn's effort to have the federal courts block her extradition to Arkansas to face a capital murder charge.

U.S. District Court Judge Dale Saffels set 9 a.m., Oct. 1, as the time to hear arguments on an appeal Dunn's attorney, Ben Wood, took into federal court after state courts denied her bid to escape extradition to Arkansas.

The Kansas Court of Appeals denied Dunn's motion to block extradition, saying an extradition hearing is not a proper forum to determine her guilt or innocence on the Arkansas charge.

Giant mushroom not stored; eaten instead

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — A 40-pound mushroom that was going to be dried and stored at Purdue University as an educational specimen was instead sauteed in butter and eaten by three scientists.

The mushroom, 26 inches across, was too big to fit in a special dryer used by the Arthur Herbarium, home of Purdue's plant and fungi collection.

"It's edible, you know, so there were three professors up here, and they decided to divide it up and eat it," Joe Hennen, a professor of botany, said.

The polyporus frondous — or a hen-of-the-woods — grew in the roots of a fallen maple tree all summer in Virginia Emerick's backyard in West Point.

She carefully mowed around it and finally decided to harvest the mushroom last week after extreme heat and humidity caused a growth spurt.

Hennen said polyporus frondous tastes like common gill mushrooms available in grocery stores but is more earthy.

Black citizen moves, shot during robbery

BEAUMONT, Texas — William Simpson was the last black person to move from now all-white Vidor. He said he had enough of racist taunts, obscene gestures and threats of lynching.

He headed for Beaumont. Hours after arriving, he was gunned down, an apparent victim of random street crime.

The 7-foot, 300-pound Simpson, described by friends as a taciturn gentle giant, was slain Wednesday night by suspected gang members who demanded money, authorities said.

Simpson, 37, was walking with Lydia Washington when four men drove up and confronted them, police said. He tried to flee and was shot five or six times. He died a short time later at a hospital. Washington was shot in the leg and hospitalized in stable condition.

Washington, reached by telephone, said she doubted the shooting was related to Simpson's moving in and out of nearby Vidor. The assailants were black, she said.

Unopened boxes of Simpson's belongings were strewn about the house Thursday. His hat was where he had left it — on the bed he never slept in.

"He kept saying he was home and he was happy and he was content"

Fund established in exchange for egg

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Government officials struck a deal Thursday with three children who found a foot-long fossilized egg, which they hid after being barred from selling it to a foreign collector for $102,000.

Jamie Andrich, 9, and two cousins gave officials the egg after Western Australia state government promised to set up a fund to raise up to $109,000 for the children's education.

The money is to be raised from donations solicited at the Western Australia state museum, where the 2,000-year-old egg will be displayed.

Jamie and his cousins — Kelly, 8, and Michelle Rew, 6 — found the egg in a sand dune while on vacation in January at Cervantes, about 155 miles north of Perth.

But state government officials barred any sale, saying the egg was public property because it was found on state-owned land.

The egg is believed to be from the extinct elephant bird, a flightless creature that lived in Madagascar until about 400 years ago. Scientists theorize the egg was washed out to sea and floated across the Indian Ocean to Australia.

No U.S. POWs held against will in Russia

MOSCOW — No American prisoners of war are still living against their will in the former Soviet Union, a U.S.-Russian commission said.

The commission has been looking into the fate of the thousands of American servicemen still unaccounted for from World War II and the Korean and Vietnam wars. It has never held out much hope of finding prisoners of war still alive.

The Russian co-chairman, Gen. Dmitry Volkogonov, a military historian and an adviser to President Boris Yeltsin, said more than 22,000 Americans were held on Soviet territory during World War II. The overwhelming majority returned home and nearly all the rest died in prison camps, he said.

Some U.S.-born ethnic Slavs with U.S. passports were forced to become Soviet citizens when the Soviet Union seized territory before and during World War II, Volkogonov said.

He said such people, now living in Russia, Ukraine, Belarus and the Baltic states, were elderly and did not wish to leave.

Salvation Army removes drop boxes

CHICAGO (AP) — The Salvation Army has removed its drop boxes from cities in eight Midwestern states.

People have been dumping everything from old tires to Freon-filled appliances, and it's getting too expensive to get rid of the junk, said Lt. Col. Marcus Stilwell, commander of the Salvation Army's adult rehabilitation centers in the Midwest.

Stilwell ordered the removal of 450 boxes from cities in Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska and Wisconsin by Aug. 23.

Instead, the Salvation Army is expanding its home pickup service and setting up manned drop-off sites in parking lots.

SGB office has new, more inviting name

Office wants all students to know they are welcome

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

What used to be the Student Government Services Office on the ground floor of the K-State Union has been renamed the Office of Student Activities and Services.

"The first reason we changed the name was to make it more encompassing," Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said.

"I think the old name gave off a perception of a closed office," she said.

Those involved with student government want the office to be a place where all students feel welcome, Nolfi said.

"Eventually I'd like to see a situation where students involved with organizations can have access to workstations with computers and phones in this office," she said.

In addition to the new office name, Nolfi's responsibilities have been redefined.

"The functions of this office have changed because the position of coordinator has expanded," Nolfi said. "Past coordinators did more technical things, which are now being handled by the secretaries."

This gives the coordinator more time to serve as a direct contact and resource to all campus organizations and advisers, she said.

Nolfi said she believes the name change will demonstrate the function of the office as a centralized, unified network of communications, resources and information.

"This is an office where anyone can come for information on activities, leadership opportunities, greek affairs, international programs, residence halls and community-service programs," Nolfi said. "I will serve as a support in these areas."

Nolfi said when she came to K-State to interview for the coordinator position, she spoke with students who felt the office was inaccessible to them.

"Several of them didn't know they have access to the lawyer and the consumer-relations board here in this office," she said. "And others were not familiar with any of the services available to them."

Felicia McKoy, sophomore in computer science, said she was not aware of the services provided by the office.

"I've been there once to vote and a couple times to visit a friend, but I'm not familiar with what they do," McKoy said.

Nolfi said she feels the office will continue to evolve with students' needs.

"I think the name is more reflective of what the office has become. Over the years, it's evolved to where it now serves several organizations, and that is to student government's credit," Bosco said.

CAMPUS

Excused classes to come from dean

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

Whether your excuse for missing class is valid lies within the hands of your instructor.

There is no University-wide policy that excuses students for medical purposes. As stated in the faculty handbook (F62), class attendance policies are determined by the instructor of each course.

The Office of the Dean of Student Life and the academic deans' offices have formed a partnership to assist students who need to miss classes for serious illness or emergencies.

The Academic Procedures Committee has endorsed a policy for student-absence notification. This policy sets guidelines for non-emergency and emergency situations.

In a non-emergency situation, the student is responsible for contacting instructors of absences.

In emergency situations, the student is responsible to contact either the appropriate academic dean's office, or the dean of student life office. Each dean can interpret this policy and adapt it to that college.

"If the student is going to miss one to five days of class, they do the notifications to the instructors. If it is more than a week, we help them," said Bill Feyerharm, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

If the student life office is contacted, it will write a notification letter to a student's particular dean informing him or her of an absence. The student is not automatically excused upon arrival of this letter. The decision is still made by the student's dean.

"We notify faculty when students are going to miss class for a certain period of time," Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said.

The student life office does more than communicate with academic deans. If an emergency arises and a student needs to leave campus immediately, someone in the office is on call at all times.

"We are a service to students in the time of stress, by helping them notify faculty, employees and even housing authorities," Scott said.

"It makes me mad when I hear of a student who just leaves the University without contacting us when a major crisis occurs," she said. "There are many things that can be done. We are also here to help students ease back into academic life."

EDITORIAL

Response given to contract call

Editor's Note: This is the response the Collegian received from Jennifer Kassebaum, assistant University attorney, in regard to its open-records request for Bill Snyder's contract.

This letter is in response to your editorial of August 30, 1993, in which you request information under the Kansas Open Records Act. As the designated official custodian of records for requests made under the Act, I have been asked to reply to your letter as it appeared on the opinion page of the Kansas State Collegian.

In your editorial, you request a copy of a contract of Kansas State University's football coach, Bill Snyder. Although you have cited the Kansas Open Records Act as a basis for your request, the Act specifically provides that a public agency shall not be required to disclose — personnel records, performance ratings, or individually identifiable records pertaining to employees or applicants for employment except that this exemption shall not apply to the names, positions, salaries and lengths of service of officers and employees of public agencies once they are employed as such. K.S.A. 1992 Supp. 45-221 (a) (4).

The contract you are requesting is a personnel record which is not required to be disclosed under the Act.

This reply is consistent with the University's response provided for similar requests for employment contracts. In accordance with Kansas law, we are providing the following information in response to your request: Bill Snyder is the men's head football coach. His initial employment date was November 30, 1988. His current fiscal year 1994 annual base salary is $126,500.

Your request is appreciated. If you have any questions concerning this response as it relates to the Kansas Open Records Act, please contact me.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Kassebaum
Assistant University Attorney

The educational stuggle continues

THERE IS JUST NO SUBSTITUTE FOR A CONSISTANT, RELIABLE SOURCE OF FUNDING.

Being a member of the Collegian staff, I have the opportunity to read news stories as they come over the Associated Press wire service. The stories are separated into different categories, such as entertainment and sports, weather and Washington. My favorite, though, is general news, which encompasses most the news people read on the front page of any newspaper or see on TV broadcasts.

Further, being an education major, I am always on the lookout for stories concerning the plight of schools in this nation. Always being an issue of considerable debate and discussion, there usually appears a few stories each week written from different perspectives.

And what I have read this week has only made me wonder if things have improved at all for us in the past 10 years.

I use this figure of time because it was in 1983 that a special commission on education issued the report, "A Nation at Risk." In this landmark document, it was stated that America, through the failure of an archaic school system and poor teaching, is suffering from "... a rising tide of mediocrity." Students were doing poorer on standardized testing; necessary skills such as inferring content from materials and mathematical skills were declining, and parents took a much less active role in their children's education than in days gone by.

What made this document so extraordinary was the fact it offered a detailed list of steps to reverse this deplorable trend. The call was put out for more emphasis on sciences and mathematics, increased budgeting and for students to prove their academic abilities before moving on to higher grade levels. There were many other recommendations, each one that could earn a definite spot in any school curriculum.

But now, I question whether definitive, nationwide progress has been made. Yes, there have been instances of dramatic achievement, and I firmly believe the Kansas Quality Performance Assessment will be one of them. But I am speaking about the larger school systems, such as those in Oregon and Illinois, Virginia and Colorado, Pennsylvania and New York.

JARED SAVAGE
OP/ED EDITOR

This Wednesday, school will begin for 411,000 Chicago-area students. But for the fifth time in 10 years, Chicago schools face closure due to unbalanced budgets and teachers walking out from expired contracts. Chicago mayor Richard M. Daley proposed garnering $300 million in union concessions to balance the budget.

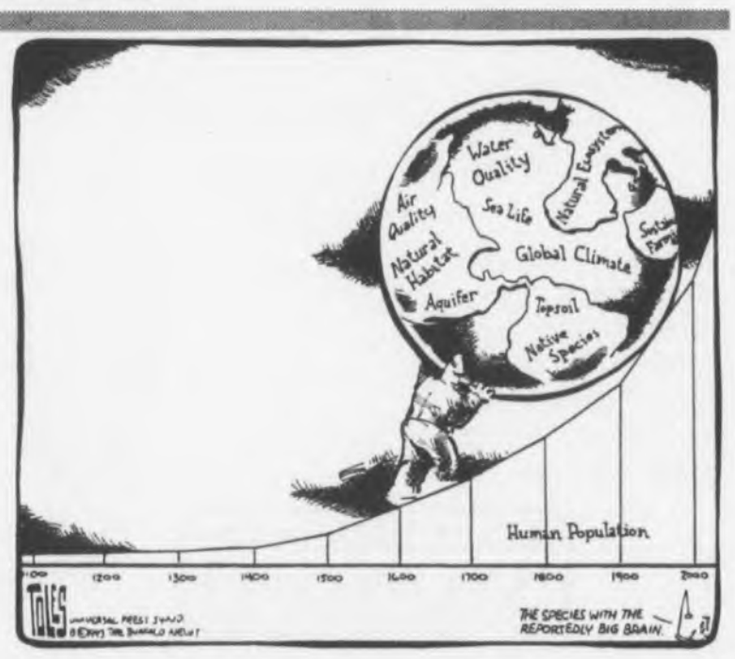
But like anything, it is a short-term solution to a large problem. As Joan Jeter Slay, associate director of an education advocacy organization said, "There is just no substitute for a consistent, reliable source of funding."

In New York, voters rejected nearly 29 percent of the budgets offered by school boards this year. This means tightening purse strings more than anyone had anticipated.

In our neighboring Colorado, 176 school districts will receive about 4 percent less per student than last year. This comes out to be about $158 per student.

West Virginia will lose $13 million of its budget this year because of cuts made by the governor.

In Philadelphia, a $60 million shortage will mean the elimination of all junior varsity sports teams and half of the varsity teams.



In Oregon, the basic school support package is $500 million less than what local officials said they need to maintain programs at current levels, allowing for growth and inflation.

What does this all mean? It means schools across the nation will continue to be cramped, with oversized classrooms tapping limited resources. Teachers salaries will probably not keep up with inflation, as there is no money for raises. The price of tuition will go up, causing enrollment to go down. It's a vicious little circle.

Throwing money at the problem will not solve it. But cutting budgets is not the answer, either. These are very real problems for all of us because they will most likely continue to get worse. And it will be our children who will suffer the consequences.

It's time for all of America to see the problem for what it is — a disease. Until we do so, the "rising tide of mediocrity" will certainly become a tidal wave.

Lack of reason, humanity is killing doctors

Columnist finds little logic in the abortion issue

I swore I wouldn't write about the abortion issue. I thought I had nothing new to add.

That is, I wouldn't write about it unless someone did something really stupid.

I should have known. I should have known that, in this debate, stupidity and ignorance seem to walk hand-in-hand.

Then, like a beacon in the night, there it was.

Rachelle Renae Shannon shot Dr. George Tiller, and some people actually said it was justified.

I just can't leave that alone.

No matter how you feel about the abortion issue, it remains reprehensible when a Roman Catholic "priest" calls the murder of doctors "justifiable homicide."

Religious zealotry has no place in this society. Especially when that religion is shrouded in hatred. Let's face it– religion isn't exactly based in reason, and reason isn't based in religion.

When people outside the clinics and the courthouses get on their knees and pray, I always have to wonder just who they're trying to reach. It seems to me they aren't exactly talking to God when they shout things like "baby killer" and "murderer" at people.

While all this remains a bit off, in my mind, we do have this thing called the Constitution that guarantees the inalienable right to make an ass out of yourself in a public place. If these people want to scream quotes from the Bible, then I say let them.

But when they start shooting people and say they're doing it in the name of God, I say it's time to call out the people with the white coats.

All through history, people have been doing things because "God" told them to. The crusades, the inquisitions, the witch trials ... and now killing or maiming doctors.

And these groups justify their actions by claiming a higher moral purpose and say they will end abortion by any means.

By any means. How so very Machiavellian.

By any means except ending rape, incest, unwanted pregnancy poverty.

What the pro-life extremists fail to realize in their blinding mission is that abortion is a symptom of a larger disease. A disease that keeps growing and mutating. A disease that has become part of our society. To end abortion, we must first cure the disease.

LOLA SHRIMLIN

And shooting doctors certainly does nothing to end the disease of violence that plagues our society.

The various groups "exposing" and harassing doctors, their families and the patients who go to the clinics are doing nothing more grand than committing acts of terrorism and the crime of stalking.

My personal "Ignorance as a Way of Life" award for the week goes to the pro-choice leader who said that it might be a good thing for all doctors to wonder if there were people with guns outside every clinic.

Yee haw! Let's saddle up and ride to Dodge, boys and girls. Matt Dillon's outta town, and Boot Hill is ours!

That is by far one of the most stupid things I have heard in a long time. For a "pro-life" leader to advocate killing ranks up there with Senator Dole saying the American people want gridlock. It's one of those things you can't believe someone said.

People have the right to protest laws they think unfair. They have the right to stand outside clinics and carry signs. They even have the right to buy as many guns as they want.

They do not, however, have the right to terrorize, threaten, shoot or stalk the doctors, patients or families that go to these clinics. When people begin to advocate shooting or terrorizing other people, there is something seriously wrong somewhere.

And all they are doing is adding symptoms to the disease.

Time to buck smoke screen and make K-State the trend

Editor,

Re-authorizing tobacco is pivotal in returning a student-run atmosphere to our beloved K-State Union. A glassed-in, well-ventilated area, financed by tobacco sales, would be a solid compromise between the privilege of smokers and the rights of non-smokers.

A change in tobacco policy, however, is just one small pivot toward advancement of the Union. I agree with Jan Wolff's letter in the Sept. 1 Collegian that new services ought to be addressed to the Union, included but by no means limited to a barber shop and dirt-cheap laundry services, and maybe even a gasoline co-op. SGA, UGB and the Union staff are working together, and have for years, to make the Union a center for student life.

I remain troubled. This is a big-thinking year. A year for thinking hugely. In such times, you have to stay away from nervously worrying about what toys KU (To think Ms. Wolff would have us follow their lead. We'd have hippies all over the darn place.) or other universities are playing around with Ms. Wolff's letter warns us that to re-authorize smoking would be to buck the national anti-smoking trend. Get ready, Ms. Wolff. It's time for K-State to become the trend all over the place.

Scriptual infidelity is The Way for Phelps and his little posse

Editor,

So, Fred Phelps has a problem with sexual promiscuity? What is promiscuity? Unfaithfulness. Carelessness. What about overpopulation of the earth, Fred? Isn't that unfaithfulness to its Creator, and careless? And what about unfaithfulness to scripture, the careless disregard for its literary forms and context, for its humanity? This latter form of promiscuity, scriptural promiscuity, has caused far greater death and destruction than any other on earth.

Smurthwaite hires new director

New York native likes slower pace found in Midwest

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Manhattan doesn't have galleria malls.

Manhattan doesn't have the frenetic pace of New York, nor does Manhattan have the crowds of a metropolis.

However, what Manhattan does offer appeals to one of its newest residents, Amy Goi said.

Goi is the new house director at Smurthwaite House. She has found a job, a chance to complete her education and a fresh way of life in Manhattan.

"I've gotten a new outlook since I've been here," Goi said. "In New York, you feel like you're on the verge of a heart attack every minute. It's not as intense here, and I like that a lot."

A native of Buffalo, New York, Goi graduated with a bachelor's degree in psychology from the State University of New York at Plattsburgh in 1990.

During the past three years, she has worked as a residence hall director in Plattsburgh and at the State University of New York at Binghamton.

This March, she applied to master's programs at four colleges. She was accepted to the State University of New York in Buffalo and K-State. Goi opted for K-State because she said she wanted to try something different.

"I wanted a change. I guess you could say I'm an adventurous kind of person, and that's what brought me here. I'd never been to the Midwest before," Goi said.

Goi said she received a lot of good-natured ribbing about her move to Kansas.

"People started calling me Dorothy before I left," she said. "They told me I should get a dog and name it Toto. Others wanted to know when I found the yellow brick road."

Instead of the yellow brick road, Goi found a job suited to her experience — director of Smurthwaite, a women's scholarship house.

Her previous positions have been more of the traditional residence hall director type. She worked in dorms of 300-400 students with a staff of eight.

In the larger residence halls, directors need to take a more disciplinary role, she said.

Smurthwaite's case is a little different. It's not only smaller, but the leadership house is built on the idea of self-reliant women.

Goi said she plans to assume more of an advisory role.

"Smurthwaite is a women's leadership house," she said. "My role is to help the residents develop as women and leaders. I'll encourage them to make their own decisions. I might make suggestions, but I won't lecture, saying this is wrong and this is right. They aren't children — they're women."

One of the keys to becoming a successful director, she said, is the ability to work well with the residents.

"I want to develop strong relationships with each of the women. I'd like them to feel like they can come talk to me about anything," Goi said.

"It's very important for them to trust me. I'll be their director and a friend, too. But, when I put my foot down, they'll understand."

Her approach appears to be working. Residents of Smurthwaite are pleased with how things are going.

Meg Stueve, sophomore in speech pathology, spoke highly of Goi.

"It's going to be great," she said. "I really like her. She has a good attitude and is keeping morale in the house up."

Another resident, Christina Muth, senior in math, said she agreed.

"The house could be good as a whole, but we need a good director to accomplish that, and Amy will be the one who does," she said. "I think with her leadership, we can all excel."

Smurthwaite's new member president, Terri Harris, freshman in Spanish and Latin studies, said people have responded well to Goi.

"She's added a lot of excitement and spurred people into being creative about the house's activities," Harris said.

With the help of these residents and others, Goi hopes to bring out the best of Smurthwaite.

"I'd like to help Smurthwaite reach its highest potential," Goi said. "There are so many special people here with so many different talents."

Scholarship house seeks recognition

Smurthwaite to implement new ideas

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

A coffee house, more leadership programs and increased public recognition are some of the goals the Smurthwaite House hopes to accomplish this year.

The Smurthwaite name has been virtually unrecognizable on campus in recent years.

House Director Amy Goi and Smurthwaite residents hope to change that.

"I've gotten the impression that the purpose of Smurthwaite had fallen by the wayside in recent years," Goi said. "There are students on campus who don't know what Smurthwaite is. The women here have expressed what needs to be done. We're trying to figure out how to get back the tradition."

> "Smurthwaite is an incredible opportunity."
> AMY GOI
> SMURTHWAITE HOUSE DIRECTOR

One of the considerations is to establish a monthly program focusing on leadership and women's issues. Professors and other staff on campus would be asked to come and talk.

Smurthwaite's president, April Behrendt, sophomore in chemical engineering and pre-medicine, said the programs are a positive step.

"With the programs, we want to promote self-confidence in women. We also would like to establish more community-service programs. They would help in making the house known to the public," she said.

Their community service programs include a plan to participate in a golf tournament this spring. Proceeds from the tournament would go to Special Olympics.

Perhaps the biggest idea in the works is that of the coffee house at Smurthwaite. A night would be set up when students from all over campus could bring instruments or poetry for entertainment. Snacks and drinks would be served.

"People could bring in a guitar or a saxophone," Goi said. "Kind of an open mike night. It would be another alternative of something for people to do. We're thinking about having waiters and waitresses to offer hors d'oeuvres and non-alcoholic drinks."

The coffee house is tentatively set as a one-night deal. Should it prove successful, though, Goi said they would like to continue it on a weekly or monthly basis.

"Smurthwaite is an incredible opportunity," Goi said.

The world is equally shocked at hearing Christianity criticized and seeing it practiced.

"It is amazing that people are enjoying themselves on the beach, and only 200 or 300 kilometers away a war is going on," she said.

Achieving peace for the whole country will be difficult, Halda Alija said. An outside country or organization will have to be a neutral arbitrator to settle the conflict.

Military intervention will not be effective, she said.

"I am a pacifist," she said. "I believe that all conflicts can be settled without resorting to force."

Although deeply concerned about the war, Halda Alija said she is not letting it stop her from continuing with her life.

While in the United States, Halda Alija will continue her education in agriculture. She received her master's degree from the University of Belgrade, and for more than a year she was a visiting scientist at the University of Bayreuth in Germany.

In other business, Student Body President Ed Skoog, senior in English, informed Senate the Union Governing Board discussed the question of whether the K-State Union should be allowed to sell tobacco products.

LeDoux said the Union lost $50,000 in sales annually since the sell of tobacco items ceased.

Andrew Tomb resigned as senator in education. He assumed a position in the president's cabinet.

Eric Henry, student body vice president and graduate student in mass communications, said the computer upgrade for the SGA offices will be addressed at 7 p.m. Monday in the student activities and services' large conference room.

from the backside. The perception is I'm no longer responsible for my child. There needs to be changes from the front end of the system," Biggs said.

One parent in the audience said the changes to eliminate this violence were in the bureaucracy of the system. He said the lawmakers and the social rehabilitation service was the problem. That what needed to be done was to get SRS out of the police business. He felt that the kids knew that with SRS intervention the chances of really being punished for something would not happen.

Springston spoke about the various doors that were open for students. Other doors were fire doors not to be used for public entrance.

A parent questioned whether students could disarm the doors alarm system or if all the doors had alarms.

Springston replied that not all of the doors had alarms due to the budget.

Understanding Tourette's Syndrome

Moore students, staff try to educate students

CAMERON VO
Collegian

Forty K-State students learned about Tourette Syndrome Thursday night in Moore Hall.

The speaker of the meeting was Matt Locke, senior in secondary education. Locke was diagnosed with Tourette syndrome at age nine.

People with Tourette syndrome tend to have tics — involuntary movements or vocalizations — and may be afflicted with an obsessive-compulsive disorder.

Peter Iseman, senior in finance and staff assistant for Moore's third floor, helped set up the meeting.

Locke said one in 10,000 people have Tourette syndrome.

Iseman and Locke arranged the meeting for members of Moore Hall because one of the residents in the hall has Tourette syndrome, and he wanted other residents to know about the disorder.

"Tourette syndrome is a biochemical disorder which occurs in certain areas of the brain," Locke said.

He said this syndrome appears to be inherited.

People who have Tourette syndrome are normal people, Locke said.

"They are equal to the normal and the above-normal individual," he said.

"They can do everything that any other person in the world can do. It is a handicap, but it doesn't limit a person," he said.

HOW TO RECOGNIZE THE SIGNS OF TOURETTE SYNDROME

Tourette Syndrome is caused by a biochemical disorder which occurs in certain areas of the brain. Some common symptoms and behavioral disorders associated with Tourette Syndrome are listed below.

- Motor Tics: these are repetitve movement s like blinking, jerking or hopping.
- Vocal Tics: these consist of repetitve sounds or phrases. Obscenities as ticks are called "coprolalia."
- Obsessions: unpleasant thoughts, pictures and ideas that recur repeatedly.
- Compulsions: these are unusual actions or rituals done repeatedly, such as turning lights off and on.
- Other behavioral symptoms may include poor concentration, overactivity, impulsivity, echoing other's words or actions and obscene gestures.

Parents want problem kids out said she agreed.

"No one can change this problem but the parents," Price said. "It's their responsiblity to know where their kid is and what they are doing."

Angry parents in the back of the auditorium yelled the administration knew the names of the students who were causing the problems.

"Somewhere there is a filing cabinet system with the names of these kids that are causing all of these problems," one man screamed. "Get those names and get them out of here. I don't care if we need to chase and shoot every damn gang in town. Just do it."

Others applauded amid screams of "That's right," "Uh-Huh," "You said it" and "Amen."At that time people began to leave, fearing the forum might get out of hand.

Everyone wanted answers to the school's lack of security. The intention of the panel was not to give answers on how to solve the problem, but to respond to any questions presented.

"If we knew a simple way to solve this problem, we could make a lot of money selling it to schools in other cities," Springston said. "The truth is there is no easy answer."

"We are going to do this as a community," Springston said. "We can't do it anyother way."

JCHS had classes today with police in the parking lots and parents who acted as hall monitors.

"Today we had parents come and eat lunch with their kids in the cafateria. I welcome and encourage that," Springston said.

The meeting concluded with a group of high school students climbing onto the stage behind the panel of speakers. One girl spoke of the fear that gang members wishing to leave the gangs had.

Another girl spoke of the fear she had in coming to the school each day.

Bob Hertzel, director of the Fort Rily Counseling Center, introduced the speakers and directed audience questions.

"We anticipated a lot of anger tonight," Hertzel said. "Anger is a proper response to this sort of incident. You don't want to negate it. But, you want to channel it."

Hertzel said he expects more forums in the future. He also anticipates several task forces to be established.

Wildcats begin season against unfamiliar Aggies

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Football coach Bill Snyder is going to find out just how accurate he and his staff are at blind predictions.

When K-State and New Mexico State go head-to-head Saturday in the season opener, the Aggies will have taken on a completely different look.

"Carefully, that's the first word," Snyder said of how to prepare for a team that lost several skilled position players. "Particularly because you are playing a football team who you have not seen. They have new personalities, new characteristics, and you really don't know what you are going to see.

"When there are changes, you have to look at what can they do with the personnel they do have. A year ago, we knew what they could do, and we knew their personnel."

New Mexico State lost 31 lettermen from last year's squad, which went 6-5 for the first time in 14 seasons. The six wins in 1992 equaled the amount of wins in the previous five seasons combined.

An area hit especially hard was the passing game, which produced all-America tight end Todd Cutler and three wide receivers with over 1,000 career yards receiving. Along with their departures, the Aggies also lost Charles Puleri, who started all 11 games last year and set season records for completions and passing yards in a season.

Lawrence Truehill, the Aggies' leading rusher in 1992, is also gone, leaving several question marks for not only New Mexico State, but K-State as well.

"I don't know about the people that replaced them or what their strengths and weaknesses are," Snyder said. "I'm sure (New Mexico State coach) Jim Hess and his staff will attempt to play to what their strengths are and obviously try to circumvent the weaknesses.

"They know them better than we do, so that leaves some mystery and mystique to it, not knowing what to expect."

Hess said he isn't sure what to expect either.

"I don't think we're ready, but we need to play," said Hess, who is in his fourth year with New Mexico State. "For some reason I feel less ready than usual. Probably because of the number of unknown people we have. We haven't seen any of these people in game action. And you don't know the personality of your team until you see them in action. Right now, the state of our football team is a big unknown."

The Wildcats have won three consecutive season openers under Snyder and led the series with New Mexico State 2-0. The Cats routed the Aggies 52-7 in 1990 and posted a 19-0 win last season.

The Cats are riding a six-game home winning streak and are 15-2 at home over the past three seasons. A victory in Saturday's opener would give K-State its first seven-game winning streak since 1917-19.

"Kansas State is a solid, Big Eight football team," Hess said. "They're in one of the premier conferences in the nation. They've beaten everybody in the Big Eight over the last three years except Nebraska and Oklahoma."

But Snyder said Saturday's game shouldn't be considered a measuring stick for the entire season.

"Everything that happens Saturday isn't going to be totally indicative of this football team," Snyder said. "However good or not so good we might be on Saturday, we're still going to make some improvements during the course of the year. We have to continue to improve week-in and week-out."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶PRESS BOX DEDICATION TONIGHT

More than 500 people will pay tribute to a Wildcat legend tonight when K-State will hold a ribbon-cutting ceremony for the new DeVere "Dev" Nelson press box at KSU Stadium.

The $3.3 million dollar facility, paid for by private donations, was named after Nelson this summer by the Board of Regents. It will be used for the first time tomorrow when K-State hosts New Mexico State.

"DeVere would have been pleased, but embarrassed that something of this magnitude would have been named after him," Nelson's wife, Dorothy, said.

Nelson was the "Voice of the Wildcats" from 1954-79, was named Kansas Sportscaster of the Year five times and was K-State's Sports Information Director from 1966-72. He passed away in January.

▶IOWA STATE DRILLS N. ILLINOIS

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Bob Utter threw three long touchdown passes and scored on a 50-yard run, leading Iowa State to a 54-10 season-opening victory over Northern Illinois on Thursday night.

Utter, who has missed much of the last two seasons because of injuries, was sharp after the Cyclones struggled through a slow first quarter that ended with Northern Illinois ahead 7-0.

He directed Iowa State to 17 second-quarter points then sparked a 28-point third quarter that broke the game open. Utter completed 7 of 9 passes for 206 yards, including scoring passes of 53 and 77 yards to James Brooks and 46 yards to Mickal Horacek.

The three touchdown passes were the most by an Iowa State quarterback since Bret Oberg threw four in a 43-40 loss to Oklahoma in 1989. And it was the most points for Iowa State since a 64-9 victory over Indiana State in 1986.

Iowa State also got a 48-yard run from Artis Garris, who set up his own 11-yard touchdown run. And defensive back Kevin Fulton returned a fumble 41 yards for a score.

Northern Illinois' LeShon Johnson, the nation's No. 2 returning rusher behind San Diego State's Marshall Faulk, rushed for 103 yards in 23 carries but did not score. He had a 78-yard run nullified by a holding penalty.

▶ ATLANTA RECEIVER ARRESTED

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Falcons wide receiver Andre Rison was arrested Thursday and charged with beating his girlfriend and firing a gun after two men tried to stop him.

Police said Rison assaulted Lisa Lopes, a singer with the rap group TLC, after the two left an Atlanta nightclub early Thursday.

Rison was charged with aggravated assault and freed on $16,500 bond. Lopes was arrested for allegedly attacking a police officer. She was freed on $1,200 bond on a charge of obstruction. Both face a municipal court hearing Friday.

Police said Lopes went inside a Kroger grocery store when Rison began striking her with his fist about 3:30 a.m. When two men tried to intervene, Rison allegedly told them to get the hell out of there, said Sgt. R.J. Dukes.

VOLLEYBALL

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Wildcat spiker Debbie Miller, sophomore, dives for a dig during volleyball practice Thursday in Ahearn Field House. The team will face Tulsa today at 2 p.m. The spikers will also compete with Baylor, Drake and Oregon State during K-State's three-day invitational at Ahearn.

Hagemeyer starts third year confident

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer has an entirely different feeling coming into the season opener today at the K-State Invitational in Ahearn Field House.

"I have never been this calm before," said Hagemeyer, who begins her third season as coach of the women's squad. "This has to be the calmest that I have ever been before a season."

Hagemeyer said she is calm because she is confident about this season's outlook and that the team has potential it didn't have in her K-State career.

"We don't need to worry about going 30-0, but we need to realize our potential," Hagemeyer said.

The Wildcats will play in the second game at 2 p.m. today against Tulsa. Drake opens the invitational against Oregon State at noon. The Lady Cats then will take the court again at 8 p.m., against Baylor.

"We play Tulsa two times every year. This year, they have a new coach, and from that they didn't get to recruit a lot," Hagemeyer said. "Baylor had a good record last season, but they lost most of their starters. They are a big team."

K-State will open play Saturday against Drake at 10 a.m. K-State has won the last five meetings with the Missouri Valley Conference team. Last season, the Cats swept the match against the Bulldogs, 3-0.

"We have played them all the time, and it has always been a close match," Hagemeyer said.

To conclude the round-robin invitational, the Cats will face Oregon State at 8 p.m. The Beavers, who finished with a 15-18 record last season, will be making their first trip to K-State under new coach Jeff Mozzochi.

Last season, the Cats were learning a new offense, and this season, they finally have the audible offense established, Hagemeyer said.

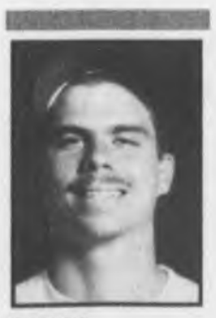
"It has taken a year for it to be installed," Hagemeyer said. "The offense makes the entire front line stronger."

Sophomore setter Chi Dau said that, last season, the Cats were predictable because they were still learning the offense.

"This season we won't be predictable," Dau said.

Defense was a problem for K-State last season, but this season the team has taken a new approach.

"We will have a different attitude," Hagemeyer said. "We are going to get over the mistake part and never change our aggressiveness."



Even with last season's 7-22 record and five sophomore starters, Heather Zoerner and Stephanie Liester said the Cats are prepared for the invitational.

"Now we are more confident that we know how to play college volleyball," Zoerner, a sophomore who plays middle blocker, said. "We now expect to win."

"I think that we are ready, but there will always be first-game jitters," said Liester, a senior who plays at the outside-hitter position.

Winner of NFC will claim Super Bowl — again

BOB LEHMAN

This Sunday marks the beginning of another season of NFL football. During the past offseason, there were quite a few changes that promise to make this season one to remember. Nowhere is that more true than in the NFC.

Both the advent of true-free agency and several coaching changes lead me to believe the NFC should prove to be quite interesting. Most teams have the potential to put together a string of wins and challenge for the top of their division.

The east is certainly the class of the NFC. The winners of the last three Super Bowls all hang out in the east. Dallas, Washington and New York should all be vying for the top spot throughout the season. The Giants will fall short of a wildcard spot due to old legs and inexperience under the new Dan Reeves system. Both the Redskins and Cowboys will make the playoffs, but Washington will win the division on Dec. 26 when they travel to Texas Stadium. Without Emmit Smith, the Cowboys do not have a running game and will not fully recover from his lengthy holdout.

Moving west across the heartland, we find the people of the tiny city of Green Bay waiting with great anticipation for an NFC central title. Sorry, but not this year. The Packers have improved themselves enough to make the playoffs, but Minnesota will take the division. Although the Packers made significant improvements during the off-season, the Vikings have a much more solid foundation. Minnesota was there last year and will do it again. The addition of Jim McMahon merely solidifies the Vikings' position atop the Central.

Reaching the left coast, we find a rerun of last season — San Francisco and New Orleans racing for first, and Atlanta and Los Angeles racing for the first draft pick. The 49ers have always counted on their experience to lead them to the top of the NFC west. No longer. The Saints have acquired enough experience by losing in the playoffs that they will be able to make whatever adjustments necessary to win the division.

In the opening round of the playoffs, Green Bay gets a third shot at Minnesota and wins. By playoff time, Reggie White will have pushed this team to its peak. San Francisco will snuff out Dallas' hopes for a repeat in a blowout at Candlestick. The Niners have been waiting all year to pay back the Cowboys for last season's playoff game.

On a roll, both Green Bay and San Francisco will advance past New Orleans and Washington, respectively. This will set up a coaching confrontation between 49er coach George Seifert and his former offensive coordinator, Packer coach Mike Holmgren, for the NFC Championship.

This game will, as it has for the past nine years, decide the eventual world champion. The NFC will continue to dominate because it knows how to play the kind of football that wins championships: hard-nosed and smash-mouth on both sides of the ball. The other conference has just realized this, and it is going to be a few more years before they can compete on an even keel with the NFC.

As for my pick in the NFC Championship game, I'm not sure I want to say, but it is going to be played in Green Bay, Wis., on Jan. 23.

You decide.

Willie the Wildcat prepares to throw miniature K-State footballs in between cheers from the crowd during the Purple Power Play on Poyntz. The city-wide pep rally has helped to kick off the football season at K-State for the past eight years in Manhattan.

Crowd shows spirit at rally

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI

More than 300 Wildcat fans gathered for the Purple Power Play on Poyntz Avenue, just west of Manhattan Town Center, Thursday night.

K-State football players and coaches attended opening night of the three-day event.

"I can't wait for the football season to begin," Kevin Lewis, freshman undecided, said. "If I were 300 pounds heavier, I'd be out there too."

A pep rally at 9 p.m. was the highlight of the evening. Everyone crowded around the platform and clapped along with Willie the Wildcat to the school fight song.

Then the Voice of the Wildcats, Mitch Holthus, took the stand.

"You fans have to rise to another level," Holthus said, "and it starts with butts in the seats.

"We need 35,000 people there Saturday afternoon against New Mexico State."

Then it was time for football coach Bill Snyder to introduce the co-captains of the football team: Quentin Neujahr, Jaime Mendez, Andre Coleman and John Butler.

"You fans got to realize you do a lot for us — you really do," Neujahr said.

"When these 11 individuals go into the huddle and join hands, they form a machine. And this machine needs fuel. And the fuel we get is from you fans. The more fuel we've got, the more fuel, the more power, the more motivation this team's got."

Straight from the "And To Think I Didn't Think Of This When We Were Making Our Wedding Vows" department: a California woman recently sought an annulment because her husband was a slob.

Brenda Joyce Johnston complained that her husband, Donald, turned into a slob after the wedding. Showering, apparently, went to the wayside. She sought an annulment on the grounds of fraud.

"He never promised her he would take showers," Donald's Johnston's lawyer, Donald P. Bebereia, bluntly said.

An appeals court agreed with the lawyer. In a ruling that is sure to set a landmark precedence, the appeals court ruled that slovenly habits aren't grounds for annulment based on fraud. Brenda Johnston was granted a divorce instead.

As for the allegations against Donald Johnston, he says it's all hogwash.

"It's not a picture of my life at all," he said.

Kinda makes you wonder why Brenda would go to all the trouble, don't it?

Wiggling through customs

Yu-te Chen recently pleaded guilty to a July 5 incident when he tried to board a plane with 18 — count 'em, 18 — snakes strapped to his biceps and ankles. He and Chine-Kuo Liu were arrested in Los Angeles (any surprises there?) for trying to smuggle protected reptiles.

U.S. wildlife agents confiscated 52 snakes, including the 18 wrapped in nylon sacks and strapped to Chen's body. The rest were in a brown paper bag he was carrying, Assistant U.S. Attorney Nathan Hochman said.

Unconfirmed reports stated that Chen was originally accused of having 19 snakes strapped to his body.

"That one's not a snake," he quickly retorted.

Sources couldn't confirm that incident.

But perhaps the real twist of the story is that Liu, 30, was convicted of similar charges last year after he was arrested with 11 lizards and a boa constrictor.

Does anyone else get the idea some people have too much time on their hands?

Q. Why did you answer the phone?

A. "Because I knew it was going to be the K-State Collegian calling."

Q. What were you doing before answering the phone?

A. "Getting ready to greet people for the ITHCUS meeting. I'm a greeter."

Q. A greeter, huh? Is that mentally challenging?

A. "It is rough for me." (I'll assume that was answered facetiously, okay, Brittany?)

Q. Are you going to the K-State football game tomorrow?

A. "No, I'm not. I care about the game. I'm just not going to be there." (Kind of explains K-State's attendance, doesn't it?)

Q. Well, do you know who K-State plays?

A. "I forgot." (Understandable.)

Q. Do you know who the K-State quarterback is?

A. "No, but I know who the kicker is." (That's not what I asked.)

Storage Shed Rock -N- Roll

Storage sheds might conjure up images of boxes of old winter clothes, moth-eaten sofas and long-forgotten scraps of nostalgia.

These aluminum breadboxes hardly seem the place for the raw sounds of Manhattan's music scene to call home.

Yet, McCall Storage on McCall Road, next to the old Greyhound bus station, has become a virtual rock 'n' roll hatchery for many of Manhattan's finest musicians.

Several local bands use the sheds as practice spaces.

"I think we were one of the first bands to get a space out here. We've been here since the spring of 1990," Eric Melin, Truck Stop Love drummer, said.

"We were out by Q104 once, but now I think this is the only place left in town where you can get a space," he said. "Every band is basically forced out here."

Brian Brooks, senior in music and bassist for Dr. Zeus, said he agreed.

"It's pretty much the only place in town that allows it and has the electricity to amplify everything we need," he said. Brooks said Dr. Zeus has been practicing at the storage sheds for more than three years.

Most of the sheds are rented to clients for between $75 and $100 per month.

"We pay $75 for the space. It's about 10 feet by 20 feet, and the ceiling's about 15 feet tall," Brooks said. "And there's some really gnarly red, green and gold carpet we put on the floor. Really gnarly."

Empty guitar-string packages litter the floor of the Dr. Zeus shed along with Texaco Big Dipper cups and stray beer-bottle caps. The beer-bottle pile itself spills out of a corner.

"It smells bad," Brooks said.

Some bands opt to share one shed to lessen their individual costs.

"It's much cheaper if you have two bands out here in the same space," Melin said. "Of course, you have to organize with the other band on what to touch and what not to touch.

"My philosophy is like, 'If you need it, and you know I don't, then go ahead and take it,'" he said.

Some of the bands have invested in larger-sized sheds.

"We got a space bigger than a single one," Brian McCallum, guitarist for Roach Factory, said. "We're just too loud — too obnoxiously loud — to have a single space."

"We've always tried to stay away from practicing in public facilities," McCallum said. "Besides, we were trying to avoid paying rent. We preferred other people's houses."

McCallum said there is a certain camaraderie among the bands practicing at the sheds.

"It's pretty cool," he said. "We get motivated by each other and hear some really cool music."

Local band, Dr. Zeus practices in their rented shed at McCall Storage

Brooks said Dr. Zeus usually doesn't wind up at the space when other bands are practicing.

"If we do, we usually play loud enough to block everyone else out. Sometimes, we just piss 'em off. Sometimes, we'll just play one of their songs, and then they'll play one of ours.

"Sometimes, it's fun just to get some beers and play for a few friends," he said.

Tom Abbott, owner of McCall Storage, said he likes the bands.

"They come out here at 2 a.m., usually with an entourage of folks, to play. They're an asset to us. It ups our security," Abbott said. "I mean, think about it. If you're gonna break in, you've got to figure out when the bands won't be out here."

"We do have some complaints about the volume and stuff from time to time. You know, people wanting to know who these long-haired people are. But that's just a perception. We love them. They're great," he said.

"Some guy built a National Championship drag racer out here once," Abbott said. "And he made more noise than the bands ever do."

If the bands do get too loud, the police often pay them a visit.

"We've been harassed by the police a couple of times," Melin said.

McCallum said the police will come and shut them down if they're playing too loudly.

"We're well acquainted with Riley County's finest," he said. "Sometimes they listen for a little while before they shut us down."

There are other drawbacks to practicing out at the storage sheds. For example, there are no bathrooms.

"And right now, it's so hot out here," Brooks said. "Then in the wintertime, it's so cold, your fingers don't work."

In past winters, bands have brought out space heaters to try to make the Kansas cold easier to bear.

"We pretty much practice according to the weather," Brooks said.

McCallum said he agreed about the summer heat.

"We usually come out in the evening hours when it's cooler," he said. "Otherwise, it's hot like an oven."

Melin said the storage sheds have quite a history.

"It's weird," he said. "When we came back out here from where we last practiced, we ended up back in the same space as the one we started in. It's pretty ironic."

Practice at the storage sheds has paid off for Truck Stop Love. The band signed a recording contract last spring with Scotti Brothers Records, and its first album will be released nationwide on Sept. 14.

Melin said the band members wanted to make known what the storage sheds mean to them.

"This place is great," he said. "In fact, on the inside of our CD cover, we have pictures from out at the practice space."

REVIEW

Two brilliant summer flicks now on video

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

This summer marked the videocassette releases of two extremely well-made feature films worthy of viewing time. Both "Passion Fish" and "Scent of a Woman" deal with the unlikely friendships that develop between completely different types of people.

First, "Passion Fish," starring Mary McDonnell and Alfre Woodard, details the painstaking journey to recovery by a former soap opera actress, who, after a tragic accident, is left a paraplegic. After several nurses quit due to their patient's apathetic unwillingness to strengthen her remaining controllable muscles, Mary-Alice (McDonnell) hires a stubborn woman named Chantelle (Woodard) as her new assistant.

At first, each woman maintains her distant disposition of professionalism. However, as evidence about both women's pasts is allowed to surmount, they learn they have a great deal in common. Ultimately, as Chantelle has just ended the greatest battle of her life, Mary-Alice has just begun hers.

"Passion Fish" is an extraordinary film that contains one of the most acclaimed and outstandingly realistic performances in any 1992 film. McDonnell is perfectly cast as Mary-Alice, whose witty sarcasm and childlike tantrums detract just enough from her pitiful condition to keep the film running smoothly without an overwhelming feeling of self-pity, and not so much that the audience loses sight of the severity of paraplegia.

The second film, "Scent of a Woman," starring Al Pacino and Chris O'Donnell, recounts the ensuing fortification of respect between a choleric blind man and his weekend caretaker. Pacino plays Frank Slade, a lonely, yet lively, retired lieutenant colonel who relishes intimidating members of the younger generation. Along comes Charlie (O'Donnell), a prep-school student facing expulsion, when Frank is at his lowest morale.

When the cat's away, the mice will play. Upon the departure of his niece and family, Frank's usual caretakers, whom he refers as "The Flintstones," Frank promptly whisks his naive new caretaker away for a wild weekend in New York.

"Scent of a Woman" is the epitome of a classic film. It is made of all the necessary elements for success: superb acting, a mentor-student premise and an involved plot.

Pacino won an Academy Award last year for this role. You'll realize why when you witness his portrayal of caustic Frank Slade. It's nothing less than top-notch.

Check out "Passion Fish" and "Scent of a Woman." Certainly, when you do, appreciate the thematic parallels. Then just take each film on its own merit. They are both brilliant in their own respects.

Thousands expected at Cool Cats Jazz Fest

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

Cool Cats and cool jazz will dominate Sunset Zoo on Labor Day.

Sunset Zoo, in cooperation with the International Association of Jazz Educators, Kansas Arts Commission and Fuji Film, will sponsor the fourth annual Cool Cats Jazz Festival from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday.

"The zoo is expecting 4,000 visitors," said Angela Baier, marketing and development officer for Sunset Zoo.

The rain that has plagued Manhattan recently shouldn't affect the concert or crowd numbers as the forecast calls for a beautiful Labor Day, Baier said.

Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for children ages 5-12. Children 4 years old and younger will be admitted free of charge.

Live jazz performances begin at noon and run until 6 p.m. Artists will change hourly on the hour between noon and 4 p.m.

From 4 p.m. to 6 p.m., Ed Shaughnessy will perform as a guest soloist.

Shaughnessy has the distinction of being seen and heard by more people than any other drummer in music history.

He played for the "Doc" Severinsen Band, of the Johnny Carson's Tonight Show, for more than 25 years.

Screenings of rare films, featuring classic jazz performances and interviews, will be shown from noon to 4 p.m. in the zoo's Education Center courtesy of Dick Wright, of Lawrence jazz station KANU-FM.

Other zoo activities are planned to complement the jazz festival. Animals not on regular display will be displayed.

Other activities include biofact tables, where guests can touch unusual items such as lion's skin and a tiger's whisker.

Face painting also will take place throughout the day at the Cool Cats Jazz Festival.

"It has been received well by the community," Baier said.

Baier said attendance nearly tripled from the first year of the festival to the second then nearly double the following year.

Wheel chairs and golf-cart services will be available for guest with special needs.

Reserved seating in the performance and film screening areas will be available for the visually and/or hearing impaired. The 2 p.m. performance by Karrin Allyson will have a sign language interpreter.

"We're hoping K-State students and their families will make a weekend of it, taking in the first home football game on Saturday and the Jazz Festival on Monday," Baier said.

'Indecent Proposal' has problems

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

"Suppose I were to offer you $1 million for one night with your wife," suggests billionaire John Gage to a desperate and out-of-work architect over a game of billiards in the anti-climactic "Indecent Proposal."

A moral dilemma arises for David and Diana Murphy (Woody Harrelson, Demi Moore), a young, struggling married couple, after Gage (Robert Redford) makes the offer. But eventually, they succumb to their greed and Diana (simply "D," as her husband refers to her) hits the retail market for a cool $1 million. It seems the two find nothing indecent about the proposal.

After pimping and whoring their way into sudden wealth, the two wheeler-dealers are actually surprised when the affair takes its toll on their marriage. David breaks a bottle of wine and Diana cries. Boo hoo.

"Indecent Proposal" has problems. Big problems. And a million of them. The story follows an illogical course of events. When times are bad, they head for Vegas, and no one gets a job. That is, until Diana becomes Gage's temp.

Diana appears playfully psychotic. She's abusing her husband either by throwing bowls, slapping him across the face or chasing him with knives. How endearing.

The actors appear to be reading off cue cards. If Woody Harrelson is trying to shed the immature and ignorant image he perpetuated on "Cheers," he can't do so in trashy films like this.

This is an unorganized film about selfish, vulgar people. Even at the end of the film, no real conflict is resolved. The film moves too slowly in some scenes, yet too fast in others.

Maybe this film would have been more aptly named "Demi Does it For Dollars."

Reader says don't ridicule 'left in dark'

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing in response to your words to "Left in the Dark" on Aug. 27. Her problem may not seem valid to you, but you did not have to ridicule her. To understand her problem, you must put yourself in her place.

Maybe she feels she cannot trust him because he kept something that is a part of him from her. Maybe she, like a number of non-smokers, has found she has a low tolerance for smoke and those who produce it.

As for her questions to you, I take it upon myself to answer them. She should simply confront him. She does not have to tell him how she found out unless he asks. She also should not overreact or make the problem bigger than it really is.

She should go to him and ask him why he has kept this from her. If she really loves him, the smoking will not make her love him any less. If he really cares for her and himself, he would want to inhibit his habit.

As for you, Cassandra, remember that you are here to advise others. Stop skirting the issues by slamming your readers and writing a bunch of bunk. Answer the questions you are asked without sarcasm, without ridicule.

Respectfully,
Straightforward

Dear Straightforward,

Touché.

Riley County Police Officer Trent McCown, junior in wildlife biology, takes time out during his evening patrol to catch up on paperwork. Officers spend hours at a time doing paperwork for their shift.

Police invite public to ride along

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

If you have wondered what police officers do on a daily basis, your questions can be answered by riding along with them.

K-State students and any Riley County resident can spend an evening or a day on the job with a police officer as part of the Riley County Police Department Ride-Along Program.

"Our Ride-Along Program has been around as long as I have been here, which is over 20 years," Stanley Conkwright, sergeant in charge of special projects, said.

"It is an awareness program for the public to see what is going on in their department and community," Conkwright said.

He said the program is a good way for the public to see how their tax dollars are spent.

Officer Trent McCown said he likes how the program dispels the negative image the public has toward police officers.

"Anybody can ride along. I like it, and I'd encourage it," McCown said.

"You (the public) get to see that we are people, too," he said. "Our feelings get hurt when people put us down. We aren't just guys who break up parties."

Participants in the Ride-Along Program ride in the front seat of the patrol car. Riders go on all calls with the officers. These officers could be checking burglaries, pulling over drivers or responding to any other calls. If a situation might become dangerous, Conkwright said, the officer drops the rider off a few blocks away for safety reasons.

"Law enforcement is an unpredictable occupation because you're dealing with a lot of unknowns," he said. "We are very careful not to put people in dangerous situations."

Officers carry maps that cover the entire county so they can respond to calls quickly. They check residential burglar alarms frequently.

"We treat every check as the real thing. We do a perimeter check and check for broken glass and any signs of intrusion," McCown said.

"If I could make one law that would make my job easier, it would be to have every house have reflective numbers on their house or mailbox," he said.

McCown said it is sometimes difficult to figure out which house to check because house numbers are poorly marked.

McCown said officers also serve as back-up for each other. Officers may patrol along behind one another in case the officer in charge needs assistance. The assisting officer waits about a half block away and can call for back-up.

One of the most time-consuming parts of the job is paperwork.

"Sometimes the hardest job is getting all my paperwork in order. I spend hours on it," McCown said. "My office is a patrol car. The radio is also really important because we spend eight to 10 hours in the car. It cuts down on the monotony and is relaxing."

Conkwright said for some individuals the interest goes further.

"Law enforcement is a great career. A lot of people come down and ride with us to see if it is a career they would like to pursue," Conkwright said. "We also have several officers working their way through college. We encourage it."

Conkwright said anyone who wants to participate is welcome.

He said riders must call in advance to the police station and request the time they prefer. They can ride for three to four hours.

"I thought it was neat to see how the Riley County Police Department operates. Most people see the police doing traffic stops and making DUI and MIP arrests. They don't see the behind the scenes work, like writing reports and other public assistances," Van Cleave said.

Conkwright said he preferred that people ride on the day watch, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., or the swing shift, from 4 p.m. to 12 a.m.

"After midnight, things can get unpredictable," he said.

Riders must arrive in the station 30 minutes in advance to sign a release waiver before they can ride, he said.

RIDE-ALONG INFORMATION

Anyone interested in the Riley Co. Police Dept. Ride-Along Program can call Sgt. Stanley Conkwright at 537-2112 for information.

Freshest food in town at bar, grill

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Lucky BrewGrille is the only restaurant in town without a freezer.

"Everything from the bar to the restaurant is quality-oriented," Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky's, said. "We don't serve any frozen or processed food. Everything is made from scratch. Our salad dressings, our pizza sauces, everything."

Lucky's opened June 26 at 701 Manhattan Ave. Leetch said he believes it's a great location.

"I knew there was nothing in town like this. No restaurant is like this, no bar is like this," he said.

Lori Canova, sophomore in pre-health, is a hostess.

"The food is really good," she said. "We serve both lunch and dinner here. A lot of people talk about the pizza."

Canova said the pizza is prepared in a wood-fired pizza oven.

"We use oaks and hickories," Leetch said. "They create a radiant heat that cooks the pizzas quicker and more evenly."

Offerings include the traditional fare such as pepperoni and sausage. Lucky's also features barbecue chicken, BLT, burrito, honey-mustard and tuna melt pizzas. The Manhattan is a popular choice that follows more traditional pizza recipes.

"The pizzas are great for health-conscious people because of the fresh ingredients we use," Leetch said.

The menu also includes spicy Cajun meatloaf and hamburgers.

"We serve the best ribs you'll ever have," Leetch said. "I love this barbecue sauce. I call it rattlesnake sauce because it has a bite to it."

The chef and general manager come from the Chez Malange, a five-star restaurant in Los Angeles.

Lucky's has 20 beers on tap and more than 175 bottled beers. Dave Borberg, fifth-year senior in finance, is a bartender at Lucky's.

"We serve lots of imports," he said. "Some, like Guiness, are hard to find on tap in the States."

The bar is service-oriented, Leetch said.

"We want to be able to offer everything anyone would want to drink," he said. "We also try to create an ambiance. The crowds here are definitely upbeat. It's a quality crowd."

Sports paraphernalia decorates the walls of Lucky's. Leetch, a K-State basketball fanatic, has a basketball autographed by this year's team. There's also a tire signed by Richard Petty and an autographed Nolan Ryan baseball.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

1998 automobiles must have airbags

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Front-seat air bags will be a mandatory feature in new cars as of the 1998 model year, but automakers likely will meet the federal regulation before then.

The final rule on air bags was scheduled to be issued today by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

At least 95 percent of each manufacturer's car fleet built on or after Sept. 1, 1996, must be equipped with both air bags and manual lap and shoulder belts for the driver and front-seat passengers.

For the model year beginning Sept. 1, 1997, all passenger cars will be required to have air bags and manual belts in the front seat.

Air bags also will be phased in for light trucks. All light trucks will have to carry front-seat air bags and belts beginning with the 1999 model year.

The time frame was set up in a 1991 transportation law. The auto safety agency formally proposed the rule in December.

The current automatic occupant protection standard says automakers can offer automatic seat belts, air bags or any other device that provides automatic protection in a 30-mph crash test.

"We want to emphasize that it is critical for passengers in automobiles and trucks to wear both lap and shoulder seat belts even with air bags," Transportation Secretary Federico Pena said in a telephone interview from San Francisco. "When both are used, there will be thousands of lives saved and many thousands of serious injuries avoided."

Pena also emphasized that parents shouldn't put rear-facing child seats in the front-seat of vehicles with air bags because the child could be injured when the bags inflate.

Issuance of the final rule is anticlimactic because most manufacturers will meet the standard before they are required to, said Brian O'Neill, president of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

"Over 90 percent of the car models in this coming year will come with air bags as standard driver equipment, and most of them will come with driver and passenger air bags," O'Neill said. "The only thing that prevented the industry from (a greater percentage) was the speed with which the manufacturers could re-engineer and design and get the bags in there."

NATO military action possible

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said today the option of military strikes is possible in Bosnia if there is a resumption of the shelling of Sarajevo or an interruption in humanitarian relief deliveries.

The president also held out hope for a quick resumption of peace talks that broke off Wednesday.

"They are stalled," Clinton said. "I don't believe they are collapsed. The United States will do everything it can in the next few days to get the parties to resume the talks in good faith."

Clinton made his comments in a brief exchange with reporters after Secretary of State Warren Christopher called on Serbia and Croatia to yield to demands from Bosnian Muslims for a larger chunk of territory.

Christopher said the negotiations suspended in Geneva should be resumed and Serb and Croat negotiators should show greater flexibility.

If there is a breakdown because of the stubbornness and intransigence of the Serbs or the Croatians, the world community will certainly hold them responsible, Christopher said.

At the White House, Clinton described conditions under which NATO might unleash air strikes in Bosnia.

"If, while the talks are in abeyance, there is abuse by those who would seek to interfere with humanitarian aid, attack the protected areas and resume the sustained shelling of Sarajevo, for example, then, first I would remind you that the NATO military option is very much alive."

He said he also continues to favor lifting the arms embargo to supply military assistance to Bosnian Muslims, but said U.S. allies continue to oppose that course.

Stiff messages, known to diplomats as demarches, were sent to Presidents Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia and Franjo Tudjman of Croatia, outlining the tough U.S. position.

The United States supports the Muslims in their three main demands, a senior U.S. official said.

These are that Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina, have a corridor to the sea, that the Muslim area in the around Bihac be enlarged and that a corridor be established between that area and a Muslim enclave in the center of the country.

The negotiations in Geneva collapsed unexpectedly Wednesday night after Muslim negotiators declined to accept a draft peace accord unless the Serbs and Muslims agreed to cede them more land.

Arabs, Israelis continue peace talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Their historic agreement on Palestinian self-rule nearly ready to be inked, Arab and Israeli negotiators closed in on another milestone Wednesday: mutual recognition between the PLO and the Jewish state.

The back-channel talks that brought about the self-rule accord now are mainly focusing on Israeli recognition of its implacable foe, the Palestine Liberation Organization, said a source close to the negotiations.

The source, speaking from Norway on condition of anonymity, added that there had been minor problems over phrasing of the pact on Palestinian self-rule in some Israeli-occupied areas. The source did not elaborate.

The secret talks that led to the autonomy accord were begun in Norway. Mahmoud Abbas, the PLO's No. 2, said Wednesday that talks on mutual recognition were continuing in Brussels, Belgium. Washington is the formal, public venue for the negotiations.

Israel's Foreign Ministry director general, Uri Savir, traveled Tuesday from Norway to Brussels, where Foreign Minister Shimon Peres will meet with Israel's European ambassadors on Thursday.

Peres stressed there was no direct link between the autonomy agreement and establishing ties with the PLO.

But senior PLO officials have made no secret that they hope recognition from Israel — and with it, Washington — will emerge with the signatures on the autonomy plan.

The back-channel talks are designed to lead to simultaneous statements in which the PLO revises its charter to renounce terrorism, while Israel accepts the group as the legitimate representative of the 1.8 million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

PLO officials have said Arafat did that in 1988 as a precursor to a short-lived dialogue with the United States.

But deputy foreign minister Yossi Beilin told Israel army radio that "We will not be satisfied by a collection of declarations quoted from the past."

The declaration on limited Palestinian autonomy completed Aug. 20 is ready for signature once it is decided who will sign for Israel and for the Palestinians, said PLO representative Nabil Shaath.

Female student assaulted in B3

RHONDA WILSON

K-State students are being urged to utilize campus escort services or to walk with friends in the wake of an attack on a student Sunday night.

At 8:10 p.m. Sunday a female student was attacked in Lot B3 behind Weber Hall, Cheryl May, director of K-State News Services, said.

The freshman student was walking toward Goodnow Hall from the lot when she was approached by a white male with a medium build.

The man said, "Hey you, come here."

She ignored him, and he approached her and called to her again, May said. He grabbed her arm, but she fought back, possibly scratching him on the forearm.

The student, who lives in Goodnow, ran to the hall escaping physical harm.

He did not pursue her, nor did he appear to have a weapon, May said.

K-State police urge students, particularly female students, not to walk alone after dark, to utilize the Haymaker Hall escort service and other escort services the campus offers and to be aware of their surroundings, Lt. Rick Howard said.

Although the parking lot is well lighted now, the University is not exempt from these types of situations, he said.

K-State scientist survives attack while in Siberia

Men yanked from car, held at gunpoint

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Ralph Charlton is back in his office, but little more than a month ago, he was not sure he would ever see K-State again.

Charlton, assistant professor of entomology, left the United States on July 21 to study the Asian gypsy moth at the request of the U.S. Forest Service. He met a colleague, Ring Cardé, from the University of Massachusetts, in Moscow, and they flew 2,500 miles to the city of Krasnoyarsk in southern Siberia, which has been closed for decades to foreigners.

Their flight out of Moscow had been delayed three hours, and they arrived in Krasnoyarsk about 2 a.m. Their Russian contact, Yuri Branchnikov, was there to meet them, and they took a hired car to their hotel on the outskirts of Krasnoyarsk, Charlton said.

As they approached the run-down hotel, they expected to see some lights on, because the staff knew they were coming, he said.

"We came down this narrow lane all hemmed in by vegetation, and at the end we could see a car parked there facing us with its lights on. We pulled up in front of the car," he said.

"Two guys came up on either side of the car. They were wearing black outfits and black ski masks, and they had big knives in their hands. Scimitars, that kind of knife.

"They dragged the driver out, dragged Yuri out. I was sitting in the back seat, and I remember thinking just for a brief second, 'Am I dreaming? Is this jet-lag kicking in?'"

The whole event seemed surreal — like a TV show, Charlton said.

As the masked men yanked them from the car, others came running out of the hotel and from surrounding shrubbery, he said.

"They quickly hustled us into this lobby," Charlton said. "It

Geologists teach spillway creation

BRIEFLY

■ Erosion below the Tuttle Creek Reservoir spillway exposes rock hidden for millions of years.

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

Rock hounds, young and old alike, gathered in Thompson Hall on Thursday evening to discuss the grand canyon of Manhattan, the eroded area below the Tuttle Creek Reservoir spillway.

After recent flooding and the enormous amount of water that passed through the spillway, large amounts of rock and earth have been eroded away, exposing rocks and soils hidden for millions of years.

These rocks and soils, which outdate the dinosaurs, have drawn attention from local and regional geologists.

The discussion, sponsored by the K-State geology department, included short presentations by six geology experts and concluded with questions from the audience.

The discussion began with Allen Archer, assistant professor of geology, who presented a brief overview of the spillway area from a geological standpoint.

Archer said the rocks and earth in the area were created at the tail end of the Paleozoic era, making them roughly 300 million years old. At that time, due to continental drift, Kansas was near the equator and hence had a wet climate.

After Archer, James Underwood, professor of geology, spoke on the geological structure of the area.

Underwood said there are seven small faults in the rock and earth around the spillway. These faults, which do not run near the spillway itself, helped to determine the flow of water and erosion. Underwood also said although there was a large amount of water, little damage was done to the spillway itself.

DISCUSSION SERIES

■ The Grand Canyon in Manhattan discussion series will continue from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Wednesday in Thompson 101.

Page Twiss, professor of geology, was next to speak and surprised the audience when he said the site is probably the best example of rocks of this type in North America.

Twiss said before the flood the site was essentially flat, but it is now cut and eroded, allowing a visitor to walk through 10 millions years of the earth's history.

The next speaker, Ronald West, professor of geology, explained the various fossils that can now be seen at the spillway.

West said these are not dinosaur fossils, but rather the remains of invertebrates, or creatures with no backbones, and of amphibians.

West said finding the bones and tracks of such creatures is easy at the spillway, as they litter the surfaces of many of its rocks.

Finally, Stanley Grant, assistant director of Great Plains Rocky Mountains Hazardous Substance Research Center, spoke on the geological engineering aspects of the site.

Grant said during the period between July 23 and August 9, all of what is now visible was exposed. This is due to the opening of the 18 flood gates, allowing 27 million gallons of water per minute to be forced out at 30 miles per hour, cutting and eroding away of soil and boulders and creating the new grand canyon.

Because of the enormous response the geology department received on its "Grand Canyon of Manhattan" discussion series, there will be another discussion Wednesday evening from 7 to 8 p.m. in Thompson 101.

Russians protect visiting teachers

VICKI TILLIER

Manhattan Christian College biblical teachers survived threats of mugging by drunken laborers on June 16 and 19 in Russia.

Hiram Cassel, professor of ministries, said several drunken men threatened to harm Americans at least two times during their stay at Little Star Camp, 60 miles southeast of Moscow.

"My interpreter took the brunt of the heated confrontation," Hiram Cassel said.

She said an assembly was in progress when the intoxicated men started yelling at the Americans.

"The men were angry because the lodge was full. They blamed the Americans for taking their rooms because at least three or four dorms were filled with our students. Americans and Russians stayed in a dormitory," Marcy Cassel said.

"Occasionally, the dorm is used as a holiday lodge by the Russian people," she said.

The Russian coaches, leaders and teachers took extra precautions to protect the American people, Marcy Cassel said.

"The fact that the Russians stepped right in and intervened was very precious to us. They talked to the drunks. They told them that we were invited there. They said we were their guests, and they were out of line," she said.

"The Russians told all the Americans to go to their rooms and lock the doors," Marcy Cassel said. "The Russians literally give themselves for you. I trusted the people who intervened for us."

Hiram Cassel said he felt very safe.

"This type of thing can even happen to someone in New York City or Kansas," Hiram Cassel said.

Holiday accident deaths down from '92

(AP) — At least four people died in Labor Day weekend traffic accidents on Kansas roadways, including a 23-year-old man whose car was struck by another vehicle fleeing from police in Neodesha.

In 1992, five people died in Labor Day weekend accidents, according to the state Department of Transportation. Records were set in 1967 and 1976, when 16 people were killed in accidents on Kansas roads.

Style, personality Finney legacies

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Joan Finney might be remembered more for her personality and her unconventional style than for anything she did in office.

Finney, who announced last week she would not seek a second term, will leave office after having the state's school finance and workers' compensation systems overhauled on her watch. The state's economy, while not booming, remained steady.

At the same time, she waged a public feud with Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephan and faced criticism from some of her appointments. She fired two cabinet secretaries, withdrew the nomination of a third and had two more resign in the face of public controversies.

In the end, she may be remembered more for her ability to connect with ordinary people, and her insistence that she knew what the people were thinking. She liked mingling, shaking hands and giving hugs in parades, K marts and fast-food restaurants.

Children hurt at Wichita race track

WICHITA (AP) — A 7-year-old girl died a few hours after a race car's airborne wheel struck her and her brother at a Sedgwick County racetrack.

Amanda Dutton was rushed by ambulance to St. Francis Regional Medical Center Saturday night after the right hub broke on a sprint car driven by Jon Johnson at 81 Speedway. The tire and wheel came off, bounced over a chain-link fence and landed halfway up the stands.

Amanda was pronounced dead at 2 a.m. Sunday. Her 9-year-old brother, Joshua, remained in critical condition early Monday morning at HCA Wesley Medical Center.

Mange killing eastern Kansas coyotes

TOPEKA (AP) — A strain of mange is killing coyotes in eastern Kansas, wildlife officials say.

Lloyd Fox, an animal biologist with the Kansas Wildlife and Parks department at the agency's Emporia field offices, said the mange is being transmitted by a mite and usually begins on the animal's hind leg. The disease progresses to the point where all the hair is gone and the skin takes on a bluish tint, he said.

Once the fur is lost, the animals lose body moisture and their immune systems weaken, making them listless and prone to pneumonia and other infections.

Skin diseases also impair the coyotes' sense of smell, hurting their ability to hunt, Fox said. That leads them to barns and vacant houses in search of easier prey.

An Alma rancher recently found nine dead, hairless coyotes among his pile of round hay bales, said Bob Henderson, a Kansas State University wildlife damage expert.

Chicago children get extended summer

CHICAGO (AP) — The first day of school was pushed back almost a week by the board of education, which said a hiring freeze and 7,000 job vacancies mean there are not enough teachers to fill the classrooms.

Classes had been scheduled to start on Wednesday, but the board voted Sunday unanimously to delay classes until Sept. 14.

The district faces several difficulties, including a $298-million budget gap, a teachers' contract that expired Aug. 31 and a hiring freeze imposed by the state Legislature, despite 7,000 vacancies in teaching and other staff positions.

Nixon, Kissenger on kidnappers' list

NEW YORK (AP) — Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger were among the possible kidnap targets discussed by a government informer and the alleged leader of a radical Muslim terrorist plot, the New York Times reported Monday.

Emad Salem, the informant, and Siddig Ibrahim Siddig Ali talked about kidnapping influential Americans, including the former president and his secretary of state, according to lawyers who have seen transcripts of tape-recorded conversations in the case.

The hostage-taking plan was aimed at winning the release of Muslims held in the Feb. 26 World Trade Center bombing, the Times said.

Doctors performed biological experiments

TOKYO (AP) — Dr. Ken Yuasa says he used healthy Chinese for practice surgery during World War II, removed parts of their brains and even shot prisoners in order to demonstrate how to remove bullets.

As a Japanese army doctor, Yuasa said, he tested the effectiveness of anesthetics on two healthy farmers and practiced a tracheotomy. His colleagues cut their arms, legs and intestines into pieces and then stitched them back together again.

After the surgery practice, the doctors killed their patients, strangling one with a belt when he suvived the injection of anesthetic into a vein, Yuasa said.

For decades after its surrender in 1945, Japan insisted there was no proof its military had conducted biological experiments, enslaved foreign women in brothels and made forced laborers of Chinese and Koreans.

Attack kills Nigerians, wounds Americans

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Seven Nigerian soldiers were killed in a militia ambush Sunday as they aided U.N. peacekeepers surrounded by a mob of stone-throwing Somalis, a U.S. official said.

An unidentified American diplomat, who was attached to the U.S. liaison office in Mogadishu, was shot in the chest after he and five colleagues apparently stumbled onto the ambush, the official said. The diplomat was later listed in fair to good condition at a U.S. military hospital.

U.N. officials blamed the attack on fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

CORRECTION

■ Eric Schmutz's name was incorrectly spelled in a graphic on page one of Friday's Collegian.

■ The story on page three of Friday's Collegian incorrectly stated the student life office will write a notification letter to a dean, informing them of a student's absence. That was done in the past. The student life office now calls the dean's office. The headline incorrectly stated the dean excuses students from classes. Only the instructor may do that.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

The Vietnam Women's Memorial depicts the roles women played in the Vietnam War. The memorial is traveling around the country and stopped in Junction City on Sunday night.

David Collins, Kansas coordinator for the Vietnam Women's Memorial project, speaks to an audience Sunday evening at the Heritage Park in Junction City. The traveling memorial arrived at the park a little behind schedule Sunday evening, after coming from Wichita. Although the weather was rainy, it did not stop Junction City residents from coming out to see the memorial. The memorial was kept inside the transport van to keep it dry.

Unplanned stop

KARREY BRITT

Pouring rain and lightning didn't dampen the spirits of those who gathered with their umbrellas and raincoats to see the Vietnam Women's Memorial Saturday night in Junction City.

The Vietnam Women's Memorial statue has been traveling east on a truck with seven-foot panels that can be raised. The three-week, cross-country tour allows people to see the bronze, 6-foot 8-inch statue of three military women caring for a soldier, before it reaches its permanent home in Washington.

Originally, there were 21 cities scheduled, with Wichita being the only stop in Kansas. However, Roy Williams, vice commander of the Department of Kansas Veterans of Foreign Wars, went to extra efforts to get the statue to stop for an hour Saturday night in Junction City.

"This may not be the biggest crowd, but it is damn sure the most dedicated," Williams said.

The crowd of about 50 people yelled and clapped in response.

Men who have been in Vietnam and have been around these women know what they did, Williams said.

"I spent some time in those hospitals and have seen them in action. This should have happened a long time ago," he said.

Williams isn't the only one who said he felt the memorial has been long overdue.

Charles Gillespie, Vietnam veteran, said he will never forget what the women did for him when he spent 25 months in the war.

"I was wounded eight different times. Once I had a high fever, and things weren't looking well," said Gillespie, who was an infantryman during Vietnam in 1966. "A young nurse stayed by my bed for three days and nights caring for me. I can remember hearing her call my name and telling me I had to wake up. After I left the hospital, I never saw or heard from her again, but I will never forget her.

"I have been totally amazed that nothing was being done to recognize these ladies," he said. "Women were some of the first ones there and some of the last ones to leave."

During the one-hour ceremony, many individuals stepped forward and expressed similar feelings.

David Collins, Kansas coordinator for the Vietnam Memorial project, said he wasn't just concerned with representing the 11,500 women who served in Vietnam, but he was also concerned with representing the 365,000 women who voluntarily served in the military during the Vietnam era through military groups such as the Red Cross and Catholic Relief Services.

"We wish to acknowledge not only the few women who have their names on the wall, but the 20 civilian women who died in Vietnam and all those women who helped with their service," Collins said.

After Collins' statement, he asked for those women who had served during Vietnam to step forward and be recognized.

At least eight women stepped forward and said how they served during the war. The crowd responded after each one with clapping and cheering. One man yelled out, "Welcome home, ladies," which received tremendous applause.

One woman said she served in the U.S. Army between 1973 and 1977.

"I can't tell you what it really means to finally be recognized," she said. "This really means a lot to me."

Lynda Waldrok, Southern Central United States coordinator of the tour, and Joyce Stotler, who is the oldest technician in the Oklahoma National Guard, traveled with the statue from Oklahoma to Wichita to Junction City. Both of them had served in Vietnam.

"Now, we've got to go back home, and we want to stay with her," Stotler said.

The Whistle Stop Tour kicked off on Aug. 28 in Santa Fe, New Mexico, with an artist send-off by sculptor Glenna Goodacre, and will end in Washington, where the statue will be dedicated on Veterans Day alongside the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Spanking kids in school won't stop growing violence

The way to discipline children in our public school system is not to try to reach their brains through the seats of their pants.

In a move that is becoming popular among child experts, Bob Keeshan, better known as "Captain Kangaroo," recently praised North Carolina's efforts in reducing corporal punishment in schools, saying "I'm opposed to corporal punishment because it just doesn't work."

For too long, we have allowed a barbaric form of discipline to take place in our schools. Kansas is among the states that still allow teachers and school administrators to raise a hand against students in the name of order.

Spanking is the easiest, but most ineffective form of discipline. It only temporarily stops the undesired behavior; it does nothing to teach the child a more desirable behavior.

It also negatively affects the respect children have for themselves and for others. Children who achieve the most and behave the best in school are the ones whose self-esteem hasn't been slapped out of them.

People will respond to aggression with aggression. Spanking is a simple case of adults modeling violence to children.

It is a great paradox that we preach against violence in our schools, then use that violence as a way to keep children in line. It is no wonder our kids are shooting each other, such as one student in Junction City did last week.

Educated adults cannot expect children to respond to frustration non-violently when adults can't even do it themselves.

Call it a guide to a more shallow you

Two things so struck me while reading this month's episode of Cosmopolitan that I had to shout them out to my roommate in the other room.

"Hey, this model is naked. They can't do that, can they?" I said, knowing full well they could. "Look. Her right breast is just sitting right here for all the world to see, right between 'Dieter's Notebook' and 'What's New in Makeup.'"

Oh, the irony.

I don't know where I was when the powers-that-be changed the rules, but suddenly there are a lot of naked people in magazine ads.

The other thing that struck me was not new. "Why in the hell do I read these magazines? Can you tell me that?" I yelled into the kitchen.

No answer.

I don't know why I thought she could shed light on what I've failed for years to understand myself.

I'm not sure I'll ever know what possesses me when I near the register at the grocery store or see one of my roommate's copies laying around the house. It's the same kind of thing that overtakes me when I consciously choose to watch "Entertainment Tonight" or "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" instead of "Jeopardy" or the news.

I'm no snob. I enjoy it. I like to watch soap operas, even though I cover up half of the dialogue with comments like, "Branch? What kind of name is Branch?" or "Right! Now they've gone too far. Not even Alexis would wear silk crepe to the jungle."

When I read Cosmo, I either have to be alone, or if there are others around, I have to make fun of everything I read. And you don't have to be a rocket scientist to find things to mock.

Just peruse the table of contents if you don't believe me.

This month: "Magical Sex: Something Worth Waiting For," "Now That He Finally Has You, Why Doesn't He Want You?" and "The Goddess Regime: To Get in Shape Fast A Girl Has to Suffer."

Or how about the ever-popular lasso-a-lover series.

This month's chapter is called "How to Get the Man You Want," and it, not Kate Moss' breast, got me going.

LAJEAN RAU

It's bad enough that I have to read letters to the editor that start, "I find eye shadow confusing. Could you recommend a simple routine?" but I have to endure articles about how to trick men into wanting to go out with me.

In the first few paragraphs, I'm told to be "warm and attentive" and expect my man to want to make my life "more comfortable and exciting."

Sounds kinda fishy, but I read on.

The next thing you know, I'm being told 10 "proven techniques" to make the prospective mate I've picked out fall for me. I hope to read about honesty, respect and the like.

Instead, the advice is painfully familiar.

"Cultivate 'The Look.'" is No. 1. The look, I gather, is a doting stare when talking to potential Mr. Right. In the author's words, "If I could give you just one bit of advice on how to develop a relationship with a man ... it would be these two words: Be attentive."

There's that word again, "attentive." What exactly does that mean?

It soon becomes clear. A few gems:

Under No. 2, "The Art of Conversation," I'm taught to center all conversations around Mr. Right and pretend to be fascinated by everything he says.

In No. 4, "'I'm Game,'" I'm told the story of Lyn who, when asked out by a man who wanted to take her hunting, turned him down because she adamantly opposed shooting animals. How silly, the author writes. She should have swallowed her values and gone.

In No. 9, "The Art of Compromise," I learned to always let him choose the restaurant, vacation spot, etc. so as to have the upper hand when "big issues" come up.

In No. 3, "Flattery Will Get You Almost Anywhere," the author writes, "Men haven't come as far as women have when it comes to self-esteem or inner strength," so coddle, pander and fib. It's for your own good.

No thanks. People with self-esteem and inner strength disagree.

Next month, I'll read GQ or Details and see how the other half lives.

Time Warner Bros. had right to can Ice-T's "Cop Killer"

Words have an exact meaning.

However, not all people want to make the effort required to grasp these meanings. That's unfortunate, because it clears up so many nasty issues when you realize that your opponents' entire position is flawed because they have failed to invest in a pocket dictionary.

There's one misconception that really gets to me. There is a popular notion floating around that says Mr. Smith can censor Mr. Jones because Mr. Smith is rich, white, or has power. Nothing could be more wrong.

"You can't censor me" is the battle cry of the people who demand air time, ad space or funding for causes the alleged "censor" finds repugnant.

Nobody censors anybody else unless one party is the government. It's just not possible in a free society.

Unfortunately, censorship is such a powerful word that any delusional self-perceived victim can use it, and everyone will automatically assume that all constitutional liberty is at risk.

They forget to look beyond the gut reaction and remember that censorship is an exact term with an exact, definable meaning. This is a hard concept to grasp for people who are bent on redefining the English language for their own ends. Look at Ice-T.

I once saw Ice-T perform live, so I perked up my ears when everyone started making noise about his song "Cop Killer."

What eventually happened was that his recording label, the company he works for, fired him. Adios, Cop Killer, said Warner Brothers. What happened next was predictable.

Ice-T, defender of freedom in America, or as he calls it, AmeriKKKa, cried censorship. Corporate censorship, he labeled it.

Corporate censorship, eh? Doesn't exist. Can't exist. Sorry.

SARA SMITH

When Warner Bros. dropped Ice-T from its label because of "Cop Killer," it was not an act of censorship. It was their prerogative.

They are a private business. They may hire or fire whomever they wish for their own reasons. If the federal government had told Ice-T or Time Warner Bros. not to release the song, that would have been censorship.

Time Warner Bros. did not censor Ice-T. They simply fired him. They did not take away any of his rights, because they are not responsible for providing or protecting any of his rights, such as his constitutional right to free speech. The only way one private citizen can violate another private citizen's rights is through the use of illegal manipulation or brute force.

That Ice-T retained his free speech is evident. He can sign on with another label, start his own company and employ himself, or stand on the street corner and scream about killing abusive police officers. The only thing he can't do is receive a paycheck from Time Warner Bros., and there's nothing in the Constitution about that.

Freedom of speech was threatened, but what was at risk was Time Warner Bros.' freedom of speech. (Yes, corporations also have rights.) The freedom of speech of private individuals or corporations includes their absolute right not to agree with, listen to or finance their enemies.

What Time Warner Bros. appropriately did was make a gesture to the effect that Ice-T can sing about whatever he wants. Just not with their money and not on their label.

Mr. Robertson will make a fine addition to '93 Landon Lecture

Editor,

I am writing in response to James Hamilton's letter in the Aug. 30 edition of the Collegian in which he announces his disapproval that Pat Robertson will be the first Landon Lecturer for 1993-94. He explains that Pat Robertson failed to obtain his party's nomination for president and then sarcastically suggests that the Landon Lecture Series invite other notable figures who have the same first name as Pat and failed to gain a nomination for president.

His inappropriate, belittling remarks lack substance and are especially disturbing in light of his title, associate professor of Philosophy. He seems to submit that those who unsuccessfully contend for their party's nomination for president should be forever denoted as failures — especially if their first names begin with Pat — and therefore, should not be given invitation to speak.

The Landon Lecture Series consistently attracts prominent figures and is acclaimed for its tradition of hosting distinguished speakers. Pat Robertson is no exception.

With only a little research, I uncovered quite a bit of constructive biographical information. For example, he received his bachelor's degree from Washington and Lee University, his master's of divinity from New York Theological Seminary and his doctor of jurisprudence from Yale University. He is founder and chairman of the Christian Broadcasting Network (CBN), which televises the Family Channel and the daily news program he hosts, the "700 Club." He is founder and chancellor of Regent University, a fully accredited graduate university that offers studies in media, law, public policy and related disciplines. He has authored several successful books and is the founder for the American Center for Law and Justice and the Christian Coalition. His powerful business credentials and his political affiliations continue to keep him informed and influential.

I look forward to attending this year's Landon Lecture Series and am especially delighted that Pat Robertson will be the first distinguished speaker. I hope that all that can attend will, as his lecture should prove to be interesting and thought-provoking.

Columnist should just stick with story and leave religion alone

Editor,

I am writing to address what I feel were unfair statements toward religion in Lola Shrimplin's column in the Sept. 3 Collegian concerning the shooting of Dr. Tiller. The theme of her column was that doctors should not be shot for performing abortions. In this case, it doesn't go without saying, I completely agree with her.

But, while reading the column, I felt a bias against religion with which I completely disagree and found unnerving.

To quote Shrimplin, "Let's face it – religion isn't exactly based in reason, and reason isn't based in religion." Oh, really? We humans can't even solve problems dealing with our own little world, and yet there is an entire universe beyond us. Is it really unreasonable to believe something greater than ourselves was responsible for it? I think not.

Later, Shrimplin states, "All through history, people have been doing things because "God" told them to. The crusades, the inquisitions, the witch trials — and now killing or maiming doctors." Talk about giving religion a bad rap. The vast majority of people acting on behalf of God commit their lives to helping the poor, feeding the hungry and helping people to be considerate of others.

Most of the things that have been done in the name of God have helped to better our society. I believe there is a direct link between the deterioration of our social fabric (crimes, drugs, etc.) and the anti-religious attitudes that seem to be popping up everywhere.

I do not think Shrimplin is personally responsible for the breakdown in religious values. The attack on Dr. Tiller is certainly a justifiable grievance. It is just that so many people in the media portray religious beliefs in a negative light. When was the last time you heard somebody in the media say something nice about religion? I feel it's time people are reminded the purpose of religion is to benefit society, and the majority of religious efforts do just that.

Diversity demands that each person see world, Bible in their own light

Editor,

I would like to thank J.R. Potter for letting us know that he holds the absolute and supreme understanding of the Bible and, it seems, of life itself, with no room for another person's perspective.

I hope that Mr. Potter learns through his studies at K-State that others do have opinions and beliefs that differ from his own. This includes interpretation of the Bible and that there are other sacred books in the world, meaning that some people do not even accept the Bible as he does.

I would suggest that Mr. Potter try using the phrase "I believe" and not expect everyone to agree with him.

Since he is in political science, he might understand that what this country has been built on and admired for is its use of democratic ideals. This includes the principle that, even though the majority might rule and make laws, it is not at the expense of minority rights. Those rights come from the legal system, not the imposition of one religion's perspective.

In case he didn't notice, diversity is part of what we are. While it causes us grief at times, it is also one of our greatest strengths. Mr. Potter is not perfect — no one is. He should get over it.

Campus tours help K-State recruitment

Guides answer questions, provide University history

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Prospective students and their parents envision student life at K-State through the eyes of tour guides.

New Student Services provides various services, including campus tours, to prospective students, alumni and special guests.

"We schedule appointments for prospective students with academic advisers, ROTC, multicultural student programs, residence halls and the student government," Gary Pierson, assistant director of New Student Services, said.

From July 1992 to June 1993, Pierson said there were more than 9,000 visitors directed through his office.

Pierson's office employs 15 student workers, who schedule appointments for prospective students with admissions representatives, academic advisers and campus tours.

Stan Stadig, junior in pre-physical therapy, gives tours at one of three times each day. He said the tour is typically 30 minutes long to view campus and a typical size lecture hall, or an hour when visiting the residence halls.

"My first tour was two hours long because the people asked so many questions," Stadig said. "I learned from a script to give a brief history of the buildings. As time goes along, I learn more and more information to share with the students."

Besides providing a brief history of K-State, tour guides also answer questions concerning student life.

"Females usually ask how long it will take them to find their way around campus," Becky Keller, junior in general human ecology, said. "Guys don't ask questions — their moms do. The most popular question is the male-to-female ratio."

Although Keller has given many tours, she said she still enjoys visiting with prospective students and offering them personal insight.

"My favorite part is watching the students because I get to see the University again through their eyes, almost like my first time," Keller said.

Stadig said a campus tour is essential for prospective students.

"A campus visit is one of the most important ways to find out what the University is like," he said. "Any impression a tour guide gives is crucial in recruiting the students to K-State."

Students suffer from fall allergies

Lafene clinic overloaded due to hay fever symptoms

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

The season of ragweed has hit K-State with full force.

Ragweed is the most common cause of allergies experienced by northeast Kansans. A more common name for this allergic reaction to pollens in the air is hay fever.

Lafene Health Center has had an overload of patients with allergy problems.

"They are coming in droves," Dr. Daniel Martin said.

Two-thirds of the patients who have received treatment due to allergies have been allergic to ragweed, he said.

"If they are going to be allergic to anything, it is probably going to be ragweed," Martin said.

There are 40 million allergy sufferers in the United States. Twenty percent of those are sufferers of ragweed.

The symptoms of hay fever include sneezing, runny nose, watery eyes and sore throat. The ragweed season starts around the middle of August and stays until the first frost.

Allergies usually begin in childhood, but some allergy cases are known not to have an effect until adulthood. Heredity is often a factor. If both parents are sensitive to some allergens, then chances are good the child also will develop an allergy.

"My dad had allergies. So, I must have inherited them from him," Amy Lucas, senior in advertising, said.

The symptoms most acknowledged by students are fatigue, which may be induced by medication, and a congested nose and head.

"I feel tired a lot," Aaron Meek, junior in biology, said. "This season is especially bad for me."

Emotions are a cause for an allergy attack, according to Allergies and You information, available at Lafene.

"Sometimes my allergies are worse when I have a heavy study load and I am stressed," Amy Boydston, junior in pre-nursing, said.

"They are driving me crazy this year," Taylor Gatz, sophomore in archeology said. "They seem to bother me more in Manhattan."

WORK SMARTER. NOT HARDER.

We're working smarter, too. So you don't have to work harder.

For us, it means an ongoing relationship with educators and professors, striving to understand what's needed to help them make math concepts come alive.

It means continually working with students like you, discovering firsthand what you expect from the calculator you select.

The result? Calculators that are highly recommended by your teachers and peers. Calculators that are perfectly matched to your major and your coursework.

The TI-81 is a perfect example. It offers the most comprehensive, easy-to-use graphing features available with extensive programming capabilities.

And there are others.

Like the TI-68, an advanced scientific that solves up to five simultaneous equations, performs complex numbers and offers formula programming.

The TI-36X SOLAR, a general purpose workhorse powered by ANYLITE™ solar cells so you never need batteries.

The BA II PLUS.™ For business students, this is the one to get. It handles time-value-of-money and offers cash flow analysis for internal rate of return (IRR) and net present value (NPV).

Plus a whole lot more.

No matter what your major, no matter what the course, there's a TI scientific or business calculator that's right for you. Do the smart thing: make one of them a part of your professional personality now, and for the years to come.

You'll be on your way to working smarter. Instead of harder.

May initiated in 34-10 victory

Transfer hits 17 of 30 passes in season opener

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Chad May is just glad to get No. 1 out of the way.

The junior transfer quarterback made his debut for the Wildcats Saturday, Sept. 4, leading K-State to a 34-10 win against New Mexico State at KSU Stadium.

"I'm not so much satisfied with my performance, but I'm glad to get the win under my belt," said May, who set a personal collegiate best, completing 17 of 30 passes for 228 yards. "And, I got the first game out of the way in a year and a half. So, in that aspect, I feel a lot more comfortable."

May said he was anxious to put any doubts to rest about his ability and to make the team feel more comfortable with its new quarterback.

"I think it was very important," May said of the need of a win to solidify his position and ability. "Especially after nobody has seen me around here, everybody probably had their doubts about me. I think it was real important for the team, since they had somebody else last year."

The Cats took their initial drive 80 yards, scoring on J.J. Smith's one-yard run and taking a 7-0 lead with 8:38 remaining in the first quarter. After taking a 10-7 lead at halftime, K-State scored once in the third quarter and added 17 more points in the final period.

Although May completed 57 percent of his passes with no interceptions, he still said it should have been better.

"I'm kind of a hard critic," May said. "I think I should have completed 80 percent of my passes."

Coach Bill Snyder said May made some understandable mistakes, considering it was his first game in the Big Eight.

"He made some mistakes, and he's got a lot of improvement in front of him," Snyder said. "But by the same token, I think he got the first game out of the way. And that's not just the first game, but the first game in a major conference across the country. I'm not really concerned that he let some balls get away from him."

And despite the opening-day victory, the Cats' fourth straight, Snyder said the Wildcats lacked consistency.

"I think we are a little better football team than we showed today," said Snyder, whose Wildcats have won the past four openers. "I thought we were inconsistent a good portion of the time. I think we did some things that can get football teams beat."

For instance, K-State was kept out of the end zone after Kevin Lockett made an acrobatic catch to give the Cats a first and goal on the three-yard line. New Mexico State took over on a loss of downs inside the one-yard line.

In the second quarter, Rod Schiller, who finished with 102 yards rushing and one touchdown, had a 12-yard touchdown run revoked on an illegal motion

The K-State receivers made catching the ball and running after the reception look easy in Saturday's 34-10 win over New Mexico State at KSU Stadium.

The foursome of Kevin Lockett, Mitch Running, Andre Coleman and Brad Seib combined for 228 yards receiving.

Add on the 115 yards in punt returns by Coleman — beating the school record by Gene Gill's 111-yard mark against Baker in 1950 — and the group totaled 343 yards.

Lockett, a red-shirt freshman, led the receiving corps with seven receptions for 92 yards, followed by Running with 72 yards on six catches, Coleman with three receptions for 57 yards and Seib with a catch for seven yards.

Coach Bill Snyder said Lockett had a good performance.

Computer drawings for the 1993 deer hunters' regular firearms permits are complete, and hunters should already know if they were successful.

Archery seasons for deer and turkey open Oct. 1.

Hunters who did not fare so well in the regular 1993 firearms permit drawings may find themselves sitting atop a tree stand waiting for that one big buck. The time has come for all the archery hunters (and unlucky rifle hunters) to start target shooting.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

The off-season may have proven to change the sights on your bows.

Find a place to set up a bale or a foam target and shoot. Shoot. Shoot.

Go out in the woods and start practicing judging distances. Stop and look around for activity. The deer are out moving around, and with soft ground their movements are easier to track.

Get better with your bow, and bring that together with your growing ability to judge distances. Then your chances of bagging a deer with your bow will improve tremendously.

Remember that shooting at different angles from your target will also be helpful in simulating a target in the field.

Try shooting from a tree stand, a roof or other elevated surface. Your sights will change as the elevation of your target changes.

There are those hunters without a bow, who weren't lucky enough to get a tag. So I attempted to find them an alternative.

I did.

I came across a fax from the Kansas Wildlife and Parks in Pratt.

Unfamiliar with leftover permits?

A total of 4,327 were left over after the regular firearms drawing. These permits allow hunters to hunt certain types of deer, according to their unit.

The leftover permits are being issued in drawings. (The first drawing is today.)

Hunters who did not apply for the regular firearms permit are eligible to apply for a leftover permit. Applications are available at regional and state park offices of the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

Archery turkey tags are also available in these offices. It may be to your advantage to pick one up in addition to a deer permit. You never know when you will find yourself set up in the middle of a fall flock.

BIG EIGHT FOOTBALL

Nebraska checks out depth after injuries

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nebraska got an unexpected opportunity to find out how deep it is.

The ninth-ranked Huskers lost quarterback Tommie Frazier on the second play of the North Texas game. Early in the second half, I-Back Calvin Jones sprained his knee.

The subs did OK as Nebraska went on to beat North Texas 76-14 on Saturday.

Second-string quarterback Brook Berringer came on to hit all seven of his pass attempts, including a 33-yard touchdown to Corey Dixon on Nebraska's first possession. He also ran for two scores.

"I didn't have time to get nervous," he said. "I was surprised for a minute, then I just put my helmet on and went in."

In other Big Eight games, Kansas bounced back from its Kickoff Classic loss to beat Western Carolina 42-3; No. 10 Colorado took advantage of turnovers to beat Texas in Boulder 36-14; and No. 17 Oklahoma stopped Texas Christian 35-3.

Oklahoma State opens next Saturday against Southwest Missouri State in Stillwater, while Missouri plays its first game against Illinois in Columbia.

Berringer split time with Tony Veland at quarterback after Frazier was hurt. Veland hit six of nine passes, throwing one for a score and running for another.

"I was pleased with Brook Berringer and Tony Veland," Cornhuskers coach Tom Osborne said. "I was pleased with their composure to come into that situation. I think they were expecting to come in when it would be something like 35-0."

That kind of score would have been a blessing to North Texas coach Dennis Parker.

"It was a real nightmare," he said. "I've never coached a good loss. I've coached a long time, and 76-14 is bad. I had one that was 33-32, and I thought that was worse. It was tough on me because I was stupid enough to think we could come in here and win it."

Kansas was on a mission after the loss to Florida State, and Western Carolina was unfortunate enough to get in the way.

Kansas quarterback Fred Thomas turned in a credible performance, starting the rout with a 75-yard touchdown pass to tight end Dwayne Chandler for a 13-0 lead in the second quarter. Chandler was wide open over the middle, but Thomas laid the ball nicely into his hands for a catch at full stride.

Dan Eichloff, who missed two field goals in the Jayhawks' 42-0 loss to No. 1 Florida State a week earlier in the Kickoff Classic, matched his career high for the third time by kicking four against the Catamounts.

"I think to a certain extent, we're capable of playing better, but I also think Western Carolina is capable of playing better," Kansas coach Glen Mason said. "They're a team that normally plays about like my team does."

In Boulder, Colo., Texas turned the ball over six times, four times in Colorado's end of the field.

The Buffaloes, who struggled through the first quarter, turned two of the turnovers into touchdowns as Kordell Stewart threw three first-half touchdown passes.

Oklahoma struck for three touchdowns in six minutes of the second quarter to beat TCU in Fort Worth.

Cale Gundy, Oklahoma's most prolific passer ever, threw for 194 yards by halftime and finished with 16 of 24 for 246 yards and no interceptions.

"I'm very proud of my offensive line," Gibbs said. "It's difficult to play against a defensive team that blitzes a lot, but we came through and gave Gundy time to pass."

LEFTOVER DEER PERMITS

The leftover permits can be used for an archery tag starting Oct. 1. They also can be used for firearms seasons if it isn't filled during the archery season.

Unit 1: Whitetail buck only (82 permits).
Unit 6: Any deer (209) and muzzleloader any deer (12).
Unit 10: Buck only (1,114).
Unit 11: Antlerless only (389).
Unit 12: Any deer (947) and muzzleloader any deer (23)
Unit 13: Any deer (349) and muzzleloader (4).
Unit 14: Antlerless only (983).

Montana's bruised wrist provokes scare

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — More than a few hearts skipped a beat when Joe Montana was escorted to the X-ray machine with a wounded throwing hand.

Hearts like that of Kansas City Chiefs president Carl Peterson, the man who probably took this season's biggest NFL gamble when he traded for Montana and signed him to a three-year contract.

Hearts like Paul Hackett's, the Chiefs offensive coordinator who was watching from the press box. Hearts like coach Marty Schottenheimer's, who has pinned his Super Bowl hopes on that wrist.

"I tried not to overreact until I heard," Hackett said after Kansas City and Montana opened the season with a 27-3 victory over Tampa Bay Sunday. "But I might have jumped out of the press box if all of a sudden they said there was something wrong."

Montana suffered a bruised right wrist in the third quarter when his hand connected with the helmet of Tampa Bay linebacker Broderick Thomas. The injury came on yet another perfectly thrown pass that Willie Davis dropped in the end zone.

Nonplussed, Montana threw a 12-yard touchdown pass to Marcus Allen on the next play before leaving the game with the Chiefs leading 24-3.

"I knew it wasn't that bad because I threw the next pass," Montana said. "I could've kept throwing, and I probably could have gone back in. I just told them it was a little sore, and it was starting to swell a little, and they wanted to grab some X-rays."

It was a day that Montana threw precisely — everything and more that Peterson and Hackett could have hoped for, even though the Bucs showed they have a long way to go before becoming competitive.

Montana completed his first nine passes and finished 14-of-21 for 246 yards and three touchdowns.

"No way we're going to put him back in there," Peterson said. "I told Marty we ought to have an automatic rule that Joe doesn't play if we're up by 21 points in the second half."

Montana will be back Sunday when the Chiefs play Houston.

Receivers handle 'flutterball'

"Just like everyone on the field, he had a few mistakes," Snyder said. "But overall, he played all right. He caught the ball well and got the ball up the field when he caught it. He plays with great enthusiasm."

The first reception for Lockett was the third play of the game from quarterback Chad May. It went for 15 yards, and Lockett said he was glad to get the first catch out of the way.

"I was trying to get the first one behind me," Lockett said. "It was such a high. From there on, I tried to catch everything that came my way."

The next pass to Lockett came on K-State's next drive. Facing third down and four yards to go at the Aggies' 40-yard line, Lockett leaped to catch the "flutterball" — as Snyder called it — from May for a 38-yard reception.

Lockett said they try to catch those passes in practice.

"We sort of do it in practices," said Lockett, who has a 34-inch vertical leap. "In game situations, it's a one-on-one, and you have to jump for the ball."

Snyder said May might had been jittery when he threw the passes.

"Chad was a little bit nervous," he said. "Sometimes he threw the ball well, and other times he threw balls that got away from him. I would like to tell you we practice that, but we don't. He didn't try to throw them that way."

Snyder said Coleman performed well.

"I would like to say Andre did some good things," Snyder said. "He jumped up and caught a couple of those flutterballs from Chad. He did a nice job in the return game, but he dropped two passes early in the game. I think he was just keyed up."

Coleman said he was glad to be thrown to after mishandling a couple of passes.

"I lost my concentration on the second pass," he said of one of his two first-quarter drops. "I was trying too hard. "The coaches have great confidence in me to go back to me. I don't apologize for what happened. I have the attitude now not to drop any more passes."

Snyder said the punt return team and Coleman did a good job forwarding the ball after the reception.

"Andre has led the conference before in kick-off returns," he said. "He has good speed and can catch the ball. But's that just one guy. A lot of things have got to take place. A lot of people have got to block, and it's an 11-man game."

Coleman's 74-yard punt return for the touchdown in the fourth quarter was the first return for a touchdown since Charlie Green went 73 yards against Colorado in 1978.

"We work hard on it, and it obviously worked out," Snyder said.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Brett to decide on return by last Royals homestand

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — George Brett, who turned 40 this season, said Monday he would decide by the last homestand of the season if he would return for another year.

Brett said he had discussed next season with Royals manager Herk Robinson.

"Herk said we want you to come back if you want to come back," Brett said.

"If I want to come back, I can. I'm going to have to make that decision."

Brett, who is in the option year of his contract, said he would make a decision by the time of the homestand that begins Sept. 24.

Brett, who is in his 20th season and has never worn a uniform other than the Royals, will be offered an executive position with the team when he retires.

Brett thought about retiring after getting his 3,000 hit in the last week of last season. He waited through the winter to announce his decision after having a misunderstanding with the late Royals owner Ewing Kauffman.

Kauffman apparently suggested that Brett should retire after getting the 3,000 hit, and Brett took offense. Kauffman, who died earlier this year, later issued a public apology to Brett.

Brett is hitting .261 with 15 homers and 59 runs batted in. Manager Hal McRae asked Brett to hit for more power this season, and his homer total is the most since he hit 24 in 1988.

Brett, who was given six standing ovations during a weekend series in Boston this year, became only the third player in major league history with 3,000 hits, 300 homers and 200 stolen bases.

"I'm glad I came back and tried it one more time, because I've had a lot of fun this year and we're in a pennant race," Brett said.

Cats deliver in 2nd half

With 40 seconds remaining in the first half, New Mexico State regained possession after May fumbled on first and 10. Aggie quarterback Cory Ledbetter scurried 39 yards up the middle for the Aggies' only touchdown with no time on the clock, slicing the Cats' 10-0 lead to 10-7 at the break.

"It was just like a quarterback draw," Snyder said. "And we have to be a better football team of being able to play that kind of thing as well as a quarterback draw. Obviously, we did a good job with coverage, but we didn't do a very good job of being able to collapse back, and we didn't tackle well.

"I was a little concerned, because we went in the locker room and it changed the momentum, if there was any at that time. I was hoping there would be a quick change of emotion to try to offset the letdown that took place, and it took awhile for it to come."

It didn't come in the locker room, but on the field in the second half.

K-State scored one touchdown in the third period before reeling off another 17 in the final quarter, while holding the Aggies to just a field goal in the fourth.

The Cats now lead the series with New Mexico State 3-0, but as far as Aggie coach Jim Hess is concerned, the series is over."I hope so, unless they pay more money," Hess said of whether Saturday's game would end the series.

"We can go get beat at Auburn for $330,000."

Lights result of safety survey

J.R PRATHER
Collegian

Anderson Hall received six recycled streetlamps last week as part of an effort to increase safety on campus.

Mark Taussig, University landscape architect, said the six new streetlamps were added as part of the facility department's continuing process of taking out unsafe sidewalks, making new sidewalks more accessible to wheelchairs and improving campus illumination.

He said it was easier to put in the lamps while the sidewalks were being constructed.

"We've had complaints that the campus is unsafe at night and that it's not adequately lit," Taussig said.

Randy Slover, director of facilities planning and maintenance, said the lamps were put in front of Anderson Hall after a campus-wide survey was conducted to decide where better lighting was needed.

Slover said the total cost of the streetlamps is $4,500, but the lamp poles used were not new.

"Some of them are lights taken from other locations where they have been replaced," Slover said. "We've repainted them and put on new globes."

Taussig said some of the posts had been put in storage, and some were taken from sidewalks near Holton and Denison halls.

The streetlamps were chosen so they would not interfere with the architectural design of Anderson Hall, Taussig said.

"Anderson Hall is one of our older buildings. We wanted to use lights in keeping with the older style," he said.

"They look nice," Slover said. "The poles are the old poles, not the new metal, blah tubular ones you see in other places."

Cameras monitor lot

Besides improved lighting, the lot is also monitored by two cameras, which are screened at the police station.

Eight cameras monitor areas throughout the campus, and the camera system flashes to a different camera every 12 seconds, Howard said.

With this time lapse, there is a possibility the cameras did not record the incident.

"It's likely the cameras didn't see anything," he said.

There are two cameras that monitor the parking lot. Normally they are reviewed by the investigations department the day after an incident, he said.

It is standard procedure for the police or hall staff to contact the Women's Resource Center when this type of incident occurs, Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said.

"I'm on call for any woman in crisis," she said.

"Fortunately she's physically just fine," Davis said after counseling the victim.

Staff for campus residence halls are trained to refer students who have been through this type of situation to other campus services, said Heather Braden, junior in chemistry and resident assistant in Goodnow.

Residents in campus housing had not been officially informed of the attack, Braden said.

Braden said they would eventually be informed and residents would be urged to use the escort services.

The escort service is important in twilight hours as well as in the darkness, she said.

"Whenever you need an escort, do it. It's not a cheesy thing to do," Braden said.

This situation was at twilight, and it is just as important to call then for an escort, she said.

Braden said she had a program last week on campus safety. Attendance at the program was low, she said.

▶World Bank studies girls' education

WASHINGTON — Educating girls as well as boys may be the best investment developing countries can make in their futures, according to a new study by the World Bank.

Women with an elementary education raise the living standard in a poor country, said Elizabeth King, one of the study's authors. They have fewer children, take better care of those they do have, work better at home and earn more when they take a job or market their own crops, she said.

"Once all the benefits are recognized, investment in the education of girls may well be the highest-return investment available in the developing world," Summers wrote.

There are obstacles in many countries to girls getting into school and staying there, King said in an interview.

Many parents feel they cannot afford the cost of sending a girl to school, King said.

Modern cattle drive traces Chisholm Trail

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WAUKOMIS, Okla. — The cattle are rolling once again as 300 Texas Longhorns are on the trail to Kansas.

Cattle were a common sight along the Chisholm Trail more than a century ago. It was in use from 1867 to 1889, as millions of cattle were driven north from Hennessey through Enid and Grant counties in Oklahoma to railroad stops in Kansas.

The average size of a herd then was 2,000 to 3,000 head of cattle. And it was customary for one cowboy to be responsible for 300 cattle.

But for the 1993 Chisholm Trail Cattle Drive that is scheduled to end next weekend at Caldwell, there is one cowboy for every three longhorns.

About 5,000 people gathered this weekend to see 300 Texas Longhorns begin the trek to Kansas. Spectators were warned to stand aside as the animals walked a four-block stretch of downtown Waukomis.

A public address announcer also pleaded with spectators not to wave hats or papers, and especially not to shoot any guns as the cattle paraded by.

The crowd, which earlier had watched a parade to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Sept. 16, 1893, Cherokee Strip Land Run, started getting restless for the cattle and cowboys to arrive.

Volunteers walked up and down the street to make sure people stayed behind the sidewalks. Local police and highway patrol troopers also warned people to keep off the cattle route.

Finally, 15 covered wagons could be seen arriving in the south part of town.

The public address announcer issued a few more warnings, including a new advisory to restrain from applauding, before turning his sound system off as a safety precaution.

The cow punchers broke their herd into three groups to better control the cattle as they slowly plodded through downtown, not paying much attention to the people nearby.

The spectators also behaved. They made no sudden motions or loud noises. And no one fired a gun.

Gore plan addresses efficiency

Proposal reduces workforce, closes federal offices

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — To capitalize on public outrage over government waste, the White House is touching up plans that will save $108 billion over five years by reshaping the federal bureaucracy, administration officials said.

The leaner government envisioned by Vice President Al Gore also would include 252,000 fewer workers.

His upcoming report to President Clinton, called the National Performance Review, recommends buyouts and early retirement for employees whose services are no longer needed, said White House officials who spoke Sunday on condition of anonymity.

The administration wants to eliminate or consolidate scores of wasteful programs, allow the private sector to compete for government business, cut red tape that saddles efficient federal workers and expand the use of modern office technologies — such as computers — to improve efficiency.

The report, scheduled to be unveiled Tuesday, is certain to draw opposition from federal employees who may lose their jobs and from lawmakers who oversee programs on Gore's hit list.

White House officials are betting the changes will be popular with the voters.

An Associated Press poll shows that 95 percent of Americans think government wastes too much money. The average American thinks 37 percent of the $1.5 trillion federal budget could realistically be cut as wasteful, according to the poll.

If implemented, Gore's plan would reduce the federal work force by 12 percent, bringing it below the 2 million mark for the first time since 1966.

It is unclear how much money would be saved by the reduction in workers. Officials said $22 billion of the $108 billion in projected savings would come from changing the way government buys supplies and services. Another $5.4 billion would be saved by modernizing the government's computer and information services and $3.3 billion by simplifying paperwork for grant programs to state and local governments.

Here are some of the expected recommendations:

■ Conduct an 18-month review and report to Congress on closing and consolidating civilian federal offices. "Members of Congress like to keep offices open, not because they serve customers but because they provide jobs," according to a draft of the report.

■ Eliminate the Food Safety and Inspection Service by consolidating all food safety responsibilities under the Food and Drug Administration.

■ Transfer law enforcement functions of the Drug Enforcement Administration to the FBI.

■ Allow agencies greater freedom in setting fees for services, such as food service inspections or access to national parks.

■ Make it a felony to knowingly lie on an application for federal benefits.

■ Allow people to pay taxes by credit card.

■ Reduce the number of managers in the bureaucracy from an average of one for every seven workers to one for every 15.

■ Study how to extend electronic mail to every agency and to every employee. "Every federal employee should be reachable by e-mail," the draft reads.

■ Set funding ceilings for each agency and extend the federal budget cycle from one to two years to allow for more continuity and better planning.

Custody case may set precident for gay rights

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Gay-rights advocates are closely watching a potential landmark case in Virginia, where a judge this week will consider whether a woman may retain custody of her lesbian daughter's 2-year-old son.

It is a highly unusual custody battle because it pits a nonparent against a mother whose only alleged parental shortcoming has been her sexual relationship. A trial is scheduled for Tuesday in Henrico County Circuit Court.

Sharon Bottoms, 23, lives with her partner, 27-year-old April Wade. Kay Bottoms, 42, contends this fact makes her daughter unfit to be a mother.

"The question is whether a parent should be disqualified because of sexual orientation or lifestyle," said Donald Butler, Sharon Bottoms' lawyer. "We don't think the law should allow people to lose a child on that basis."

A different answer to the question Butler posed comes from Anne Kincaid, spokeswoman for the Family Foundation, a conservative Virginia group that says it has 30,000 members.

"Is it discrimination based on sexual orientation, or is it child protection based on the mother's sexual behavior?" she said. "It looks like there would be a compelling state interest to protect the child.

"It's important to note the difference between sexual orientation and sexual behavior," Kincaid said. "Historically, society views homosexuality as immoral behavior, and that's always been a criteria for removing a child from the home."

Abby Abinanti, legal director for the National Center for Lesbian Rights in San Francisco, said she knows of no other case quite like this one.

"There have been cases where a child was raised by two lesbians, the birth mother dies, and the partner is challenged for custody," she said. "The courts have struggled with that and have come out with different rulings."

Usually, she said, the person seeking custody is the other parent. In Bottoms' case, the father and ex-husband is not involved.

Henrico County juvenile court Judge William G. Boice awarded custody of Tyler Doustou to the boy's grandmother last March, relying on a 1985 Virginia Supreme Court ruling that said a parent's homosexuality is a legitimate reason for losing custody.

That case, however, involved a mother who sued her gay ex-husband for custody of their child.

"This case is an entirely different set of facts," Butler said.

Arafat to sign statehood accord

Negotiations continue, support needed, aide said

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Palestinian statehood is a mistake, and any land ceded by Israel to the Palestinians must remain demilitarized, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Sunday.

"No Israeli will ever agree to have a hostile army at the gates of Jerusalem," Peres said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Peres said Israel was ready to sign an agreement with the Palestine Liberation Organization on mutual recognition and on extending Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho.

But a top aide to PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat said it was highly improbableArafat will have nailed down the support he needs in time for a Sept. 13 target date for signing the accord.

Arafat aide Nabil Shaath, also appearing on CBS, said the signing was probably two or three weeks away, although negotiations on the exchange of statements needed for mutual recognition will take place this week.

An administration official said President Clinton wrote leaders of Mideast nations Friday giving his personal commitment to the accord and seeking their endorsement.

Clinton's letter was intended to make sure to the governments in the region that he wants them on board and wants them to make public statements supporting the agreement, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"He wants to make sure the momentum continues," the official said.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said the United States was working to encourage the parties to reach an agreement but acknowledged that the United States, sponsor of formal peace talks in Washington, was playing a peripheral role.

The breakthrough announced last week on setting up limited Palestinian self-rule in the occupied territories came in secret PLO-Israel talks in Oslo, Norway.

REVIEW

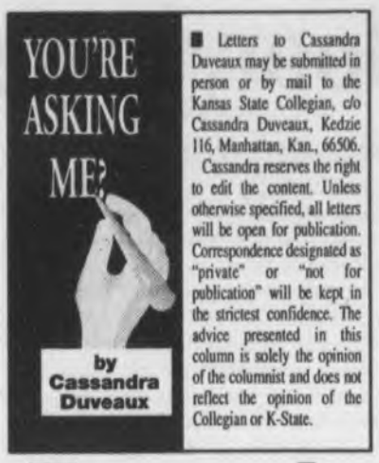
Film lacks substance and focus

ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Boxing Helena" is going to be much-maligned, but probably for all the wrong reasons. Its uncomfortable theme of a female living torso kept as the trophy of an obsessively demented male doctor already has feminists foaming at the mouth.

But that is not the reason this movie should be dismissed. The real reason is "Boxing Helena" is a bad film with terrible acting, clichéd dialogue, a silly script, pedestrian camera work and inferior direction.

Much of the blame must be placed with director Jennifer Chambers Lynch, who also wrote the screenplay, and with those who decided to give her the money to make this movie — the producers, Carl Mazzocone and Philippe Caland (who is responsible for the story), and executive producers James Schaeffer and Larry Sugar.



There is little substance here and little focus. The movie lacks the sophistication or cleverness to be a satire or even high camp. It lacks the profound vision to be absurdist or existential. As a thriller, it plods along like a tired old elephant.

The movie opens when Dr. Nick Cavanaugh (Julian Sands) is a child attending a party given by his parents and largely ignored, indeed scowled upon. During this Freudian slip of a scene, Lynch has the soundtrack play Cab Calloway's rendition of "You're Nobody 'Til Somebody Loves You."

Segue to the present: Mom is dead, Nick is a famed surgeon.

He sees a woman named Helena (Sherilyn Fenn) in a crowded club and goes bananas. It seems Nick had a one-night stand with Helena and became obsessed with her alleged beauty.

He drifts about like a lovesick puppy, even playing peeping Tom one night while jogging.

Exposed piggies offensive in class

Dear Cassandra,

We have a very unusual problem. There is a certain student in our department who attends class without wearing shoes.

All of her classes are in the same building, so she just roams the halls barefoot. She insists on resting her bare feet on nearly everything in sight. We don't know how to approach her and let her know this offends us. I guess we all just assume it's common courtesy to wear shoes in public areas such as classrooms. We don't understand how she cannot know this.

Please, let us know how to tell her the "no shirt, no shoes, no service" rule applies in the classroom, too.

Signed,
Toe-tally Disgusted (and 47 others)

Dear Toe-tallies,

Hmm. I'm not exactly Miss Manners, but I'll try to help you out of this (toe) jam..

I suggest you surreptitiously place today's paper, conveniently folded to reveal this column, on the offending girl's chair during your next class with her.

It sounds like this girl is rather comfortable going shoeless — has found herself to be, shall we say, at one with the linoleum of the world.

If this doesn't work, however, fret not. Arrange it so everyone in your classes goes without shoes on some designated day. And remember to put your scruffy tooties on everything in sight. Each other if necessary.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take time to stop and look around. You might be missing out on something or someone today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It is time to break out the books and actually pretend you are a student.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Watch out for those behind you — someone might drool.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21): Time to take all your frustrations out on your loved one. Beat him or her over the head with a rolling pin. You'll feel better.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take time out to watch a little Beavis and Butt-head. You might learn something.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be kind. Open a door for a stranger today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Love is not in the air for you today. Beware of any advances from the opposite sex.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone of the opposite sex likes you. Keep your ears and eyes open.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be exotic today. Eat spicy food and belly dance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't stress today. Light up a cigarette and relax.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Today is your day to declare your omnipotence to the world. Beware of those who would oppose you.

Russian thugs beat down door, mug visiting scientist was brightly lit after being outside. I looked around, and there were all these guys in this black garb, and they were screaming at us."

Charlton and the others were then pulled down a hallway.

"I looked around this partition, and there were three people lying there. On the wall was this big swath of blood, and I couldn't tell if those people were alive or dead.

"They pushed us against the wall, frisked us, and then had us all lie down on the floor, lined up execution style. The whole time they had a knife to my throat and a gun to my ear. They continued to feel for money belts, ripping open our clothes.

"Then one guy stuck his gun right at the back of my head, and right about that point, I thought, 'These guys are going to kill us," Charlton said.

The most difficult part of the ordeal was not knowing what their captors were saying or what their intentions were, he said.

The incident happened very quickly, and the environment was so strange to him that there was not much time for fear, he said.

"I just remember thinking that this was a strange place to die — a strange way to die," he said.

The Russians began leaving in stages after that, he said.

They waited for about five minutes before they got up off the floor. They had a chance to look around them when people began to filter out of their rooms, Charlton said.

"The lobby was awash in blood. It was the most ghastly thing I've ever seen," he said.

Another colleague, William Wallner, a scientist with the Forest Service, had already arrived at the hotel and was sleeping when the thugs kicked his door down, Charlton said.

They had beaten him and stolen his belongings.

Charlton said it was more than an hour before the police and the ambulance arrived. There were no sirens, and the police did not seem to be overly concerned about the incident, he said.

"I've heard tell from other people that the police can be in cahoots with organized crime," he said.

Charlton said about $16,000 in equipment and money was stolen, as well as their traveling visas and passports.

Most of their belongings were still in the car, and Charlton said the Russians drove it away like a neatly wrapped package. Among his luggage, Charlton said he had packed some cookies and beef jerky, because he did not know what the Russian food would be like.

"That was one of the most irritating things to contemplate — these jokers sitting around eating my chocolate-chip cookies and beef jerky," he said.

Bibles distributed in Moscow

Hiram Cassel, his wife and several other students distributed bibles, taught bible classes and conversational English at a month-long summer camp. The summer camp is for children of the elite and scientists. They also spent 10 more days in Moscow, distributing bibles and holding crusades at camps and in prison.

Marcy Cassel said, at one time, Little Star Camp was used as a military base for young men.

"Children were trained to be good little communists in pioneer camps at Little Star," she said.

This information is important because their mission was to distribute bibles and teach the Russians about God, which would have been illegal in the communist state years ago, Hiram Cassel said.

He said he will go to Russia again this summer.

"I would go back to Russia in a heartbeat," Hiram Cassel said. "If I encounter the same situation, I'll just sic my wife on them the next time."

▶Former 'Fantasy Island' actor commits suicide

LOS ANGELES — There will be no funeral for the late "Fantasy Island" actor Herve Villechaize, who asked instead his body be cremated and his ashes distributed at sea, his spokesman said.

Villechaize, who committed suicide Saturday at age 50, had said he wanted to allow a doctor specializing in dwarfism to study his remains before cremation, publicist David Brokaw said Sunday. He did not want a memorial service, Brokaw said.

Villechaize made his wishes known in conversations with his longtime companion, Kathy Self.

The actor died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound, Brokaw said. He said Villechaize left a note saying he was despondent because of poor health, but had given no prior indication he planned to take his life.

Villechaize, who was 3 feet 11 inches, suffered medical problems because of his undersized lungs and nearly died of pneumonia a year ago.

The actor played Ricardo Montalban's comic sidekick, Tattoo, on "Fantasy Island," which ran on ABC from 1978 through 1984.

The French-born Villechaize was also a supporting player onstage and in films during the 1960s and 1970s.

Police homicide investigators and the county Coroner's Office were investigating the death, as is routine in suspected suicide cases.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

WIN $5,000* EVERY DAY FOR DOING WHAT YOU'D DO ANYWAY:

THE 1-800-COLLECT $5,000 DAILY GIVEAWAY

*1-800-COLLECT $5,000 DAILY GIVEAWAY. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY ALL ENTRANTS ARE BOUND BY COMPLETE RULES WHICH ARE AVAILABLE BY CALLING 1-800-RULES4U. FOR EACH DAY FROM 8/30/93 THROUGH 9/28/93 (30 DAYS), 1-800-COLLECT WILL GIVE AWAY A GRAND PRIZE OF $5,000! 1. TO ENTER BY MAKING A 1-800-COLLECT CALL: •Each time you make a 1-800-COLLECT domestic telephone call (within the U.S. and Puerto Rico) during the promotion period indicated, and the collect calling charges are accepted, you and the individual or company whose name appears on the telephone bill for the number called (hereinafter referred to as Call Recipient) are eligible to be randomly selected as potential winners to share a daily prize of $5,000. Calling day is 12:00 midnight EDT up to the following 12:00 midnight EDT. 2. No purchase or telephone call necessary. TO ENTER BY MAIL, hand print your name, address, zip code and daytime telephone number on a plain piece of 3" x 5" paper and mail in a hand-addressed 4 1/8" x 9 1/2" (#10) envelope, with first class postage affixed, to: 1-800-COLLECT Giveaway, P.O. Box 4396, Blair, NE 68009. IMPORTANT: ON LOWER LEFT HAND CORNER OF MAILING ENVELOPE, YOU MUST PRINT THE SPECIFIC DATE OF THE PRIZE GIVEAWAY (FROM 8/30 through 9/28/93) FOR WHICH YOUR ENTRY IS DESIGNATED. Enter as many times as you wish for as many days as you wish, but each entry must be mailed separately. No mechanically reproduced entries permitted. Entries must be received by 5 business days after prize giveaway date indicated on your mailing envelope to be eligible for that daily prize. 3. SELECTION OF WINNERS: Each daily winner will be randomly selected from among all eligible 1-800-COLLECT telephone call entries and all eligible mail-in entries received for that day's giveaway. Random selection will take place 6 days after the specific prize giveaway date. Odds of winning a prize will depend on the number of eligible 1-800-COLLECT telephone calls completed each day and the time of day the call was made, and on the number of mail-in entries designated for each day's prize award. Odds will vary each day of the promotion based on the above factors. Odds of winning via mail-in entry will be as good as odds of winning via telephone entry. 4. PRIZES: 1 Grand Prize per day of $5,000, divided equally between Caller and Call Recipient. Call Recipient portion of the prize will be awarded to the individual or company whose name appears on the telephone bill for the telephone number called. If potential winner has entered via mail, he/she subsequently will be required to give name, address and telephone number of individual with whom he/she wishes to share prize equally. 5. GENERAL RULES: To be eligible, callers/mail-in entrants must be 16 years or older as of 8/30/93. Sponsor's employees directly involved in the planning and implementation of this promotion and employees of it's advertising and promotion agencies, and their immediate family members and/or those living in same household of each are not eligible for any prize, either as an entrant or designated recipient. Ifeither potential winner of a daily prize is not eligible, per the above, that entire $5,000 prize will not be awarded. Void where prohibited by law. No substitution or transfer of prize permitted. All federal, state and local taxes are the sole responsibility of winner. All federal, state and local laws and regulations apply. Not responsible for malfunctioning or breakdown of telephone systems, for faulty telephone transmission or for lost, late or misdirected entries. In the event that technical difficulties prevent selection of a winner for any daily prize of the promotion, that prize will be awarded on the following day. Random selection of winners will be under the supervision of D.L. Blair, Inc., an independent judging organization whose decisions are final. By participating in this promotion, entrants agree to be bound by the Official Rules and decisions of the judges. COMPLETE rules are subject to any requirements or limitations that may be imposed by the Federal Communications Commission.

SEPTEMBER 8, 1993 KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY, MANHATTAN, KANSAS 66506 VOLUME 99A, NUMBER 12

Late night VINCENT P. LAVERGNE/Collegian

Do you think K-State deserves to be in the top 100 schools for black students? Why or why not?

"No, K-State doesn't have a broad enough ethnic curriculum. They need more programs for African American students to adjust to a predominantly white campus."

ERROL WILLIAMSON
SOPHOMORE IN ACCOUNTING/MARKETING AND PRE-LAW

"Like all other universities, K-State has pluses and minuses. I think the University could be more open to diversity."

TONY LUCKETT
SOPHOMORE IN EDUCATION

"Racial issues come up. I have some teachers I thought were not as interested in helping black students as white students. The college could do more, but it is not a bad place."

CHRIS HOLEMAN
JUNIOR IN FINANCE AND PRE-LAW

"I think this is an excellent college. I would also feel comfortable in finding a job in the Manhattan/ Junction City area."

LA-KISHA CUSACK
SOPHOMORE IN GENERAL MANAGEMENT

"No. There are not many blacks here. This school seems more for suburban, middle and high class students, not people from the inner city."

K-State improving diversity

KSU named one of top 100 best colleges for blacks

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

K-State topped hundreds of other universities to be named one of the 100 best colleges for black students.

This distinction was given to K-State in a book called "The 100 Best Colleges for African American Students" by Erlene B. Wilson. Wilson, former associate editor of "Glamour" magazine, specializes in books about colleges.

Veryl Switzer, adviser to the Black Student Union, said being named in such a book was a compliment to K-State.

Colleges already rated high in the areas of academics and educational value were surveyed on the type of organizations for black students, the number of black students and faculty, financial aid and admission requirements.

The survey also requested information on racially motivated incidents on campuses and how the administrations handled them.

K-State is the only Kansas college listed in the book. The book listed a variety of public and private schools, including Ivy League schools such as Yale University and all-black schools like Morehouse.

K-State was given high marks for its attempts to promote diversity on campus through such events as Racial-Ethnic Harmony Week.

However, K-State has what the book calls a dismal 20-percent graduation rate for black students, and only half of a percent of the faculty are black faculty.

Switzer said having more minority faculty was key to recruiting more black students. However, trying to obtain one without the other could be difficult, Switzer said.

"You can't hardly ask African American instructors to come to an university that doesn't have very many African American students," Switzer said.

Damon Danielson, president of the Black Student Union and junior in graphic design, said better advising for black students might help increase the graduation rate.

"We need advisers that actually advise and not just sign off on our enrollment papers," he said.

Before he changed his major, the Minority Engineering Program was helpful to him, Danielson said.

He said other projects like this could be helpful to minority students, but even the engineering program needed a bigger staff.

"It's getting better. The multicultural committees are doing a lot to promote diversity on campus," Danielson said.

A student quoted in the book said although the campus was primarily white, the real-world atmosphere was a good preparation for life.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said he recommended students receive at least part of their education at a racially diverse university.

"My brother went to Morehouse, an all-black school, and he sometimes says he feels it didn't prepare him for dealing with other races," Franklin said.

Franklin said he supports the proposed diversity overlay requirement, because it would make students aware of each other.

"When people are more aware of each other, they are less afraid of interacting with each other," Franklin said.

Students' interaction with their own racial group helps build self-esteem and gives them a feeling they are somebody, Franklin said.

Franklin, who was a student at K-State in the 1970s, said he challenges students to reverse the roles.

"Imagine if it was the other way around, and you were a white student at an all-black school. How would you feel if everyone was listening to different music and using a different slang?" Franklin said. "That is what it was like for me. It can be overwhelming."

Police release composite sketch of assault suspect

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

Campus police have developed a composite sketch of a suspect in the assault of a K-State student Monday night.

Students should be on the lookout for a white male with dark brown hair, slim build and a light complexion. The suspect is about 6 feet tall and 18 to 20 years old, according to a police bulletin.

At 8:10 p.m. Monday, a female student was assaulted as she was walking toward Goodnow Hall from parking lot B3 behind Weber Hall.

After being grabbed by the subject, the student fought back, possibly scratching the subject on the forearm.

The student escaped the incident without physical harm.

Cameras, which were monitoring the parking lot where the incident took place, were reviewed Tuesday by the investigations department of the K-State Police.

"So far the cameras haven't shown anything of useful nature," Lt. Robert Mellegren said.

Residence halls are emphasizing the need for students to use campus escort services.

Goodnow Hall is re-emphasizing to students they have an escort service in conjunction with Marlatt Hall, Todd Rasmussen, Goodnow director, said.

Students can call and arrange for an escort, drive the escort to the parking lot, and be escorted back to the residence hall, he said.

"We want students to think about where they're at," Rasmussen said. "They need to be conscious of their surroundings."

Flooding at Milford, Tuttle destroys 25 years of research

Trees damaged, were to be used to grow better seeds

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

Flooding of Milford and Tuttle Creek reservoirs this summer caused extensive damage to K-State's tree research program and destroyed almost 25 years of research.

Tom Warner, head of the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources, said $639,000 in damage to projects being done at Milford and Tuttle Creek reservoirs was caused by the opening of both reservoirs' dams and spillways.

The horticulture department oversees the research projects at the reservoirs.

The Kansas State Extension Forestry, a division of the department, was involved in the project at Milford.

Warner said the flooding at Milford was more dramatic than at Tuttle.

"The trees are located adjacent to the outflow of the spillway.

The water washed away trees and huge chunks of ground," Warner said.

Bill Loucks, tree planting program leader with KSEF, said he is not sure if all the trees have been destroyed.

A river channel has limited access to the site.

"A 100-yard wide and 8- to 15-foot deep river channel has been cut through the land at Milford. Because of this, we have lost trees, and we cannot get to them," Loucks said. "After a month, we'll know if we can recover them."

"We were producing seeds to grow seedlings, to ship out to Kansas farm owners, for use on the land."

BILL LOUCKS
TREE PLANTING PROGRAM LEADER

About 3,000 trees were destroyed, and 26 acres of trees were damaged. Fifty acres of land and 10 research plantings were destroyed.

Loucks said a majority of the trees planted at Milford Reservoir were being used in a research project to growing better seeds.

"We were producing seeds to grow seedlings, to ship out to Kansas farm owners, for use on the land," Loucks said.

Warner said the site where the trees were planted at Tuttle Creek is located south of the spillway. Three feet of water destroyed five research plantings and about 13 acres of trees.

"A levy was built to protect the land from rising waters, but the waters backed on around and flooded the trees," Warner said.

Wayne Geyer, professor and forest researcher with the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources, would not comment on the situation.

The land at both reservoirs is owned by the Army Corps of Engineers and is leased to K-State. The University signed a new 25-year lease last year.

Money for the project is received through the University and from grants.

Loucks said the flooding has put a strain on the department's funding.

"Funding for this project was a fight before. We didn't put a play into the budget to repair things. And now suddenly, we have this problem," Loucks said.

Warner said money to be raised to re-fund the project will have to come through sources outside the University.

Second child dies after racing accident

WICHITA (AP) — The second of two siblings injured when a car tire flew into a speedway grandstand died Monday.

Joshua Dutton, who turned 10 years old Monday, was hurt two days earlier at the 81 Speedway when a tire snapped off a race car and sailed 50 feet before landing in the grandstand. His 7-year-old sister, Amanda, died early Sunday morning.

No one else was reported injured.

The children's father, Paul Dutton, was scheduled to drive the car that lost the tire but was not in the race. The car was driven instead by another racer, Jon Johnson.

The children were with their mother and grandparents when the right hub broke on Johnson's car and the wheel flew off.

Barkis challenges Slattery for governor

TOPEKA (AP) — Former House Speaker Marvin Barkis went on the offensive today against U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, even though Slattery hasn't decided whether to run for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination yet.

Barkis said he believes his support is broad enough to withstand a challenge from the congressman. He also raised questions about Slattery's motives in considering the race and whether Slattery has dealt enough with state issues.

Gov. Joan Finney announced Friday that she does not plan to seek re-election, and her withdrawal immediately fueled speculation that Slattery would jump into the race. So far, the only declared candidates are Barkis, a Louisburg attorney, and state Rep. Joan Wagnon of Topeka.

Tiller appears at preliminary hearing

WICHITA (AP) — Dr. George Tiller was called as the first witness today at the preliminary hearing for an pro-life activist accused of shooting him last month as he drove away from his abortion clinic.

The hearing for Rachelle Renae "Shelley" Shannon, 37, of Grants Pass, Ore., who is charged with attempted murder, was expected to last most of the day in Sedgwick County District Court.

She has been held on $1-million bond in Wichita since her arrest last month in Oklahoma.

Government sued by gay man

WASHINGTON (AP) — A gay Marine discharged after publicly declaring his homosexuality sued the government Tuesday, asserting violation of his constitutional rights to due process, equal protection and free speech.

Encouraged by President Clinton's announced intention on Jan. 29 to lift the ban on military service by homosexuals, Sgt. Justin Elzie told ABC News in an interview that day at Camp Lejeune, N.C., that he is gay, according to Elzie's lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court.

Two weeks later, a Marine colonel informed Elzie that because of the remarks about his sexual orientation, he no longer would be allowed an honorable release from the Marines with full benefits, which Elzie had been planning for since December of 1992.

In Elzie's 11-year Marine career, superiors have given him consistently high marks for recruiting, embassy guard work and as a supply officer, according to the lawsuit against Defense Secretary Les Aspin, Navy Secretary John Dalton and Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Carl Mundy.

Clinton offers to play host to signing of plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wading deeper into the promising Middle East peace process, President Clinton offered on Tuesday to host the signing of a historic accord between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Clinton also telephoned Russian President Boris Yeltsin, and, in a 35-minute conversation, they pledged to work together to promote peace in the Middle East beyond the apparently imminent agreement, a U.S. official said.

Clinton and Secretary of State Warren Christopher also worked behind the scenes during the weekend in what appears to have been a successful effort to enlist the backing of Saudi Arabia and other conservative Persian Gulf regimes for the accord and its promise of some self-rule for Palestinian Arabs.

Page 1 ad runs in USA Today Money section

WASHINGTON (AP) — USA Today broke newspaper tradition Tuesday by running a display advertisement at the top of its business section, a move likely to provoke comment in the industry.

Ads are rarely seen on the first pages of inside sections. A Northwest Airlines ad, 3-1/2 inches by 2-5/8 inches, was scheduled to run every day on the upper right side of the Money section's front page for a year, USA Today spokesman Steve Anderson said.

Vessel had weapons, White House says

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration continued to insist Tuesday a Chinese vessel was carrying chemical-weapons materials to the Middle East, even though inspectors in Saudi Arabia came up empty-handed after a week-long search.

Some intelligence analysts believe the materials were unloaded during a stop before the cargo was inspected, while others say the contents may have been dumped in the ocean, State Department officials said.

In July, U.S. intelligence reports showed the vessel — the Yin He — was carrying at least 24 containers of thiodiglycol and thionyl chloride, which can be used to make mustard gas and nerve toxins.

White men convicted of burning black man

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Two white laborers were convicted of all charges Tuesday in the burning of a black tourist who said they taunted him with racial slurs, doused him with gasoline and set him on fire.

Mark Kohut and Charles Rourk showed no reaction when the jury of five whites and one black found them guilty of attempted murder, kidnapping and robbery. The jury returned its decision after a 10-day trial and 12 hours of deliberations.

Burning victim Chrisiopher Wilson sat looking straight ahead next to his mother, Enid Plummer, who looked upward as the first guilty verdict was read and nodded her head yes. Later, she wiped away tears as Wilson whispered to her.

Kohut and Rourk, both day laborers from Lakeland, face up to life in prison. Sentencing was set for Oct. 22. Wilson made no comment as he left the courthouse.

ROWING HOME

Grad assumes coaching role

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

A love of rowing has brought a former Wildcat back to the University to lead this year's rowing team.

Al Koch, a 1971 K-State graduate, will be coaching the novice members of the crew team during the fall and spring season.

Koch rowed for K-State for four years, then rowed while he was in the military. He rowed in the 1986 Olympic trials.

"Al is a major role model for the rowers. He is a good example of the long-term benefits that can be received from rowing and the dedication that it takes," Alex Binkowski, head crew coach, said.

Koch explained the dedication it takes to row and be a part of the team.

"It isn't a sport where you can have a star and the others follow — you must work as a team and depend on each other," he said. "You become addicted to the sport. Once a person becomes involved with the team, dedication comes naturally."

The K-State rowing season begins in September and ends in May.

Crew members practice every morning at 5:45 a.m. at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

"It's easier to get up at 5 a.m. when you know your boat crew is counting on you," said Janelle Esau, senior in print journalism and crew member.

They begin their training with simple workouts, including running, biking, weights and working out on the ergo meter, Esau said.

Much of the training is mental, she said. In the boat she must stay extremely focused.

K-State has six teams that compete in various rowing competitions throughout the country.

They have varsity, novice and junior teams for both men and women. The junior teams are composed of high school students.

Team members row in boats of eight, four and two.

Many key elements play a role in learning to row, Koch said.

"Finesse and timing are much more important than power," he said.

The coxswain is an integral member of the team, Binkowski said.

"They are the brains behind the brawn," he said.

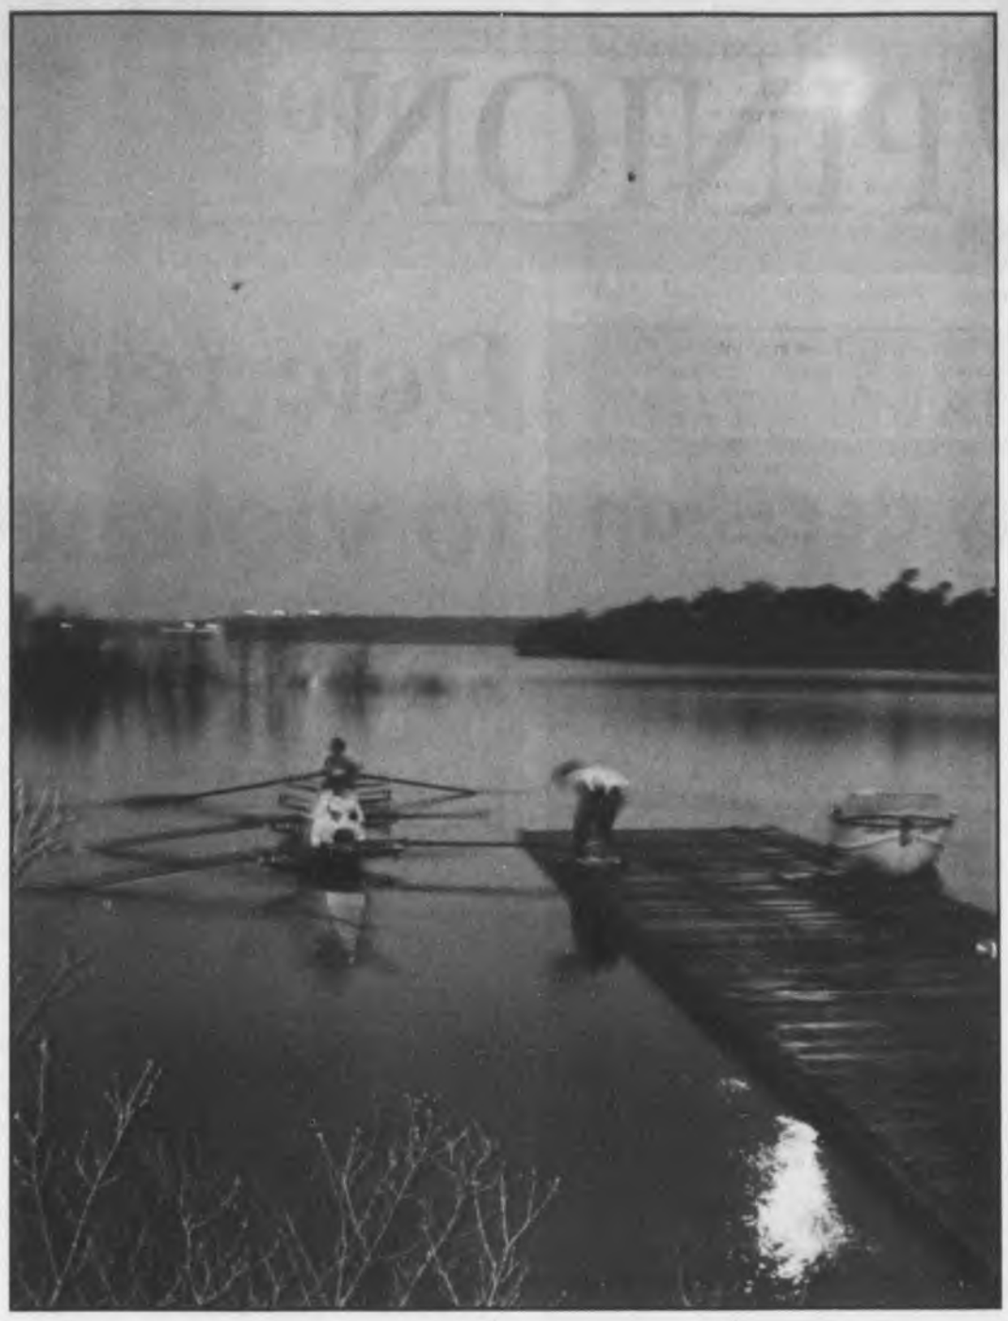
A coxswain acts as part coach and part motivator. They steer the boats and are in charge of the discipline of the crew while rowing.

"A coach has to work one-on-one with the coxswain so they will deliver the message the coach wants," Koch said.

Koch and Binkowski said they are hoping for improvement in the next couple of years.

"I see a lot of potential for growth," Binkowski said. "We have both the equipment and the organizational skills."

Rowing members pay a monthly coaching fee along with a fee to the U.S. Rowing Association, which makes them an official member of the association and K-State's rowing team.



There are 75 students who are interested in being members of the crew, and the team would like to see 60 or 70 of those interested become full members, Binkowski said.

"I think with the stability in coaching that we now have, we will see more rowers returning," said Binkowski.

The coaches said they are also hoping to gain more support from alumni rowers by having them involved in alumni regattas or helping in monetary donations.

The team is preparing for regattas, which begin within the month.

Koch said he hopes to have the novice team on the water soon.

The K-State men's rowing team pushes out from the boat dock into Tuttle Reservoir with the help of Coach Alex Binkowski Thursday morning. Even during the long days of summer, the team will begin practice under moonlight at 5:45 a.m. and finish just as the sun rises.

WORK SMARTER. NOT HARDER.

Engineering student? Smart.
Math or science major? Also smart.
On tests, you probably run equations over again to make sure they're right. So you're working harder.
You don't have to do that anymore. Not when you use the TI-68 Advanced Scientific or TI-85 Graphics Calculator, with their last equation replay feature — and many other smart functions.
We've spent years with students like you and educators like your professors to develop the TI-68 and the TI-85. That's why they're so highly recommended.
For engineering students, the TI-68 solves up to five simultaneous equations, has complex number functions and offers formula programming.
The TI-85 builds on the power of the TI-68 by adding a wide range of graphing capabilities. Math students can handle calculus problems more easily. And technical students can see the functions for a better understanding of problems.
The TI-85 also handles complex numbers. Matrices. Vectors. Lists. Strings. Plus, it offers a powerful one-equation SOLVER.
Try a TI-68 or TI-85 at your local TI retailer today. And start working smarter. Instead of harder.

Custody decision needs more logic

The recent ruling of Henrico County Circuit Court Judge Buford Parsons stating that Sharon Bottoms, a lesbian, is unfit for parenthood has set a dangerous precedent based on poor judgment and even shakier evidence.

The Richmond, Va., judge said if the 2-year-old child, Tyler, was to grow up in a same-sex household, he may be unable to distinguish the difference between men and women. Her lifestyle "renders her as an unfit parent."

As a result, he awarded custody of the boy to Bottoms' mother, Kay Bottoms.

Kay Bottoms raised Sharon and her brother while living with her boyfriend for 17 years. Sharon claims she was sexually assaulted by the boyfriend and estimates they had sex at least 800 times in that period.

Parsons based his decision on a 1985 Virginia Supreme Court ruling stating a parent's homosexuality is a legitimate reason for losing custody.

The weak base of this ruling is that no evidence exists supporting the premise that children raised by homosexual couples are any worse off than those children of "normal" families.

Further, it is doubtful Parsons is an expert on early childhood psychology. Deciding the child will not learn a fundamental fact of life merely due to his surroundings is absurd in the extreme. Children thrive in environments of love and understanding, and predicting this will not happen in Sharon Bottoms' home without evidence is illogical.

The final blow is that Sharon Bottoms' accusations of sexual abuse were probably not taken into account.

Despite Kay Bottoms' termination of her relationship with her boyfriend, one has to take sexual abuse allegations into account.

It should at least be looked into before Lester is handed over to her.

This case will no doubt be appealed, and more will follow suit. Let's hope that future decisions are based on reason and logic, not hearsay and bigotry.

Deterrent to violence can be found

Last week, Tim was standing on a street corner in Topeka with some friends of his. An unidentified person walked up to him and emptied a .38-caliber pistol into his chest at point-blank range.

They said he was dead before he hit the ground. He was 18 years old.

He was not a part of the group of nine teenagers I had worked with this summer, so it is a surprise I remember anything about him at all. The sad part is I do remember him.

The picture of his face has haunted me since I found out he had been murdered. It is the face that becomes the faces of the kids I did get to know this summer. It becomes the face of my own teenaged brothers and sisters.

There is an epidemic of violent behavior that is claiming an entire generation of young people in our society.

According to the FBI, an average of more than six people under the age of 18 are killed each day. And nearly a million teens between the ages of 12 and 19 are raped, assaulted and robbed each year.

Those figures can only provide us with a base number to work from. The number is increased when you take into consideration that so many violent crimes in this country go unreported.

Those figures cannot even begin to measure the grief that friends and families feel at their loss.

This epidemic is not only claiming teens as the victims of these crimes but as the perpetrators as well.

According to Newsweek, the arrests of teens for murder increased by 85 percent between 1987 and 1992.

And three out of every 10 of those arrests involved a victim under the age of 18.

Those figures are disturbing in themselves, and we also need to take into consideration the mounting high school drop-out rate, the easy availability of guns and drugs and the increasingly callous attitude toward violence that this society is experiencing.

We get an even more desperate picture. We get the picture that our younger brothers and sisters are disappearing down the tube right in front of us faster than we can catch them.

But what's to be done? The government can only do so much, which for them, is typically very little.

Pouring countless tons of money into our educational systems and into social programs that will keep young people off the street and away from the pull of gangs will only go so far as long as schools are overpopulated, teachers are underpaid and you can make more money selling a gram of crack than you can a quarter pounder with cheese.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

And gun control, while a lovely thought, will not happen adequately enough to stop much.

I mean, we have a guaranteed right in the Constitution to bear arms, and Americans cannot bear any legislation that stinks of limiting our powers to do as we please.

What has to change is us. We have to start making the difference in the lives of our younger brothers and sisters.

We have to show an interest in them whether it is through church, a greek organization, Big Brothers/Big Sisters or the Mentoring program with the K-State Community Service Program.

Involvement is possible and these days is desperately needed.

It has to start with us, and it has to start soon if we want to save what little we can.

Optimism is a small thing.

Skoog has a thick cloud of bureaucracy to fight through

Editor,

While reading the recent series of articles and editorials concerning the smoking debate, I have been simultaneously impressed and bewildered by Ed Skoog's naive optimism and childlike faith in the democratic system.

While I certainly believe it is paramount for the students' duly elected leader to push forward on the behalf of the students, Skoog's effort in contesting the smoking policy will most likely be arduously futile.

As a GTA I share an office with a few of my peers — an office in which, until this semester, I had always smoked in.

The new head of my department saw to it that one of his first official duties was the issuing of a memo to the graduate students saying, "University rules prohibit smoking except in designated areas of the building.

As none of the rooms assigned to graduate students have been so designated, no smoking is permitted in any of them."

Enraged by this new policy, which, incidentally, targets graduate students only (not professors), I obtained a copy of K-State's smoking policy and the supplementary guidelines developed and issued by the Department of Public Safety.

Both the smoking policy and accompanying guidelines render offices exempt: K-State's policy reads, "Smoking in all campus buildings, except private offices, shall be confined to areas designated by a sign..." and the guidelines corroborate this, noting "Private offices do not need smoking permitted tags (If smoking is permitted)..."

The decision as to whether or not smoking is permitted in an office has always been up to its occupants.

Armed with this information, I consulted an assistant dean of arts and sciences as to how to deal with this problem.

My case was provided the typical, 24-hour administrative investigation, and I was promptly informed that I have no right to smoke in my office.

I then called the offices of both the Dean of Student Life and students' attorney only to dance one more round of the red-tape rumba.

Pragmatically speaking, I don't see that K-State's administrators are the least bit concerned with the rights of the students as put forth in University policy, much less with that the students want.

I wish Ed Skoog the best of luck but believe the bureaucratic smoke screen he faces is a more lethal bulwark than any of the students could create.

▶ SATURDAY NIGHTS

Unnecessary roughness by player taints team image

Editor,

I am writing this letter because I am so disappointed in the behavior of several K-State football players after their game Saturday night.

Coach Bill Snyder said the reason there are no night games this year is because the players enjoy spending time with their families after the games on Saturdays, and they do not have the opportunity to do so after night games.

I doubt this is true for some players, however — there were a large number of football players in Aggieville on Saturday night, and several were quite obviously there to cause trouble.

Walking into one establishment, a former Wildcat player and a friend of mine complained that he had broken up several fights and was ready to go home.

In hindsight, I should have taken that as a clue and gone home myself, but this is a place I had been to several times before, and I never had any trouble.

While I was standing inside talking to friends, one player threw his shoulder into my back. I said excuse me and he became vulgar and challenged me to a fight outside.

He was obviously only looking for a fight. It is insulting to me to be treated with such little respect.

I realize that only a small portion of players act in this manner; however, the leaders of the football team need to realize that a few bad apples can ruin the bunch.

They need to explain to the other members that the people they are picking fights with are the same people who have bought season tickets, dressed up in purple and have gone out to the stadium to support them every Saturday they play.

'Man of God' tries to whip students into fear of what's in store for them

Determined liars attempt to manipulate half-truths or partial truths in such a way that when the viewer looks at the final presentation, he or she will see what appears to be the truth.

For example, they try to convince you that the meaning of an entire painting is embodied by the single image of judgment they choose to show you.

For those who witnessed the spiritual circus outside the Union on Aug. 31-Sept. 1, hosted by Brother George "Jed" Smock of the College Community Church in Newark, Ohio, I invite you to look at the entire painting.

For two days Brother Jed and his wife, Cindy Smock, preached about the wickedness of sin, the prevalence of sinners and the Hell where they are headed. I caught most of day two of the circus.

I watched and listened as a woman standing on a small retaining wall screamed at Jed, and as a man wearing a blue tie-dye shirt laughed in Jed's face while taunting him about homosexuality.

A few students walked by the crowd of about 150 saying, "I can't believe people are actually listening to this guy."

Mostly I stood nauseated as the gospel that God designed to draw his creation toward an exciting, abundant and eternal life in Him was being used as a bull-whip to drive away the masses.

JOHN HART

Brother Jed actually said truth is like a whip. Jesus disagreed, as he would have with many of the things Jed said and did.

Christ said the truth does not inflict punishment, bondage and pain, but instead sets you free.

Part of Jed's whip of truth was the lie that God hates sinners.

John 3:16-17 says, "For God so loved the world that he gave his one and only Son, that whoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life.

"For God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through him."

If God hated sinners, then why would he send his son to die for them?

I took this issue to Jed personally after the circus was over. He explained — in contradictory terms — how God's hatred for sinners is rooted in benevolence.

He compared God's love to a male-female relationship. In Smock 15:9-10, Jed illustrates: "The man will love the woman he is in an intimate relationship with — the Christian, more than the woman he doesn't know, the sinner."

I thank God that his love as described in the Bible and as perfectly expressed through the crucifixion is more enduring than the conditional whims of a romance.

As if faulty theology wasn't enough to compromise Brother Jed's witness, his attitude certainly was.

He tried to justify his abrasive and judgmental tactics by claiming Jesus wasn't always loving. He argued Jesus was very harsh with the Pharisees, and college students are like the Pharisees.

Oh really?

The Pharisees were pious, self-righteous Jewish religious leaders during the time of Christ who were thoroughly schooled in the Old Testament. Jed said K-State students are arrogant know-it-alls, like the Pharisees.

Yet how many K-State students are well versed in scripture, how many know anything about the Mosaic law, how many are pious, and how many are even interested in religion?

Not a whole lot.

The biblical group that best typifies college students are the Greeks, who praised the intellect and held human reason in higher esteem than divine revelation. Nowhere in the Bible are Greeks the object of hate.

The image the Smocks presented was of a sinful world separated from God because of its imperfection.

That one image is real, but there is much more to the painting.

The good news, or gospel, is that Christ's death on the cross can erase our sin so we can have a relationship with God.

It is a free gift; it is nothing you can, or could, earn.

Imagine someone erasing the national deficit in an instant.

That is what God offers to those who believe — to erase our deficit of sin to him.

That is why they call it amazing grace.

If your appetite leans toward south-of-the border cuisine, try the Texas Star Cafe located at 606 N. 12th St. in Aggieville.

For legal reasons the restaurant's name was recently changed from the more familiar Lone Star Cafe, but luckily everything else remains the same.

The restaurant offers a diverse array of Mexican, barbecue and Southwest dishes.

In addition to offering the more familiar Mexican fare such as tacos, enchiladas, and giant burritos, Texas Star prepares authentic and creative entrees. These include the flauta dinner, lightly-fried-corn tortillas filled with seasoned-shredded-chicken, topped with red chili, tomatillo sauce and creme fraiche.

REVIEW

Taco lovers can either design their own creations at the table or feast on gourmet soft-flour tacos filled with sauteed shrimp, shredded red cabbage and fresh pineapple-ancho salsa.

True to its name, the Cafe features a generous plate of tender, house-smoked Texas-style barbecue ribs that should satisfy the most discriminating barbecue connoisseur.

A variety of burgers with their Southwest influence complement the menu .

Other selections from the south Texas fare include the mesquite grilled beef or chicken fajitas with hand-stretched tortillas, guacamole, homemade pico de gallo and sour cream.

The menu also has several house specialties such as tequila lime chicken, Santa Fe chicken breast, shrimp diablo and top sirloin, as well as various daily specials.

A wide assortment of appetizers, soups, and salads are offered. All meals are preceded by complimentary chips and salsa and many include a dinner salad. In addition, many entrees can be prepared vegetarian style.

Original desserts such as homemade peach cobbler and the Texas hot fudge brownie a la mode round out the menu.

The restaurant provides a good assortment of domestic and international beers, as well as mixed drinks and wines.

The Texas Star Cafe serves quality consistent cuisine that never disappoints. The service is friendly, efficient and attentive.

Sigma Kappa moves in

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

The members of Sigma Kappa finally have a place to call home.

Three years after colonizing at K-State, the Sigma Kappas were finally allowed to move into their house on Aug. 10.

Construction work began on the house at 1525 Denison during January, but planning for the house started in 1990.

Julie Arnold, senior in elementary education and house manager, said their original contract with Greek Affairs stipulated that they have a house built within three years of colonization.

"I think there were times we felt as a chapter that we might not have a house, because three years just seemed so far away, But our alumni really got involved and help," Arnold said.

Arnold said they not only received help from alumnae in Kansas, but throughout the Midwest.

She said some of the bed frames in the house were even donated by other chapters.

The 60-girl house was designed by architect Wade Walker of Gastinger and Walker in Kansas City.

Walker had a personal connection to the house since his daughter, Courtney Walker, senior in history, is a member.

However, all the members had input into the house's design.

"The house was built around the things we wanted. We made specifications and overall got what we wanted," Arnold said.

Arnold said the rain that drenched Manhattan this summer didn't hamper their construction, but recent rains has meant a delay in having their driveway poured.

Even without the rain stopping construction, the members couldn't move in until the night before rush week began.

"We stayed up all night trying to move all of our personal items in and to make the house looked 'lived in'," Joanna Shoup, junior in business management, said.

However, Shoup said she thinks the new house helped the Sigma Kappas in rush.

"I think a lot of girls going through rush were really excited about everything being new," she said.

For active members, Shoup said there is also excitement about better organization and getting to know one another better by all living together.

Arnold, who was a member of the first Sigma Kappa pledge class said members who started the chapter are also looking forward to having their activities at the house instead of meeting at the K-State Union.

"I just think having a house makes everything more secure. We are definitely here to stay," Arnold said.

The Sigma Kappas are planning an open house on Nov. 6, in conjunction with their national founders' day.

Co-op gives students experience, contacts

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

Several K-State students have discovered a way to test-drive their career and develop professional contacts while still earning college credit.

"Experience in the job market is a vital element of a student's education. Cooperative Education provides the opportunity for students to get on-the-job training as a part of their academic experience," Toni Herzog, director of cooperative education, said.

They can work full-time for one semester and attend the University full-time the next semester; they can work 15 to 20 hours a week and still attend school part time, or they can work full or part-time during the summer.

Troy Donahey, senior in industrial engineering, chose to alternate school and work.

"For the last three years, I've gone to school in the fall and worked in the spring and summer. School was getting to be kind of a grind. The co-op broke things up for me and gave me a chance to decide what I wanted to do," he said.

To be eligible for participation in the co-op program, a person must be a full-time student at K-State, have a 2.5 grade point average or special permission from their department and must complete 28 hours of academic work before entering the job market.

Transfer students must be on campus at least one semester before they are eligible.

Stephanie Heiniger, sophomore in interior design, met these qualifications by the end of her

Wildcats finish invitational minus co-captain

Dau sidelined after tests show irregular heartbeat

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

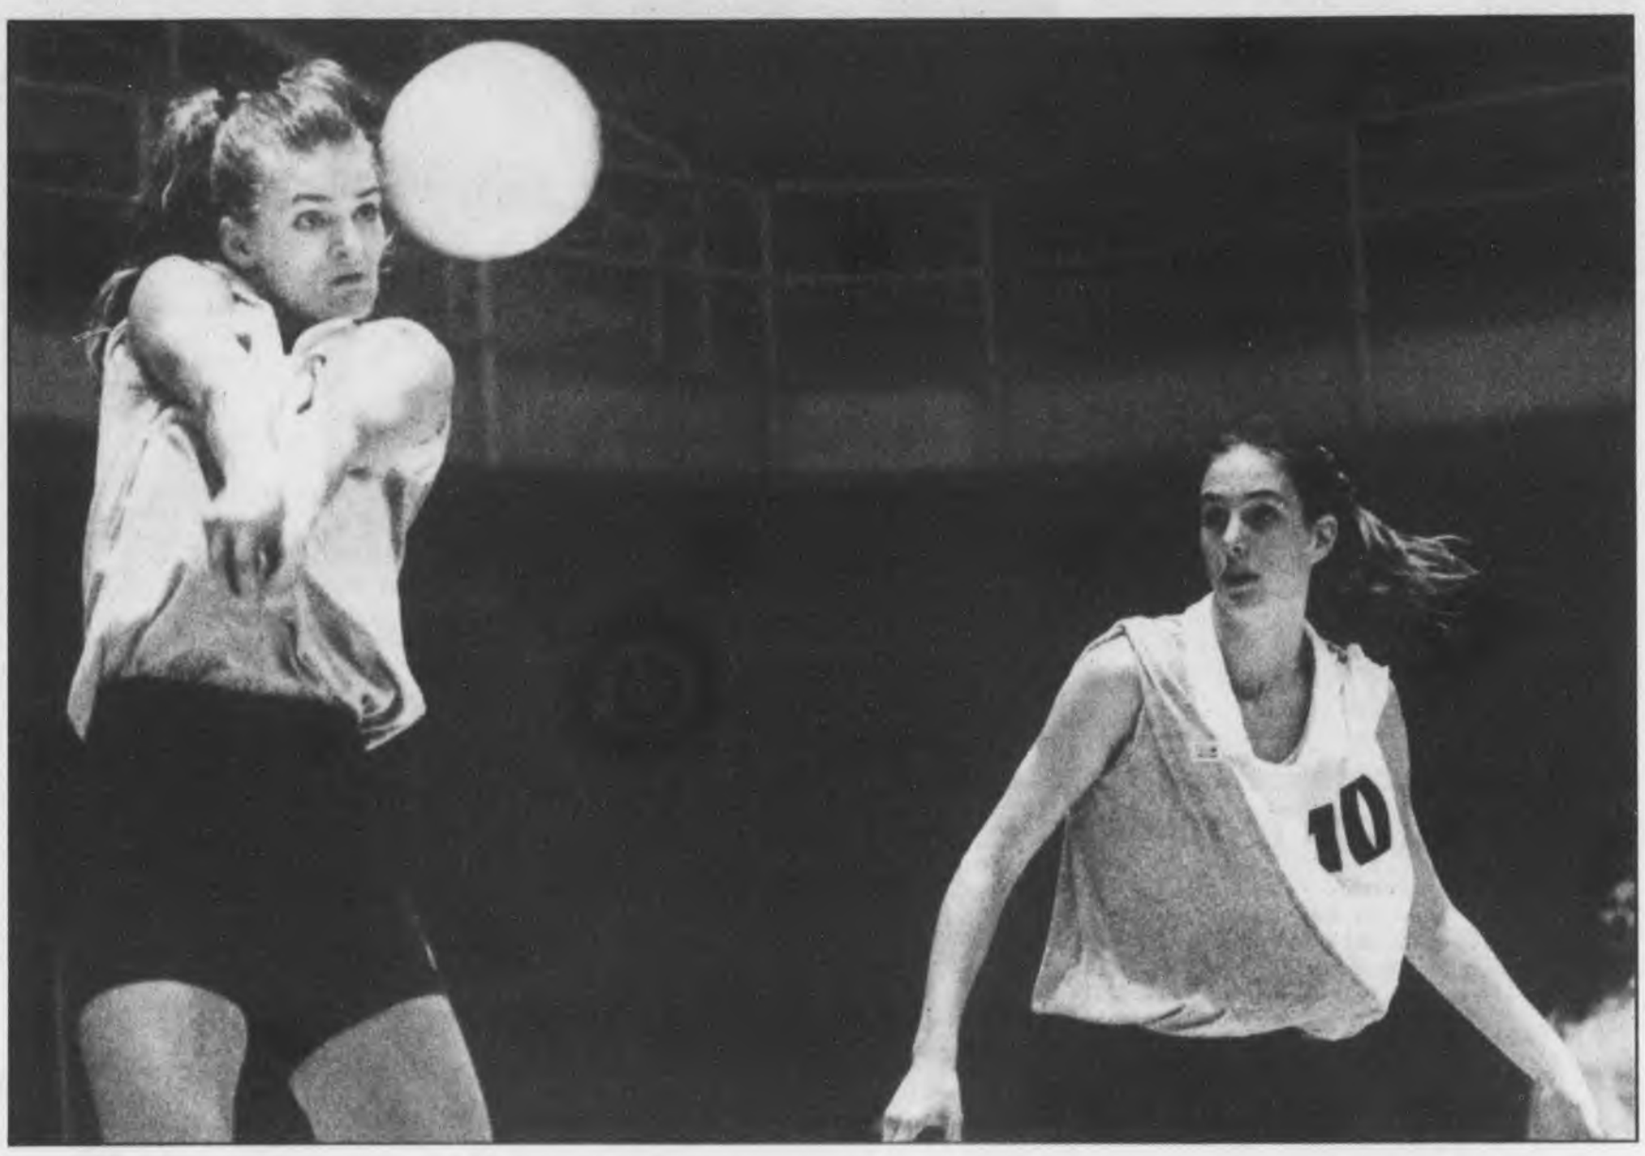
The Wildcat volleyball team stepped on the court last Friday to play in the Kansas State Invitational, but a key part of the team was missing from the line-up.

Co-captain Chi Dau was scratched from the line-up on Wednesday, Sept. 1, after a doctor's examination revealed an irregular heartbeat.

"We found out after the press conference on Wednesday," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "The doctor said that she would be taking medication and that she could be back this week for the tournament at Iowa."

Even with Dau's absence the Cats finished third in the invitational with a 2-2 record. The Cats defeated both Drake University, 3-1, and the University of Tulsa, 3-2, in the second annual tournament.

After losing the first and third games to Tulsa, the Cats rallied in the last two games of the match for the victory.



"This team never quits," Hagemeyer said. "We will never assume anything, and we will always work."

Leading the comeback for the Cats were freshman Yolanda Young, who finished with 16 kills, and senior Stephanie Liester. Liester finished the match with 12 kills and 11 digs. She was also selected to the all-tournament team.

"I spent a lot of time this summer working for this season," Liester said. "My knowledge of the game has helped me so far this year."

Hagemeyer said Liester worked on her shots over the summer.

"She concentrated on developing her shots," Hagemeyer said. "She now mixes up her shots, and she has the ability to not be predictable anymore. I'm very happy for her."

Wildcat spiker Jill Dugan bumps a serve during the last game against Oregan State at the Kansas State Invitational. K-State lost all three games and the match 15-10, 15-6 and 15-6. The Cats finished third in the tournament, defeating Drake University and the University of Tulsa.

J. KYLE WYATT
Collegian

In their second match Friday night, the Cats collided with eventual tournament champion Baylor. The Bears used several runs to put away the Cats in three games.

Liester and Young again led the Cats as both finished the match with nine kills. Sophomore Jill Dugan also contributed with 10 digs, and freshman Kate DeClerk had eight digs.

"It's too early to say that we were flat," Hagemeyer said. "We are still getting a feel for different line-ups, different opponents and how we want things done."

The Cats finished the tournament Saturday with a win and a loss. The win came against Drake with the score of 3-1, as the Cats again rallied after losing the first game. Then in the last game of the invitational the Cats lost to Oregon State 3-0.

Liester again led the Cats against the Beavers. She tallied 10 kills and seven digs for the match. DeClerk also had seven digs, and senior Wendy Garrett had 21 assists.

"The invitational helped the players look at what they need to work on," Hagemeyer said. "The players found out what they are good at, what they like and what they don't like."

The Cats will travel to Iowa City, Iowa, to play in the University of Iowa Invitational Sept. 10-11. The four-team event will feature Iowa, Washington State and Wright State.

FLAG FOOTBALL

No. 1-ranked TKE hammers Kappa Sigs

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Defending all-University champion and No. 1 ranked Tau Kappa Epsilon kicked off their 1993 flag football season with a 36-0 thrashing of Kappa Sigma.

Both teams got off to a slow start in the first quarter until TKE quarterback Jeff Tauscher connected with Spencer Wallace on a 32-yard touchdown pass on the last play of the quarter. Tauscher then hit Mike Wasinger in the end zone to complete the two-point conversion.

"We were sluggish at the beginning of the game, and we weren't executing well, but after we got that first score things went a little more smoothly," Tauscher said.

The TKEs struck again in the second quarter when Tauscher found Justin Salmans, who then proceeded to outrun the Kappa Sig defense en route to a 53-yard score. The pair connected again on the two-point conversion to make the score 16-0.

The TKEs regained possession of the ball and drove to the Kappa Sig's 15 yard line but were unable to score before halftime.

"It seemed like we gained more steam as we played through the game," Spencer Wallace, TKE receiver said. "Our execution got better as the game went on."

On the third play of the half, TKE defensive back Matt Deloney picked off a pass from Kappa Sig quarterback Lance Miller.

Two plays later, Tauscher hit Wasinger for ten yards over the middle. Wasinger then turned around and fired a strike to a streaking Dusty Zander for a touchdown. The scoring play totaled 60 yards.

After a failed 2-point conversion attempt, the score was 22-0.

"At halftime we talked about concentrating and executing better," Wallace said.

The Kappa Sigs made their first threat of the game at the end of the third quarter, set up by a diving catch by Dan Watkins from Lance Miller. The play went for 35 yards and put the Kappa Sigs on the TKEs 30-yard line.

However, the drive stalled after an incomplete pass and two sacks by Rick Schoenfeld for losses of 5 and 10 yards.

"We have a lot of new guys this year who have never played before," Lance Miller, Kappa Sig quarterback, said. "They didn't really understand how different this game is from real football."

On the next play the TKEs scored on a 60-yard pass play, again from Tauscher to Wallace. The two-point conversion failed and left the Kappa Sigs with a 28-0 deficit.

"We still have to execute better, but I feel we looked good," Wallace said.

In the closing plays of the game, Wallace caught a pass from Tauscher and flipped the ball to Justin Mitchell. Tauscher then hit Wasinger for the two-point conversion to round out the scoring.

"I am relieved to get this game out of the way," Miller said. "They are an excellent team, and I think our team learned what this game is about."

New format bad idea

TROY COVERDALE

The cool breezes of September bring to mind one of my favorite times of the year — the pennant races in major-league baseball.

I guess I'd better enjoy them while I can.

After the great battles in the NL West and AL East are settled for 1993, the majors go to expanded playoffs.

That means even though Kansas City has pretty much eliminated themselves from the division title, they'd be battling for second place in the AL West and a playoff spot.

One word sums up my feelings on the playoff plan — YUCK!

Each team in major-league baseball plays 162 games in a season. The division champs then play a best-of-seven series followed by the World Series. That's the way most baseball fans like it.

That's what makes baseball more fun to follow than the NFL, NBA, NHL or any other sport where the weaker teams make the playoffs each year.

When teams have outlasted their divisional brethren over the 162 games, why force them to play the second-place finisher from another division?

Baseball's example of unsupervised day care — the owners — claim the average fan wants this type of playoff format.

The owners say "See the NFL system. See the large number of fans they draw in for a wild-card game."

Phooey!

Kansas City Chiefs fans can tell how much a wild-card game means to them — very little.

It's the "Oh, yeah, we squeaked into the playoffs but couldn't win the division" attitude.

If a team can't win their own division, then what good is it for them to be in the playoffs?

The fans are let down, the team is let down, and there isn't a great feeling of "We're in! Let's make the most of it!"

No, it's more like "Hey, we made it in. Give me my paycheck, we'll see you next season, and we'll try to make it worth our while by winning the division."

And what about the idea of three divisions in each league in baseball?

Let's get rid of traditional rivalries while we're at it. Some of the best rivalries built since the advent of divisions will be swept out the door.

Sure, the Royals and White Sox will still battle, but who would you rather watch Kansas City play in a race in September — Oakland or Milwaukee?

Plus, the disparity between divisions will increase. The new American League West would have Seattle, California, Oakland and Texas.

The almighty dollar strikes another blow.

If it wasn't enough that it costs $5 to park at the stadium, $3 for a beer and $20 for that "just-like-the-pros-wear" wool-fitted cap, now the owners think they'll increase their income by adding another round of playoffs.

And the players support it because they'll get more bonus money out of another round.

Keeping in mind that right now this is just a proposal by the owners and is supported by the players, I can only hope that someone along the line wakes both sides up and reminds them that these "expanded" playoffs would be like the mixed drinks at the ol' local gathering place.

Watered down.

Priestley tarnishes silver screen

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

When Neil Sedaka sang the line, "I love, I love, I love my calendar girl," he definitely was not singing about this film.

"Calendar Girl" is about three lifelong friends from Indian Springs, Nev., who desire to meet the girl of their dreams.

At the age of 12, these prepubescent kids are inspired by the famous calendar picture of a nude Marilyn Monroe on red velvet. They decide to write to Monroe to profess their undying love.

Six years later, the friends are about to embark on their own separate journeys. Roy, portrayed by Jason Priestley, chooses to join the Army.

Before heading off to boot camp, Roy comes up with a plan to travel to California with friends Ned, played by Gabriel Olds, and Dood, played by Jerry O'Connell.

Priestley's jump from television to the silver screen is not a smooth transition. The 90210 crowd may be disappointed.

Olds and O'Connell give portrayals that are supportive of Priestley, but they are forgettable performances.

Reminiscent of films made by Mel Gibson and Jean Claude Van Damme, the film industry exploited Priestley to draw bigger box office receipts. More plot and less posterior nudity, please.

Director John Whitesell should have taken notice of the successful formulas used in movie hits such as "Stand by Me" and "Diner."

Although "Calendar Girl" has earmark of a good buddy film, maybe the movie should have taken a cue from Roy's line, "You can't rub Ben Gay on a heartache." The studio could have rubbed Ben Gay on this film. It couldn't hurt.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES

By Gypsy Rose

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Difficult to tell. Always, emotion clouds the future.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Buy a lottery ticket today. There are dollar signs floating over your head.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Something is bothering you. Dust off your conscience and get some morals.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21): Today is a good day to get a tattoo. How about a daisy on your toe?

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You're getting tired of seeing the same four walls and same faces every day. Get out. Breath some real air. Get a tan.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will have a clairvoyant experience today. Open your mind to the world around you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your life is static, boring, dull, a real snoozer. Walk through Aggieville nekkid.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Learn a new skill. The fine art of knitting waits in your future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Beware of creatures in your bathtub.

Campus groups offer alternative to coming out

Dear Cassandra,

I am a bisexual male who has been in graduate school here for just over a year. I have found at K-State that the school and area are very conservative. There are no places, bars, dances or other gatherings where one could meet another person who would like to develop this special type of relationship.

I know there are gay men in fraternities and lesbian women in the sororities. There are also gay undergraduate and graduate students who do not belong to such organizations.

I do not want to go public with this aspect of my life — therefore, I do not want to be involved directly with the gay and lesbian organizations here on campus.

My question to you is how can I find out about opportunities in which I can meet a man who may want to have a sexual relationship with me without me going "public" with my sexuality?

Signed,
Closet bisexual male

Dear Closet,

It's clear from your letter that right now "coming out" for you is not a viable option.

That's fine, but I ask you to rethink your unwillingness to even "venture out."

There are several groups, campus-related as they may be, that could offer you some much-needed support and put you in touch with what's going on socially in Manhattan's gay community.

The Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Support Group meets at 3:30 p.m. on Tuesdays in Lafene. (Room 238 for men/236 for women.)

And of course there is BaGaLS, which meets at the University for Man fairly regularly. Keep checking the Collegian announcements page.

Go to both groups. Make up a name if you want. But go and listen to what they have to say.

And as a last bit of friendly advice, stop looking for a "sexual relationship." It sounds a bit shallow. Find a friend, find a companion — not just a roll in the hay.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Meet your match

UPC to sponsor poetry readings

Series to allow students to meet old, new friends

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

K-State students are preparing to share poetry and emotions with members of the campus community.

The Union Program Council Arts Committee will sponsor a series of poetry readings this semester that will allow students to reminisce and give them the opportunity to meet new friends, said Shelly Rasmussen, program adviser of UPC Arts Committee.

Readings will take place at 9 p.m. on the first Monday of every month in the K-State Union Art Gallery. Interested students can sign up in the UPC office two weeks prior to each reading.

Students can read their own poetry or read poetry written by other authors at any of the readings.

"You may not know the person who is reading. You may have never seen them before. It's a sense of getting to know one another in an interesting way other than 'Hi, who are you,'" she said.

Melanie Biggs, a past member of the Arts Committee, suggested poetry readings last year to the committee to give students an outlet for free expression.

"It was a new idea for the committee," Rasmussen said.

The committee asked Biggs what types of poetry should be read to the audience.

"She said 'Anything. Anything goes except your clothes,'" Rasmussen said.

This whimsical remark became the permanent logo for the poetry readings.

"The students said, 'We've got student art in the gallery. Why not try and have student poetry as well?'" Rasmussen said.

POETRY READINGS

■ Readings will take place at 9 p.m. the first Monday every month in the K-State Union Art Gallery. Students interested in participating can sign up two weeks before each reading in the UPC office.

"One form of art being presented in the context of another — we were thinking it would only be a one-time deal. The students continued to have the readings every month because it was successful," she said.

Theater students make the poetry come alive by putting on a performance, Michael Ott, chairman of the Arts Committee, said.

"They'll tell a little story, then they'll go into their poem," Ott said.

The poetry readings had a large attendance last year, Stacey Longshore, coordinator of the Arts Committee, said.

Members of the campus community and anyone who enjoys poetry are welcome to share their thoughts, emotions and poems with audience members who have had similar experiences, Rasmussen said.

"As a member of the audience in a poetry reading, it is real nice, too. Because even if a person is reading a poem that isn't necessarily theirs, it's something that they feel strongly about," she said.

Documentary showcases life work of physicist

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

The life and theories of English physicist Stephen Hawkings are examined in the 1992 film "A Brief History of Time."

Documentary filmmaker Errol Morris ("The Thin Blue Line," "Gates of Heaven") has brought astrophysics to a level palatable even to the scientifically terrified.

The life of Hawkings alone would be a subject for an exceptional film.

An unmotivated student, Hawkings was diagnosed with Lou Gehrig's disease while working on his doctorate in theoretical physics.

The film focuses on Hawkings incredible ability to utilize his mental capacities while his physical functions are deteriorating.

Having to rely on a translator or a special computer mounted on his motorized wheelchair to simply communicate, Hawkings refused to give up his studies.

His illness had become his motivation to excel in his academic pursuits.

Morris combines Hawkings' work on a unified theory of physics, outlined in his best-selling book "A Brief History of Time," along with the researcher's life story.

Although much of the information may go over viewer's heads, Director Morris moves the difficult subject matter quickly, using several colorful graphics, including a few scenes from the Disney film "The Black Hole"and interviews with Hawkings' family and former instructors and colleagues.

Whether Hawkings' former classmates are recalling drinking beer at an Oxford pub, or Hawkings himself is telling of his astounding findings regarding black holes or anti-matter, "A Brief History of Time" links the outstanding work of a great mind to a form accessible to us in the ranks of the astro-illiterate.

"A Brief History of Time" plays at 8 p.m. Wednesday, and at 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Thursday, in the K-State Union's Forum Hall, and at 8 p.m. Friday in the Little Theater.

SHOW TIMES

■ "A Brief History of Time" will play at 8 p.m. today, and 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Forum Hall, and at 8 p.m. in the Little Theater. Admission is $1.75 with a student ID.

freshman year even though she did not have the prerequisites to participate in her department's internship program.

"I think students should do a co-op after their freshman or sophomore year because it's early enough for the program to help you figure out what you want to do. It helped me define what I needed academically for my career," Heiniger said.

Undergraduates are not the only ones benefiting from the co-op experience.

"Grad students, and particularly international students, tend to think that co-ops and internships are a waste of time. I want them to know that to understand the real world situation the co-op is very helpful," Krishna Chadalawada, doctoral student in grain science, said.

Chadalawada coordinated research projects between Pizza Hut and K-State's grain science department. The company asked her to return after she graduates.

REUNION

1953 football team to return

Team was first winning one since 1936 campaign

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Nearly 75 former K-State football players from the 1950s are expected to be here this weekend.

They will attend a reunion to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the 1953 team that finished second place in the Big Seven Conference.

The 1953 squad went 6-3-1 under Coach Bill Meek, including a 4-2 mark in the league, but lost its bid to go to the Orange Bowl when Oklahoma won the conference title.

It was K-State's first winning season since 1936 and the Wildcats' best finish since the 1934 team that captured the Missouri Valley title.

Meek's 1954 team went 7-3, marking the first time since 1933-34 that the Cats posted back-to-back winning seasons.

Meek, along with former coach Bus Mertes (1955-59), will be honored at halftime of the game against Western Kentucky.

The reunion was brought about by former athletic director Dick Towers and K-State associate athletic director Veryl Switzer, who was a first-team, all-American halfback in the 1953 season.

"It's healthy to keep the alumni involved, with the program," Switzer said.

"We want them to feel better about the University. We were kind of like brothers back then," he said.

Switzer said even though they will celebrate the 40th anniversary, they should celebrate that decade.

"We want to emphasize on the '50s," he said.

"It's an anniversary year, but my class is just as important as everybody else."

Switzer said many events are planned for the former players.

"On Friday, we'll have a golf outing at 10 a.m.," he said. "Later in the day, we'll tour the football facilities. For some of the guys, this will be their first look at KSU Stadium since they last played in Memorial Stadium.

"We'll have a tailgate party in the west parking lot before the game Saturday," Switzer said.

"We'll be introduced before the game and go back to the tailgating party after the game."

The class of 1953 was honored 20 years ago, but it was just the seniors who were honored.

This will be the first multi-year reunion. Switzer said he hopes to have more reunions.

"Next year, we want to bring back the players that played in the '60s and the '70s," he said.

"The year after, maybe the players from the '80s."

GAME REVIEW

K-State gets 7th straight home win

Snyder impressed with improved 2nd half

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Chapter one of the 1993 season is over, and football coach Bill Snyder wasn't overly impressed with the dialogue of the introduction.

"I think we are a little better football team than we showed today," said Snyder, whose Wildcats have won the past four openers. "I thought we were inconsistent a good portion of the time. I think we did some things that can get football teams beat."

But they didn't. K-State continued its string of season-opening victories, outlasting New Mexico State 34-10 Saturday, Sept. 4 at KSU Stadium.

Snyder said he was pleased, however, with the team's reaction to a slim 10-7 lead at the break.

"Overall, I look at the second half, and I thought we played better," Snyder said. "Our goal coming out of the locker room was just to improve, and I thought we really did."

The Cats also introduced some new characters. Chad May was initiated as the Cats quarterback in the victory, playing in his first contest since transfering to K-State last year.

"I'm not so much satisfied with my performance, but I'm glad to get the win under my belt," said May, who set a personal collegiate best, completing 17 of 30 passes for 228 yards. "And, I got the first game out of the way in a year and a half. So, in that aspect, I feel a lot more comfortable."

May said he was anxious to put doubts to rest about his ability to make the team feel comfortable with its new quarterback.

"I think it was very important," May said of the need of a win to solidify his position and ability. "Especially after nobody has seen me around here, everybody probably had their doubts about me."

The Cats took their initial drive 80 yards, scoring on J.J. Smith's one-yard run and taking a 7-0 lead with 8:38 remaining in the first quarter. After taking a 10-7 lead at halftime, K-State scored once in the third quarter and added 17 more points in the final period.

Although May completed 57 percent of his passes with no interceptions, he still said it should have been better.

"I'm kind of a hard critic," May said. "I think I should have completed 80 percent of my passes."

Coach Bill Snyder said May made some understandable mistakes, considering it was his first game in the Big Eight.

"He made some mistakes, and he's got a lot of improvement in front of him," Snyder said. "But by the same token, I think he got the first game out of the way. And that's not just the first game, but the first game in a major conference across the country. I'm not really concerned that he let some balls get away from him."

K-State has now won seven-straight contests at home, including a 5-0 record last season. The last time the Cats reached that mark was during the stretch through 1917-19.

Despite the opening-day victory Snyder said the Wildcats lacked consistency.

For instance, K-State was kept out of the end zone after Kevin Lockett made an acrobatic catch to give the Cats a first and goal on the three-yard line. New Mexico State took over on a loss of downs inside the one-yard line.

In the second quarter, Rod Schiller, who finished with 102 yards rushing and one touchdown, had a 12-yard touchdown run revoked on an illegal motion penalty. The Cats had to settle for a 24-yard field goal from Tate Wright.

With 40 seconds remaining in the first half, New Mexico State regained possession after May fumbled on first and ten. Aggie quarterback Cory Ledbetter scurried 39 yards up the middle for the Aggies only touchdown with no time on the clock, slicing the Cats lead to 10-7 at the break.

"It was just like a quarterback draw," Snyder said. "And we have to be a better football team of being able to play that kind of thing as well as a quarterback draw.

"I was a little concerned, because we went in the locker room and it changed the momentum, if there was any at that time. I was hoping there would be a quick change of emotion to try to offset the letdown that took place, and it took awhile for it to come."

The Cats now leads the series with New Mexico State 3-0, but as far as Aggie coach Jim Hess is concerned, the series is over.

"I hope so, unless they pay more money," Hess said of whether Saturday's game would end the series. "We can go get beat at Auburn for $330,000."

BIG EIGHT PREVIEW

TEXAS A&M AT OKLAHOMA

FAST FACTS: 2:30 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Norman,Okla. Live on ABC.
RECORDS: Texas A&M (1-0) and Oklahoma (1-0)
ABOUT THE AGGIES: The No. 5 Aggies finished with a 12-1 record last season and a Cotton Bowl appearance. This season the Aggies return 45 lettermen along with 18 starters .

Leading the Aggies rushing attack this season will be Greg Hill. Last season Hill rushed for over 1,300 yardrds in his sophomore season. Defense should be a strong point for the Aggies as they will be led by all-American Sam Adams. Eight starters also return to the defense.

ABOUT THE SOONERS: The Sooners moved up to No. 17 in the AP football poll after tuning up for Texas A&M with a victory over Texas Christian last week. This week the Sooners will get their first challenge of the young season. The Sooners offense returns nine starters from last season's squad led by Cale Gundy. Last season Gundy passed for just under 2,000 yards.

True freshman James Allen carried the bulk of the rushing last week against the Horned Frogs. Allen rolled into Norman as perhaps the most heralded prep running back in Oklahoma's history.

ILLINOIS AT MISSOURI

FAST FACTS: 1:00 p.m., Faurot Field, Columbia, Mo.
RECORDS: Missouri (0-0) and Illinois (0-0)
ABOUT THE TIGERS: The Tigers enter the 1993 season on a two-game winning streak with wins over K-State and Kansas. This season the Tigers return four offensive starters and eight defensive starters. The offense will be led by junior quarterback Jeff Handy. Last season Handy set the school record while passing for 2,436 yards.

Tiger guard Mike Bedosky is pre-season all-American. The Tigers defense will be anchored by eight returning starters. Both cornerback positions will be a strength for Mizzou as both Kevin McIntosh and Jason Oliver return. Missouri leads the overall series against Illinois 6-10.

ABOUT THE FIGHTING ILLINI: Last season, quarterback Jason Verduzco led the Fighting Illini to the Holiday Bowl and Illinois finished with a 6-5-1 record. Verduzco is now gone, but the Fighting Illini look to improve under second-year coach Lou Tepper.

The offense returns six starters, and the defense returns 11 starters. Leading the defense will be first team all-Big Ten selection Dana Howard. Illionois will have to replace Verduzco on offense, but running back Kevin Jackson returns. Last season, Jackson rushed for 481 yards in 87 attemps for a 5.5 yard per carry average. Last season, Illionois defeated the Tigers 24-17 in Champaign.

KANSAS AT MICHIGAN STATE

FAST FACTS: 2:30 p.m., Spartan Stadium, East Lansing Mi. Live on ABC.
RECORDS: Kansas (1-1) and Michigan State (1-0)
ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS: Even though the Jayhawks demolished Western Carolina last week, KU lost three players for the rest of the seson because of injuries. Kansas lost tailback George White, safety Kwamie Lassiter and cornerback Charles Davis.

On the positive side, the Hawks rebounded from their spanking by Florida State two weeks ago with a solid performance last Saturday. This game will mark KU's second tough test of the season, even though the Spartans finished with a losing record last season.
ABOUT THE SPARTANS: Finished with a losing record last season, but still they finished third in the Big Ten.

A tough non-conference record, including Notre Dame and Boston College, led to a sub-par season. This season they will return eight starters to both the offensive and defensive side of the ball. The Spartans will have an advantage, as 76,000 will pack Spartan Stadium for the season opener. Michigan State also leads the series 4-0.

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Western Kentucky. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

POSITION
LINE	The K-State's line held New Mexico State's running attack to 142 yards on 34 carries and allowed 13 runs to go five yards or longer. The Hilltoppers' defensive front is led by defensive end Ben Mooney, who collected four tackles and two quarterback sacks.	☑
LINEBACKERS	The new trio of Kirby Hocutt, Laird Veatch and Percell Gaskins left their mark in Saturday's game. Hocutt led the team in tackles with 11 stops, followed by Veatch with seven and Gaskins with six. Western Kentucky is led by Sheldon Benoit, who had 12 tackles and two deflected passes versus Eastern Kentucky last week.	☑
SECONDARY	Jaime Mendez got a step closer to the Big Eight interception record last week with an interception on the Aggies' third play of the game. He needs eight pick-offs to break the record held by Iowa State's Barry Hill. Kitt Rawlings had seven tackles Saturday. Hilltopper Markell Rice totaled seven tackles and deflected a pass last weekend.	☑

POSITION
LINE	K-State's offensive line allowed the New Mexico State defense to get through the line just four times in 74 plays. The 373 yards by K-State was the most since last year's Temple game when the Cats gathered up 405 yards. The line of Western Kentucky gained 224 yards on the ground against Eastern Kentucky. Last year, the option offense was second in the I-AA games in rushing with 287 yards per game.	☑
WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS	Andre Coleman, Kevin Lockett, Mitch Rawlings and Brad Seib pulled down 228 yards versus the Aggies. In K-State's past two games, the receivers have hauled in 481 yards. The Hilltoppers' receivers don't receive much attention. Against Eastern Kentucky, the three receivers caught the ball just four times for 72 yards.	☑
RUNNING BACKS	The duo of Rod Schiller and J.J. Smith proved they could run, as they gained 142 yards together. Leon Edwards carried the ball just three times, but Coach Bill Snyder said he wants to get the ball to him more often. Western Kentucky used its three backs and the quarterback to run with the ball 55 times in last weeks game. Robert Jackson averaged seven yards a rush last season.	☑
QUARTERBACKS	Chad May passed the test as he broke his own collegiate records last Saturday by throwing 17 times for 228 yards and running for a touchdown. He took his time to look for the open receiver — something that happened only once or twice a game last season. Eddie Thompson took over the Hilltopper offense in game six of last season and rushed for 774 yards in the next five games, including an NCAA record 309 yards for a QB against Southern Illinois.	☑	☑

POSITION
PUNTING	Chad Romano got his first collegiate kick last week and went for 40 yards, but his starting job still might be up in the air if Tate Wright or Eric Hardy punted better in practice. Punter Rick Boeckmann averaged 35 yards in nine punts versus Eastern Kentucky.	☑
PLACE KICKING	Tate Wright went two out of three field goals and connected on all three field goal against the Aggies. He moved into fifth place on the all-time scoring list at 142 points. Hilltopper Chris Pino made a field goal, but missed the extra-point kick last week against Eastern Kentucky.	☑	☑
RETURN	Andre Coleman's 115 yards in punt returns broke Gene's Gill 111-yard mark against Baker in 1950 and was the first to be returned for a touchdown since Charlie Green did it against Colorado in 1978. Jerome DeCarlo also returned a punt for a touchdown last week, as he went 59-yards for his first touchdown. In his four punt returns, he averaged 21 yards a return.	☑

AREA
MOMENTUM	K-State has won two of its past three games and looks to start the season 2-0 for the fourth consecutive season. In the second game of the past three years, K-State has won by an average 43-9. While Western Kentucky beat state-rival and 10th ranked in Division I-AA foe Eastern Kentucky 15-10, they have never beaten a Division-I school in nine tries. The last loss happened to Southwestern Louisiana last season, with a score of 17-14.	☑
COACHING	Jack Harbaugh said winning against Eastern Kentucky was his greatest victory, but he can't sit back and savor the win. Harbaugh has complied a 15-27 record in four-years at Western Kentucky and has been an assistant coach at Pittsburgh, Stanford and Michigan. Coach Bill Snyder tied with Z.G. Cleveland for most career wins as a coach with his 19th win last week. K-State has a seven-game home winning streak and hasn't trailed in any of those games.	☑
THE EDGE	The last time the Cats beat an option offense was Iowa State last year andthe score was 22-13. The defense should hold their running attack below 200 yards. The biggest difference between Division-I A and Division-I AA is depth. K-State's two deep should keep everyone fresh for the entire game, while the Hilltoppers will have to play its starters nearly every play if they want to keep the game close.	☑

Big 8 coaches don't want Mizzou to leave league

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — At least two Big Eight football coaches don't like this Missouri talk about bolting to the Big Ten.

They don't like it at all.

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne and Iowa State coach Jim Walden each said Monday that it would be a shame for Missouri to leave. Walden even takes it personally.

"It just, and this is from me, it hurts my feelings," Walden said during the weekly telephone news conference with league coaches.

"I don't like reading where a member of my family says he likes another family better than mine. I take it a little personally, to tell the truth. I say when you start talking like you don't like me anymore, I think we should give them some options."

Missouri has been courting the Big Ten, saying it believes that league is a better fit academically than the Big Eight. A group led by the Missouri chancellor and athletic director Dan Devine was formed last week to lobby the Big Ten and has a meeting scheduled later this month with Big Ten officials.

"I think when they say that academically their school relates better to the others, I feel like that's a little slap in the face to my place," Walden said. "You don't go to my house to eat and then go outside and say what a bad cook I am. Either shut up or get out. It bothers me a little bit, if you want to know the truth. I don't like it."

Missouri coach Bob Stull doesn't have time to worry about jumping to the Big Ten. Stull is starting his fifth season, and although Devine has expressed his full support, it's time to start making something happen at Faurot Field.

The Tigers have settled their quarterback problem with Phil Johnson — the former starter who didn't sit quietly last year when Jeff Handy took his job — now at Southwest Missouri. Handy should have plenty of people to throw to, and Stull is counting on longtime friend Skip Hall to resurrect a defense that was just short of pitiful last year.

Hall is the new defensive coordinator.

"Skip and I were together for 15 years," Stull said as the Tigers prepared to open Saturday against Illinois in Columbia.

"We've been to eight bowl games together. We've been in the trenches together. We've been through the tough times together."

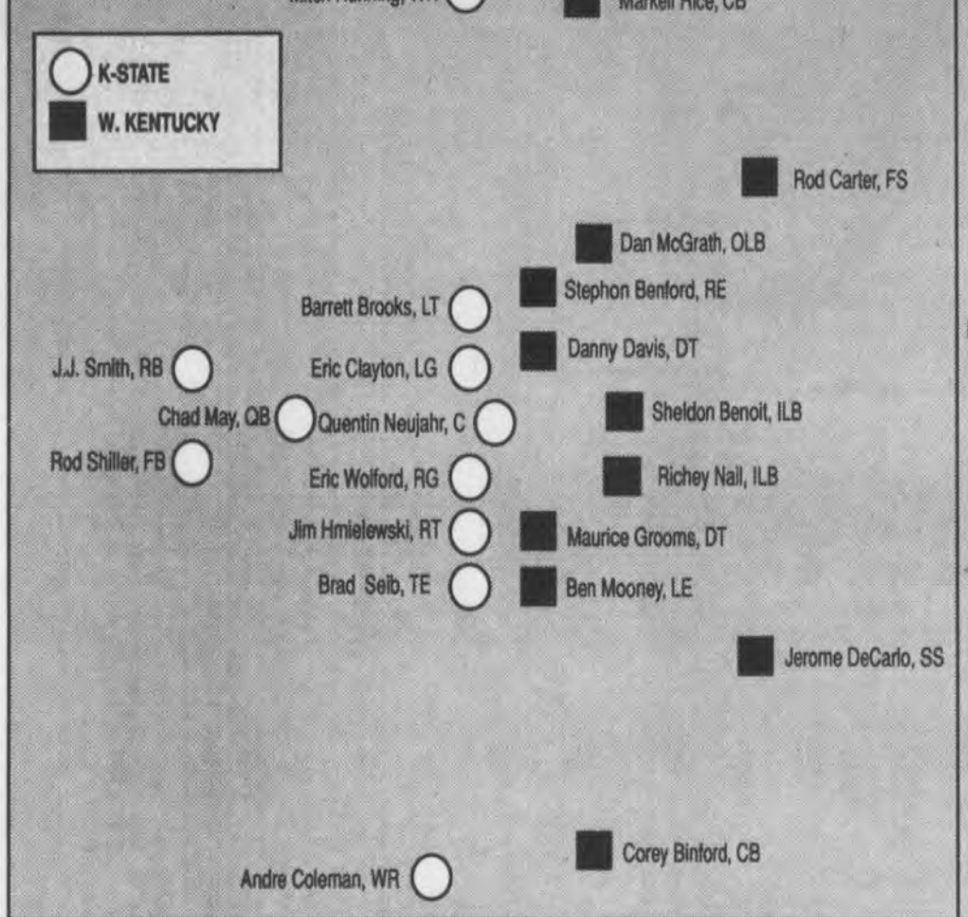
Stull and Hall were both assistants under Don James at Washington.

Injuries have hit Nebraska and Kansas. It could be serious at Kansas, which lost three players for the season and will have a much harder time recovering than the deep Huskers.

"Remember, I'm one of those guys that lived through that (numbers) nightmare when I first got here, and when you start living that nightmare again, you don't like it," Coach Glen Mason said.

Kansas lost tailback George White, safety Kwamie Lassiter and cornerback Charles Davis.

The Huskers crushed North Texas 76-14 in their opener, but at a heavy price.



Osborne lost running back Calvin Jones and quarterback Tommie Frazier. Osborne said Jones would miss at least two weeks while Frazier was very questionable this week against Texas Tech.

"We got hammered pretty badly in that game," Osborne said. "If you figure you've got three, four, five players that you can ill-afford to lose, then we lost two of them."

Oklahoma State is the other Big Eight team besides Missouri to get a late start on the season. The Cowboys play host to Southwest Missouri State this Saturday.

History of play by play

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The year was 1948, and another cold winter had set onto Manhattan — but it was a hot season for Wildcat basketball.

The Cats were in the middle of a 22-6 season that would climax in K-State's first Final Four appearance, and tickets were hard to come by for games in Nichols Gymnasium.

DeVere Nelson, a radio/television major fresh out of the Navy, wanted to practice his trade by doing mock play-by-plays during K-State's game.

Equipped with a Webster Chicago wire recorder and a homemade stand built to hold his notes, DeVere snuck into sold-out Nichols with his equipment with the help of his wife, Dorothy.

But during the player warmups, K-State's coach spotted DeVere with his equipment.

"He came over and asked him, 'What do you think you're doing?'" Dorothy said.

"DeVere explained that he was just practicing game broadcasts for himself, and the coach told him, 'If anybody asks you what you're doing, you just tell them that I said it was all right.'"

That coach was Jack Gardner, who took K-State to two Final Fours, but DeVere later became a legend in his own right.

In the years to come, DeVere became known to a generation of K-Staters as Dev Nelson, "Voice of the Wildcats."

"His personality really came across on the air, especially on radio," said Ralph Titus, general manager of KKSU, a University extension station.

"He was the fastest, most accurate play-by-play man I've ever known."

Nelson broadcast K-State football and basketball games from 1954-79 from KKSU, then known as KSAC, and was named Kansas Sportscaster of the Year five times.

He was also K-State's Sports Information Director from 1966-72. Dev died in January.

K-State dedicated its new $3.3-million dollar press box at KSU Stadium in his name last Friday.

"DeVere would have been pleased but embarrassed that something of this magnitude would have been named after him," Dorothy said.

Dev coined phrases in his broadcasts, such as "rip-snortin', hootenanny, double-barreled, deep-dish dilly," and a shot that was "closer than a sweetheart's whisper," that became part of the common vocabulary of Manhattan.

Steve Smethers, who worked as an undergraduate intern at KSAC when Nelson did play-by-play from the station, said it was Nelson's Midwestern roots that made him so loved at K-State.

"Paul DeWeese and Dev Nelson were just excellent broadcasters — the best pair that K-State's probably ever had," Smethers said. "Those great folksy sayings — they were Kansas State."

"One time they were down in Norman during basketball season, and K-State was down by about six," he said. "Dev turned to DeWeese and said, 'Well Paul, I'll bet you a piece of pie in Wellington, Kansas, that the Wildcats will come back in this game.'

"What a great image for K-State."

The Nelsons both attended school in Marquette, Kan., where they first met at a young age — Dev was in second grade; Dorothy in first.

"He was always a holy terror," Dorothy said.

Dev entered the Navy after graduation, and following World War II, joined Dorothy at K-State and entered the broadcasting curriculum.

After school, the Nelsons moved around Kansas and Nebraska as Nelson took a variety of radio jobs.

For 10 years, Nelson broadcast Big Eight and high-school games and did sports anchoring for WIBW in Topeka, but he eventually came back to Manhattan as K-State's on-air announcer.

"He was happy as long as he was at K-State," Dorothy said. "He was a real big booster, and his real love was broadcasting, especially sportscasting."

Nelson's experiences as the "Voice of the Wildcats" left him plenty of stories to tell his co-workers.

"Dev used to talk about a basketball game at Missouri in the old Brewer Fieldhouse," Smethers said. "That was when going to Missouri was an automatic win.

"They had a dirt track surrounding the court, and Dev's seat was on it. But there was a layer of water on the track, and once in a while he would get an electric shock through his equipment," he said.

"He was getting grounded through the water, and during his broadcast he would say, 'Here's Kansas STATE! bringing the ball UP! court."

But even after covering K-State basketball's glory years of Final Fours and Big Eight championships, Dev's associates said it was a football game that stuck out as his most memorable moment as "Voice of the Wildcats."

"When Vince Gibson became football coach here, there really wasn't a lot to cheer about," Smethers said.

"He really captured people's imagination — he brought 'We're gonna win' and 'Purple Pride' with him. Even in his first year when they went 1-10, he was recruiting players like Lynn Dickey and Steve Grogan."

In 1969, Dickey had a career day as the Cats pummeled Oklahoma, 59-21 — a loss that still stands as OU's worst football defeat.

"It was so bad that Oklahoma later accused K-State of running up the score," Smethers said.

"Part of Dev's job as SID was he had to call the networks, including ABC's 'Wide World of Sports,' and give them the score. He called the station and said, 'This is Dev Nelson, and I have a score to report."

But no one believed Nelson, and he went through about six different people before they finally accepted the score as official.

"Bud Wilkinson, who was a former OU coach, was calling a game on national television when the score of the game crawled across the screen. Dev said Wilkinson saw the score and stopped talking in mid-sentence and then said, 'Ladies and gentleman, ignore that score — it's obviously wrong. We'll call and get back to you the correct score.'

"Nobody would believe Dev, and he said that was the most memorable game he ever covered," Smethers said.

Nelson's years in broadcasting also had some memorable off-the-air moments.

"One of the trademarks of broadcasting in those days were trying to break people up on the air — getting them to laugh," Titus said.

"When I was a student back in 1954, one time I was doing the five o'clock news, and Dev was waiting to do the sports. He grabbed one of those old soda-and-acid fire extinguishers and started waving the nozzle around.

"I didn't laugh, so he decided to shoot out a tiny bit of foam at me."

Nelson didn't know that once the chemicals were mixed, the extinguisher would expel all of its contents.

"I lost it," Titus said.

"The entire studio was filled with foam, and there's a grown man on the floor who had rolled under a piano in the room so his laughter wouldn't go over the air.

"For a long time, all we broadcast were peals of laughter."

Dev Nelson talks with his partner Paul DeWeese before a game. Nelson was the 'Voice of the Wildcats' from 1954-79.

Norma Lawrence, who worked with Nelson during his years as K-State's Sports Information Director in the '60s, said working in the small SID department with Nelson was always a joy.

"Dev was a real fun person to live with, and it was still big business, but the office was a little more relaxed than it is now," she said.

"Dev had nicknames for a lot of different people and would also associate them with something," Lawrence said. "David Von Riesen was the photographer at Photo Services then, and whenever David would come into the office, Dev would ask if he parked his Messerschmitt outside."

Nelson's colleagues liked to return his jokes with some of their own.

"We had an assistant basketball coach, Gene Robbins, and DeLoss Dodds, who was a track coach at the time," Lawrence said. "They were always pulling something on Dev.

"Dev had this bright, yellow car that he drove, and one day they came up to me and said, 'Come here.' I looked out the window, and they had lifted up his little car and put it horizontally in the stall."

"Sometimes they'd take the car and push it down the street," she said. "He never knew where he was going to find it."

But one thing Nelson took very seriously was his allegiance to K-State.

"We bought a purple-and-white car when Gibson was football coach," Dorothy said.

"The only reason we got it was because of the color. That's how powerful DeVere's purple was."

But one of his Nelson's trademarks was the nonpartisan nature of his broadcasts. After K-State beat Kansas in a Big Eight tournament game, Dorothy said Nelson commiserated with one Jayhawk fan about KU's loss.

"He was so knowledgeable on sports, even on the teams K-State played that he could talk like one of them," she said.

"The man shook Dev's hand and said, 'Thanks, Max.' I said, 'DeVere, that man thinks you're Max Falkenstien (KU's play-by-play announcer).' But he just said, 'I know, but I don't want to embarrass him.'"

When K-State decided to sell the rights to its athletic broadcasts, Nelson lost his position as Wildcat announcer.

"I think that Dev really never got over that decision," Smethers said. "That's not to take away from any of the other play-by-play announcers like Mitch Holthus, but it was the end of an era."

After his retirement from broadcasting, Nelson opened "Dev's Dugout," a sports memorabilia store that offered a variety of trading cards and a friendly ear to talk about sports.

"He was always pleased when someone was interested in the history of the sport instead of looking for investments," Dorothy said.

"It was a neat store, kind of clunky. When his health started to go down and he was ready to quit, someone came along with cash and bought it."

Dev had workaholic habits for most of his broadcasting years, but found time for fishing, sailing and camping trips with his two children, Greg and Jana Lee.

Jana Lee is a registered nurse, and Greg, who earned a nuclear engineering degree at K-State, went to medical school. He is a physician.

But even for the people closest to him, Dev's passion for sports was always a mystery.

"I don't know what it was," Dorothy said. "He was always that way. He was always DeVere."

"He was absolutely the best play-by-play announcer I've ever known and was a gregarious, warm human being," Titus said. "What a true professional."

BIG EIGHT FOOTBALL

OSU, MU set for season openers

Tigers face arch-rival Illinois in Columbia Saturday

SCOTT FRITCHEN
Collegian

When Missouri concluded the 1992 season, it ended a disappointing year on a positive note, finishing with the longest winning streak in the Big Eight Conference.

Missouri faces arch-rival Illinois in Columbia, Mo. on Saturday.

The Tigers won two straight, against K-State and Kansas, and ended the season 3-8 and tied for last in the conference with a 2-5 record.

Despite the fact that Missouri has failed to have a winning record since 1983, Coach Bob Stull signed a two-year contract extension and enters his fifth season hoping to improve the Tigers' success.

Much of Missouri's success will depend on the play of junior quarterback Jeff Handy, who earned Missouri's passing offense a seventh-place ranking nationally.

Last season, Handy earned all-conference honorable mention, led the conference in total offense (2,391 yards), completed 59 percent of his passes for 2,436 yards and 13 touchdowns—the most impressive statistics by a sophomore in Big Eight history.

However, there were no Missouri ball carriers who ranked among the top 15 in the conference as their rushing offense was ranked No. 106 out of 107 NCAA Division I-A teams.

Junior running back Joe Freeman, led the effort with 360 yards and five touchdowns.

The receivers were productive last season, with senior Kenny Holly catching 60 passes for 663 yards and one touchdown. Against Oklahoma State, Holly set a school record by catching 15 passes.

Senior Mike Bedosky, who was named academic all-Big Eight and is an all-America candidate, returns as the only returning starter on the offensive front, which gave up just 18 sacks a year ago.

Senior Tim Alvarado, who is capable of playing either guard or tackle, also has some starting experience and should add a strong effort.

The defense ranked 85th in total defense, 68th in scoring defense, and 103rd against the run.

It is led by defensive guard Rick Lyle, who had 42 tackles last season, led the team with five sacks.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL RULE CHANGES

- The hash marks are 60 feet from the sidelines. (Previous distance was 53 feet, 4 inches. Distance between hash marks is 40 feet as opposed to 53 feet, 4 inches.)
- Face masks and helmets must be secured by a four-point chin strap.
- When a participant suffers a laceration or wound where oozing or bleeding occurs, the player or game official shall go to the team area and be given proper medical treatment. He may not return to the game without approval of medical personnel.
- "Team A" player may not advance a planned loose ball in the vicinity of the snapper. (This rule renders the "fumblerooskie" an illegal play from scrimmage.)
- Specifically, prohibited acts and conduct include: Any delayed, excessive, or prolonged act by which a player attempts to draw attention to himself. Penalty -15 yards. Succeeding spot. Penalize as a dead ball foul. Flagrant offenders, if players or substitutes, shall be disqualified.
- A legal substitute becomes a player when he enters the field and communicates with a teammate or an official, enters the huddle, is positioned in an offensive or defensive formation, or participates in a play.

Cowboys to battle Southwest Missouri State

BOB MACHA

Oklahoma State head football coach Pat Jones said he doesn't discuss specific numerical goals with his players very often.

"We just go at it one game at a time and let the chips fall where they may," said Jones as his team prepares for Southwest Missouri State this weekend in Stillwater, Okla.

Last season, that approach lead to a 4-6-1 overall record and a fifth-place conference finish. Jones earned Associated Press Big Eight Coach of the Year for the 1992 season after the Cowboys went 0-10-1 in 1991.

The Cowboys return 38 lettermen from last year, and Jones said he sees his team finishing in the middle of the pack somewhere.

"On paper, I see Colorado, Nebraska, and six other people," Jones said.

Keith Burns, a preseason all-America and all-Big Eight pick from a year ago, will anchor the defense. He was last season's Big Eight Newcomer of the Year.

"He's a good college football player," Jones said.

Lorenzo Green, who saw limited action last year, and Tyler Williams will fill the vacancies left at the defensive tackle position by the graduations of David Brooks and Elmer Williams.

"We should certainly be adequate there, maybe better," Jones said.

Jason Gildon will be back at left end, needing three sacks to shatter former OSU great and all-American Leslie 'O Neal's record. Gildon has missed just one start in three seasons since arriving in Stillwater. Ship Walker is a junior college transfer who will start at right end.

Senior Scott Harmon will lead the secondary playing at free safety. Harmon is a two-time all-Big Eight pick and has started 25 games in a row.

Jones said quarterback Gary Porter has improved since his freshman season last year.

"He has a big-time arm." Jones said,

"Even though it's a long ways off, he's got the kind of arm for the NFL. He's got a shot."

Mark Williams , who started three games last season, will be back at tailback. John White, who started the final four contests, will also return.

Mark Spatz started three games and will be back again. Senior Roger Franks, who was the starter in the other eight contests, is preparing for his final campaign.

Rafeal Denson has switched to z-back from flanker. He also started four games at tailback in 1992.

All the starters on the line return from a year ago. Matt Jose and Scott Hall have 24 and 22 starts in a row, while center Scott Hall has started 20 consecutive games.

Shannon Culver hauled in 41 catches for 629 yards and four touchdowns and was named the Big Eight Newcomer of the Year last season.

Lacrosse coach sets high goals

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Curt Thurman has set some rather lofty goals for this year's men's lacrosse team.

Thurman, president and coach of the unit, said he hopes to take the Cats one step further than last season's squad, which finished 11-1 and made a Final Four Tournament appearance.

"Our goal this year is to go undefeated," he said.

Thurman said he is in the process of scheduling a tournament at K-State and has sent out more than 30 flyers to schools in six states across the Midwest. The tournament would be played at Memorial Stadium Oct. 2-3.

"I am hoping to hear from five or six teams to have the tournament," Thurman said.

Playing lacrosse does not take special ability or talent, and recruiting players is a key role, Thurman said.

"If you have any type of athletic ability you can play lacrosse. Anyone is welcome to play," he said. "Recruiting is a big part of it, just like any organization."

The team participates in the Great Plains Lacrosse League. Last season the team went 11-1. Their only setback came at the Final Four Tournament at the end of the season against Wichita State University.

"We had beaten them twice, and it is hard to beat them three times," Thurman said.

Practices began Aug. 24 for the fall season.

More than 70 people, ages ranging from 17 to 30, are members of the squad. The team was established on the campus in fall 1989.

There is no set schedule for fall play.

"We play different teams that are out of your league," Thurman said.

The schedule is set for the spring, and the fall season can be compared to football teams that play non-conference preseason games. Thurman, senior in social sciences, said, "It is fun to play someone you have never played before."

Thurman said he is trying to schedule games with Nebraska or Creighton on Sept. 18 or 19.

Conflicts with school events and football games have caused some teams to forfeit during the fall season.

"We try and have games when football is not here," Thurman said. "Many teams will forfeit games because of homecoming and football."

Volleyball team breaks even in tournament

Senior player named to all-tournament volleyball team from K-State

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The Wildcat volleyball team stepped on the court last Friday to play in the Kansas State Invitational, but a key part of the team was missing from the line-up.

Co-captain Chi Dau was scratched from the line-up on Wednesday after a doctor's examination revealed an irregular heartbeat.

"We found out after the press conference on Wednesday," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "The doctor said that she would be taking medication and that she could be back this week for the tournament at Iowa."

Even with Dau's absence the Cats finished third in the invitational with a 2-2 record. The Cats defeated both Drake University, 3-1, and the University of Tulsa, 3-2, in the second annual tournament.

After losing the first and third games to Tulsa, the Cats rallied in the last two games of the match for the victory.

"This team never quits," Hagemeyer said. "We will never assume anything, and we will always work."

Leading the comeback for the Cats were freshman Yolanda Young, who finished with 16 kills, and senior Stephanie Liester. Liester finished the match with 12 kills and 11 digs. She was also selected to the all-tournament team.

"I spent a lot of time this summer working for this season," Liester said. "My knowledge of the game has helped me so far this year."

Hagemeyer said Liester worked on her shots over the summer.

"She concentrated on developing her shots," Hagemeyer said. "She now mixes up her shots, and she has the ability to not be predictable anymore. I'm very happy for her."

In their second match Friday night, the Cats collided with eventual tournament champion Baylor. The Bears used several runs to put away the Cats in three games.

Liester and Young again led the Cats as both finished the match with nine kills. Sophomore Jill Dugan also contributed with 10 digs, and freshman Kate DeClerk had eight digs.

"It's too early to say that we were flat," Hagemeyer said. "We are still getting a feel for different line-ups, different opponents and how we want things done."

The Cats finished the tournament Saturday with a win and a loss. The win came against Drake with the score of 3-1, as the Cats again rallied after losing the first game. Then in the last game of the invitational the Cats lost to Oregon State 3-0.

Liester again led the Cats against the Beavers. She tallied 10 kills and seven digs for the match. DeClerk also had seven digs, and senior Wendy Garrett had 21 assists.

"The invitational helped the players look at what they need to work on," Hagemeyer said. "The players found out what they are good at, what they like and what they don't like."

The Cats will travel to Iowa City, Iowa, to play in the University of Iowa Invitational from Sept. 10-11. The four-team tournament will feature Iowa, Washington State and Wright State.

Rugby team looks for players

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

North of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is where some of the toughest K-State women go to practice their game.

The game is rugby.

"I used to date a guy on the rugby team here," said LaDonna Grenz, coach of the women's rugby team and graduate student in laboratory medicine. "He talked about how much fun it was, and I decided to get involved."

Grenz is in charge of recruiting players.

"It's not easy," she said. "I try to recruit girls that I have seen in a game or just try to find girls that look strong and athletic."

One of those players is Becky Burton, who has played for the past five years at Montana and is pursuing a doctoral degree in biology.

"I played soccer for years," she said. "Then I saw an ad in the school newspaper, and it sounded like fun."

"When I went to Montana State, there wasn't any team, and I enjoyed playing so much that a friend of mine and myself decided to start a team just for fun," Burton said.

Cyndi Cushing, junior in geography and anthropology, became interested in rugby for a different reason than Burton, she said.

"I always wanted to play football, but I never could find a team they let girls play on, and rugby seemed like the next-best thing," Cushing said.

Cushing also said she enjoys the opportunity to meet new friends and travel around the area to play games.

However, the team does not have enough players to make up a full squad of 15.

"We lost eight players from last year's team, and it has been a real struggle to find enough replacements for them," Grenz said.

The team has placed ads in several local newspapers and has hung posters all over the campus.

"If we can't round up enough players, we will still travel to our scheduled games and participate," Grenz said.

Another problem the team faces is lack of money. The team receives $750 from the University and depends heavily on fundraisers to finance their trips.

"We understand that we are a club sport and we can't get much support from the University, so we work really hard at our fundraisers," Grenz said.

The team plays the majority of its games in Kansas City and Wichita, because they are considered a halfway point between K-State and the other schools the team plays.

The team plays a conference schedule that includes every team in the Big Eight Conference except Oklahoma and Nebraska.

Rock climbers seek thrill of 'the Wall'

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Vance Stiefel, senior in entomology, reaches to establish a handhold as he approaches the top of Memorial Stadium. The rock climbing club uses the walls of Memorial Stadium to practice climbing techniques.

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

The K-State Rock Climbing Club is looking up at another great year.

George Rieck, senior in civil engineering and club member, said after 12 years, the club is again trying to expand its membership.

"At the first part of every semester, we do some advertising in the Collegian and try to recruit some members," Rieck said. "We'll have a meeting at 'the Wall' to give any new people a chance to do what they've maybe never done before."

"We give instructions on how to tie knots and about 'top-roping,' the kind of climbing we do at 'the Wall,'" he said.

Top-roping is when there is a rope at the top of where your climbing to, Rieck said.

"With top-roping, you're never going to fall very far. It's like a pulley system," he said. "The person climbing is tied into one end of the rope, and the person on the ground is tied into the other. As the climber climbs further up the rock, the person on the ground pulls in the rope."

The person on the ground is called the climber's belay partner, he said.

"The idea is to never let there be any slack. So, if the person loses their grip or position on the rock, they won't fall very far — only a few inches," Rieck said.

Todd Thomas, junior in construction science and club member, said sometimes a climber just can't walk up to the top of the rock like at the stadium. In tougher situations, he said, one has to "lead-climb" to get to a secure top-roping position.

"You lead-climb with aluminum wedges and chocks and other climbing gear that you can insert into the rock face," Thomas said. "If you yank, and it doesn't come out, you know you've got a good placement. Then you can hook on and continue to climb."

Rieck, who has been climbing for three years, emphasized that lead-climbing is more advanced. He also said it is important for people to realize rock climbing can be dangerous.

"It's not like jogging or swimming. If you go out and try to do something you're not ready to do, you really can get hurt," Rieck said. "It's very safe as long as you follow some basic rules. Go out and be stupid, and someone can get hurt."

The right equipment, such as form-fitting, streamlined climbing shoes, can help you climb and even protect you, Thomas said.

"They're a thin, stiff-soled shoe specifically designed to stick better to rock than any other kind of shoe," he said. "You could climb barefooted or use a really stiff hiking shoe, but you need the special climbing shoes on really difficult climbs, or it's almost impossible."

However, climbing gear can be expensive.

"There's a pretty wide range of prices when you're buying shoes and ropes. You can pay from $80 to $180 and beyond for a pair of climbing shoes and from $150 to $250 for a rope," Thomas said.

Rieck said that although most club members own all of their own equipment, the club has a few pairs of shoes and ropes for general use as well.

Mike Ganzman, junior in park resource management and president of the club, said the club needs to buy some new equipment, including ropes, webbing and shoes.

Ganzman said membership dues would probably be between $5 and $10 per semester this year to help pay for the new equipment.

The number of members in the club has increased recently.

"There's probably between 15 and 20 in the core group now — those people who actually come out and climb," he said.

When it comes to planning out-of-town trips, Rieck said the club as a whole will occasionally organize them, but usually it tends to be more informal.

"Usually it's like 'Hey, I got this weekend off.' And maybe my partner will say 'Hey, I'm free too.' So, we'll go out to wherever," he said.

Thomas said he thinks there is an international professional climbing circuit.

"I think you can sometimes catch it on ESPN, but the club doesn't compete or anything," he said.

"For me, at least, it's just a very intense mental and physical test. It's knowing when and how to push the limit. It's just one of those things I've always wanted to do. After my first time, I was just hooked — literally."

Cyclists cautioned to obey rules

Campus regulations often vague; signs warn of common offenses

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Bike riding is a popular way to get around campus, but riders should be aware of the rules and regulations concerning bikes on the K-State campus.

Most problems Parking Services sees concern riding on sidewalks, riding at unsafe speeds and chaining bikes to handicap rails and ramps, Dwain Archer, manager of Parking Services, said.

Parking Services oversees the regulations of bicycle safety on campus.

"Stay off the sidewalks, and use the streets and bike lanes," Tim Schrag, campus patrol officer, said. And, he said, lock them only to bike racks.

The rules concerning bicycles on campus are not always clear.

"The regulations are loosely structured. We have been involved in trying to come up with standard regulations for bike riders," Archer said. "We worked on it last year with SGA and hope to continue this way. The entire program includes a set of regulations and a bike route."

According to the parking and traffic regulations, bicycles should be parked only in bike racks and are not allowed in buildings.

It also states that bicyclists should ride on designated bike paths and lanes when available.

Riders are asked to adhere to the posted signs, meaning the no-bike-riding, stay-off-the-grass and use-available-bike-racks signs, Archer said.

The new signs were put up last year, Schrag said.

Parking Services does not give many tickets to bicycle owners, Lance Lunsway, parking control supervisor, said.

"We are trying to talk to them more than anything," Lunsway said. "People are normally considerate."

The biggest problem is riding on the sidewalk, he said.

"We just tell them they need to walk. Most of them say 'OK,'" Lunsway said.

Other officials have a different perception of riders.

"Some students tend to ignore you when asked to get off their bike," Steve Splichal, parking control officer, said.

If a bike is parked on a handicap railing or obstructing a doorway, the owner could receive a $10 ticket or possibly have his or her bicycle impounded, Archer said.

"The actual possession is done by the police department, not by parking enforcement officers," he said.

"Most of the time, the bikes are parked in the bike racks where they are supposed to be. I don't think there is that big of a problem," Splichal said.

He said he has not given any tickets to anyone parked inside or obstructing doorways.

"We don't go out looking for people breaking the law," Lunsway said. "If someone sees a bicycle obstructing a doorway, we give a ticket to everyone who is breaking a rule."

Bicycles an easy target for campus thieves

"You should start with a good Krypto lock. Attach your bike to a safe bike rack and never to a tree or a sign."

RICHARD HERRMAN
INVESTIGATOR FOR THE K-STATE POLICE

LORI ARMER
Collegian

Many students, because of parking problems and living situations, opt to ride bicycles to campus.

In turn, this situation has resulted in an increasing bike-theft problem for University students.

Richard Herrman, investigator for the K-State Police, said between January and November 1992, there were 61 secured, 11 unsecured and 11 unspecified bicycles reported stolen from the K-State campus or from greek houses.

Although the problem does not appear to be greater this semester, about four bicycles have been reported stolen to campus police, Herrman said.

There are several tips on how to protect your bicycle from being stolen, he said.

"You should start with a good Krypto lock. Attach your bike to a safe bike rack and never to a tree or a sign. Be sure to record the serial number and color. You can't identify and prove it's yours without that," Herrman said.

Bicyclists can fill out registration cards at the campus police office to record this information.

Marcia Bertsch, senior in anthropology, had her bicycle stolen last year.

"It was stolen off of the front porch of my house. They broke my porch to get it," Bertsch said.

"I called Riley County Police because it was off-campus. I never got it back, but a report was taken, and I filed an insurance claim," she said.

The question of where the bikes go after they are stolen remains a mystery, Bruce Michal, owner of Manhattan Pawn Shop, said.

"It's rare for people to bring stolen merchandise into pawn shops because it is closely regulated. We get identification, the brand name, the serial number and the color and send a copy of the paperwork to the police department to find matches," Michal said.

The National Crime Information Center is a national computer system that is used to cross-check stolen bike reports.

Herrman said when students realize their bikes have been stolen on campus, they should go directly to the campus police and file a theft report.

He said if this is done, a cross-reference can be done to check found and stolen bicycles.

A copy of lost and found is also sent to the Riley County Police Department.

BICYCLE RULES AND REGULATIONS

A. NO PERMIT IS REQUIRED TO RIDE BICYCLES OR TO USE BICYCLE RACKS PROVIDED ON CAMPUS. BICYCLES MAY BE REGISTERED, FREE OF CHARGE, WITH THE KSU POLICE FOR SECURITY PURPOSES.

B. BICYCLES SHALL BE PARKED ONLY IN BICYCLE RACKS. THEY ARE NOT PERMITTED IN BUILDINGS. VIOLATORS ARE SUBJECT TO BICYCLE IMPOUNDMENTS.

C. BICYCLISTS SHALL OBEY ALL VEHICULAR TRAFFIC RULES AND BE LIABLE FOR APPLICABLE FINES AND PENALTIES. IN ADDITION, BICYCLISTS MAY RIDE IN THE STREET AND ON DESIGNATED BIKE PATHS AND BIKE LANES.

BRITTON HARPER/Collegian

"KSU assumes no responsibility for stolen bikes. We can only keep an eye on suspicious behavior," Herrman said. "Students should check their own bikes daily."

Senate roll-call vote for Kansas, Missouri

This is how the Kansas and Missouri delegations voted in the 65-34 roll call by which the Senate voted Tuesday to confirm Dr. Joycelyn Elders to be surgeon general of the Public Health Service.

On this vote, a "yes" was a vote to confirm Elders, and a "no" was a vote to reject her. Voting "yes" were 52 Democrats and 13 Republicans. Voting "no" were four Democrats and 30 Republicans.

Kansas: Dole (R) No; Kassebaum (R) Yes.

Missouri: Bond (R) No; Danforth (R) Yes.

Shooting suspect may not have acted alone

WICHITA (AP) — A witness has renewed speculation that a pro-life activist charged with shooting a Wichita abortion physician may not have acted alone.

Stacey Pack, a nurse at Dr. George Tiller's clinic, testified in Sedgwick County District Court on Tuesday that she chased suspect Rachelle "Shelley" Shannon down a city street following the shooting Aug. 19.

When Shannon reached the end of the block, a man in a blue car called out directions to her, Pack said.

"Meet me at the first square," the man in the car shouted at Shannon, Pack said.

Nobody explained the statement Pack attributed to the man. However, District Attorney Nola Foulston, who is prosecuting the case, confirmed afterward that police are investigating whether the shooter had help.

"There is continued review into that," she said.

Shannon, 37, of Grants Pass, Ore., was bound over for a Nov. 15 trial following Tuesday's preliminary hearing. She is being held on $1-million bail on one count of attempted first-degree murder plus two counts of aggravated assault, filed Tuesday, alleging she pointed the gun at two clinic workers.

Dunn to be allowed to testify in hearing

TOPEKA (AP) — A U.S. District judge says he will allow Lisa Dunn to testify during a hearing to block her extradition to Arkansas.

U.S. District Judge Dale Saffels said Wednesday he doesn't know what Dunn will offer as testimony, but he will grant her attorney's request for the Oct. 1 hearing to keep Dunn from being extradited.

Dunn faces the death penalty in Arkansas if she is convicted there for her alleged involvement in the 1985 death of a convenience store clerk.

OU president accused of nepotism with raise

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — The wife of University of Oklahoma President Richard Van Horn said her qualifications are the reason she received a $22,500 raise. But a state legislator critical of the increase said it is due to nepotism.

Dr. Betty Pfefferbaum, Van Horn's wife, is the new chief of child psychiatry at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center. She was given a 37.5-percent salary increase, raising her salary from $60,000 to $82,500 a year.

The University of Oklahoma Board of Regents approved the raise. Van Horn is prevented from being involved in decisions about his wife's salary as part of an agreement approved before he came to the university in 1989.

Dr. Douglas Voth, executive dean of the university's College of Medicine, said in a statement last week Pfefferbaum does not report to Van Horn.

Pfefferbaum said Tuesday the raise reflected her new administrative duties and the tight market for child psychiatrists.

"It had to do with my qualifications as a child psychiatrist," Pfefferbaum said.

She said it wasn't because of her husband's influence.

State Rep. Leonard Sullivan, R-Oklahoma City, said he disagreed.

"It is nepotism at its worst form no matter how you coat it," Sullivan said.

Book canceled following hoax claims

NEW YORK (AP) — Warner Books said it canceled publication of "The Diary of Jack the Ripper" just one month before 200,000 copies were to go on sale because it now believes the book is a fake.

"It's conclusive that it's a hoax," Kelly O'Keefe, a spokeswoman for the publisher, said today.

Warner Books, the book's American distributor, decided to cancel based on a report by Kenneth Rendell, a dealer in historical documents who debunked the Hitler diaries in 1983.

The publisher hired Rendell after a story two months ago in the Washington Post raised doubts about the diary's authenticity.

While the purported diary dealt with murders committed by a serial killer in London in 1888, O'Keefe said an ion migration analysis showed the ink on the paper dates from 1921, plus or minus 12 years.

The Washington Post today quoted Warner President Larry Kirshbaum as saying, "Despite the (book's) huge sales potential, our credibility means more."

However, the book's British publisher said to the Post he believes the diary is genuine and still plans to publish it.

To O'Keefe's knowledge, only Warner had canceled its printing.

Decision jeopardizes peace talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — In a decision that could threaten the Middle East peace talks, the Supreme Court on Wednesday asked Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to fire a minister and a deputy minister who are under investigation for corruption.

The two, Interior Minister Aryeh Deri and Deputy Minister of Religious Affairs Rafael Pinchasi, belong to the ultra-Orthodox Shas Party.

Shas has threatened to bolt Rabin's ruling coalition if Deri and Pinchasi are fired. Shas has six seats in the 120-seat Parliament.

Without Shas, Rabin could continue to rule with a thin one-vote margin because his coalition would still control 56 seats and have the support of five Arab legislators who are not part of the coalition.

But Shas' departure would rob Rabin of his Jewish majority for making peace with the Arabs and weaken his ability to grant concessions in the peace talks.

South African groups to end white rule

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — With the end of white rule within sight, Nelson Mandela said today the African National Congress will call for lifting the last international sanctions against South Africa.

In an unemotional moment that belied the significance of their move, the white government and black groups agreed late Tuesday to form a multiracial council that will help rule the country until a new government is elected next vear.

The council will severely weaken the president's powers, oversee the security forces and force the white-minority government to share power with black people for the first time.

One of the most striking aspects of the 41-page bill permits the council to reverse a state of emergency or other stepped-up security measures to quell political violence.

Repair reflections

VINCENT P. LAVERGNE Collegian

Carol Fitzgerald, facilities painter, trims the edges of a new window with waterproofing material at Lafene Health Center on Wednesday afternoon. Lafene requested that the opaque windows be replaced with clear ones. Fitzgerald spent most of the day knocking out the old glass and inserting the new windows.

Mildew can cause health problems

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

It's black and furry. It's growing in the basement of Dickens Hall.

For the past three years, Eric Gibson and Kevin Chartier, graduate students in statistics, have shared an office with a crop of mold, which they say has disrupted their work and caused them health problems.

"I am supposed to be helping students in here, but when people walk in, they're almost knocked out by the smell," Gibson said.

Water is seeping in from the ground outside, causing the paint to peel on the west wall of the office. Besides the mold, the seepage has left brown calcium deposits on the light-colored walls.

All the offices on the west side of the Dickens basement have similar damage.

Gibson and Chartier said that since they moved into the moldy office, they have had health problems such as runny noses, sore throats and fatigue.

Gibson said his allergies had not bothered him in Kansas until he moved into the office. Chartier said he did not have allergies but was bothered by the mold.

"This is not like a door that needs varnished or a light that needs fixed," Gibson said. "This stuff is making people sick."

Judy Williamson, the Environmental Health Supervisor for Riley County, said individuals can have allergic reactions to mold and mildew, but it was not considered a public health problem. Therefore, there are no laws or regulations governing its removal.

Ron Bridges, the campus sanitarian, said the mold did not pose a health risk.

He said because of the rain, there was mold growing in places on campus where there had never been before, but he had not heard

Anderson Hall is best choice to be campus freezer

The renovation of Anderson Hall seems to be going smoothly. But the question of funding has arisen on campus. "How does a school that is cutting departments and disenfranchising English GTAs come up with more than $1 million?"

May we suggest that K-State is actually saving money by not having to pay the air-conditioning bill for Anderson.

Parts of the building, namely the President's Conference Room, are kept at a constant 60 degrees. Yes, boys and girls, on those warm summer days when the students in Seaton sit and sweat, the conference room resembles a climate-controlled cooler.

A sticker on the thermostat warns occupants not to change the setting, as condensation will result. We fear they may be correct, as propping the door open with a trash can for 45 minutes turns the ceiling into a watery mess. It doesn't take long to create rain.

Perhaps a compromise can be accomplished that will benefit all on campus. When the air conditioning fails in a classroom, that class could be temporarily moved to the President's Conference Room. At other times, the president will have his conferences in a newly renovated room.

And maybe, just maybe, this time someone will observe the other sticker on the wall — the one that says in big bold letters – CONSERVE ENERGY.

A Tale of round tables and taxes

So, The Moral of this story is, "A Knight's ass is not worth a piggy."

"Daddy, will you tell us a bedtime story?" asked my 8-year-old son."Yeah, tell us a weally gwoss, putwid one," chimed my 5-year-old, who has not yet incorporated the letter "R" into his unusually sophisticated repertoire of adjectives.

OK, but you have to promise me you will not have nightmares.

"Promise."

"Pwomise."

All right, here we go.

Once upon a time, long before there was Nintendo or Super Mario Bros., there was a Wonderful Kingdom where The People were generally happy. This was because they could send a Knight of their own choosing to the Great Round Table who would speak for The People he represented and tell the King his Home People's needs.

"Wow! Even before Nintendo or Supa Mawio? That's weally ancient!"

Quiet! Or I am not going to tell the story.

But the most important thing was that the Knights of the Great Round Table had to be very Honest and Trustworthy. Like all Great Kingdoms, The Wonderful Kingdom possessed a very large amount of gold that it kept in a place called The People's Piggy, and it was used by the King and the Knights of the Great Round Table to help The People. The People gave the gold to the Kingdom in the form of a Tax.

"Daddy, what is a tax?"

Well, a "tax" is money that the government takes from you when you get a job and earn money. The harder you work, the less you earn, but the more you have to pay. They use it to buy $600 toilet seats and do scientific studies on the mating habits of paperclips. Now let me finish the story.

It was not long before the Knights of the Great Round Table became very generous with The People's gold. One would say, "Hey man, why don't thee take some of this gold from The People's Piggy and build thee many moats for all The People from thy Home Kingdom to make thy castles look contemporary." And Another would say, "Radical idea brother Knight. And while I am at it, why don't thee take some of this same gold and give thy Home Kingdom a new art museum with thy name blazoned in Great Letters across the front so thy Home People will honor thee."

BRAD SEABOURN

And the One would say, "Supremely radical idea brother Knight. You get your asses and I'll get my asses, and together we will start working on it immediately." (They did all their work at the Great Round Table with asses in those days.)

So, it was not long before all the Knights of the Great Round Table were dipping into The People's Piggy to use gold for this and that and the other.

They had a Great Time.

Then, One Day the King and the Knights of the Great Round Table discovered there was no more gold in The People's Piggy. "Aha!" they collectively said. "We will ask The People to pay more Tax. We will then borrow gold from the Private Piggies of the Kingdom and put this into The People's Piggy so that it will be exceedingly full once again."

And this they did.

Of course, this brought huge amounts of gold into The People's Piggy. It was not long before the Knights of the Great Round Table were overwhelmed with all the gold at their disposal. They soon realized they had enough gold to do just about anything.

So they invented Perks.

One Knight from the Home Kingdom of New York soon became known as "The Horse King" because he spent $18,508 from his Taxpayer-financed Office Expense Account to lease a horse for two years. Thus he could travel all over the Home Kingdom telling The Home People what a good job he was doing for them.

And then there was the Chairman Knight of the Kingdom Ways and Means Committee, who was also known as the "Meal King." He spent $104,661 of Campaign and Political Action Committee funds for meals and catering.

Even the Speaker of the Great Round Table, the "King of the Good Ol' Boys," spent $41,911 in Campaign Funds on meals for members of the Kingdom's leadership and others.

Finally, the Kingdom Minority Knight, otherwise known as the "Golf King,"spent $58,070 in Campaign Funds on golf.

It wasn't long before the Wonderful Kingdom and the Great Round Table were full of Knights getting Perks and whose asses would not work and who only wanted to take gold from The People's Piggy.

So, The Moral of this story is: "A Knight's ass is not worth a piggy."

"That's a gwoss stowy Dad."

I know. Good night, guys.

Taking a casual stroll across K-State with Mr. and Mrs. Budget

Upon hearing this title, many make jokes about me running around the newsroom in shorts and a T-shirt, blowing a whistle and yelling at walk-on reporters in active voice, "Modify, Jones! Modify!" or "Dammit, Smithers! You left your participle dangling! Drop and give me 20 synonyms for antidisestablishmentarianism!"

As romantic as that might sound, it just is not true. What I do do (doo doo) is offer help to reporters when the other desk editors don't have time. I also try to help writers with "style" decisions. Style in journalingo means standard words and ways to describe things.

For instance, if I was quoted by the Collegian, I would be identified as "David Frese, senior in journalism."

This description is what the Collegian means as style.

And if I could change one thing about this newspaper, it would be to identify all paid members of this University by the salary they earn (or don't earn) as listed in Kansas State University's Fiscal Year Annual Budget Document.

Then, "David Frese, senior in journalism," would be changed to "David Frese, $365 per month."

Now that's news.

And a column about a walk across campus would be radically changed as such:

So I was walking across campus the other day when I saw University President Jon Wefald, $133,650. He was walking his poodles, Toughie and Popcorn. I asked him how he was doing, and he said just fine. I kept on walking.

After seeing him, I was reminded of the time I saw Vice President for Institutional Advancement Bob Krause, $105,528, and Associate Vice President Pat Bosco, $77,352, playing tiddlywinks. They were wearing beanies. It was a strange memory.

So I tried to think of something else, and I remembered that I had parked my car illegally, and I ran to move it.

The Parking Supervisor, Dwain Archer, $30,672, was near my car. He was busy having a wheel lock put on a one-legged, poverty-stricken, blind widow's Buick and had not got to my car yet. I nonchalantly got in my car and quickly drove away.

I parked my car and went to the library. I asked the librarian at the desk, Carolyn Nellis, $29,584, if she had a copy of "Under the Volcano." She said to go ask the dean of libraries.

DAVID FRESE

"What's his name?" I asked.

She said his name was Brice Hobrock, $83,184.

Nevermind, I said, and went to Lafene, because my allergies were acting up. Dr. Ann Neuhaus, $73,308, gave me a prescription of Seldane (which really works for allergies).

I went to McCain Auditorium and saw Alfred Cochran, $34,038, who taught a really cool class last year at intersession. It was called the History of Country Music. It cost about $200 to enroll in.

Then I went to Ackert Hall to go to my most-hated class, Principles of Biology. The author of the biology workbook, John Zimmerman, $47,421, was outside looking for whipoorwills.

After that I went to the Student Government Office. I saw Student Body President Ed Skoog, $300 per month, and Student Body Vice-President Eric Henry, $200 per month. They said I should go to the Union office and talk to Director Jack Sills, $61,812, about those good peanut butter cookies.

"No," I said. I had to go to work at the Collegian. Once in the offices, I saw the Director of the Journalism School Carol Oukrop, $71,316, and KSDB-FM Station Manager Joe Montgomery, $19,464.

They said I should go to class once in a while. I said that was a bad idea and went out to Bramlage Coliseum to buy season football and basketball tickets, $100, to help out a flood victim.

Once I got there, Athletic Director Max Urick, $103,008, offered me a piece of gum. I asked him if they were still paying former athletic director Milt Richards' $82,008-a-year salary. He said he didn't know. (I checked the book. We are.)

He said to confirm this we could talk to football coach "Dollar" Bill Snyder, $?,???,???.

▶ EDUCATION

Keeping an eye on fundamentals the key to making learning work

Editor,

With sharpened pencils and fresh notebooks in hand, students are filing into classrooms throughout the nation. As with any new beginning, the start of the school year offers an opportunity to reflect on what will spell the difference between success and failure for these young people over the next nine months.

As I read the steady streams of literature bemoaning the current state of American education and suggesting a raft of reforms, I am continually struck by the fact that we often get so caught up in pondering new techniques and strategies that we fail to recognize the real basics of educational success. Continuing change and innovation are an integral part of any dynamic enterprise, and the education process should be no exception.

Nevertheless, I think that before we dwell on complicated refinements of the system, we should step back to consider the foundations upon which all further progress rests. Just as a debate over the relative merit of phonics vs. whole word methods of reading instruction are irrelevant to the child who does not yet have command of the ABCs, proponents of educational reform schemes must first consider whether the fundamental building blocks for learning are in place.

In many respects, the answers are so straightforward that it seems almost trite to state them. They are things like high expectations, a respect for learning and the continual commitment of responsible adults and the community as a whole. If all these elements were in place, they might not bear repeating.

Unfortunately, they are not. Somewhere along the way, too many have failed to recognize the personal responsibility we each have to transmit to younger generations the hope and power that springs from a strong education.

The formula isn't complicated.

First, we must emphasize the importance of education and instill respect for it. Parents have an absolutely critical role, but it is one which is too often neglected. A child's first lessons are learned in the home, and one of the most important is that education is the ticket to opportunity and a fulfilling life. A common thread among the life stories of individuals who have achieved success — many of them under difficult circumstances — is the presence of a parent or other caring adult who constantly stressed the value of education.

Making this point is not just a matter of saying, but also of doing. Avid readers generally have fond memories of being read to by their parents. Things as simple as turning off the television, asking children about their school day and participating in school activities all send the clear message that education comes first.

▶ WOMEN'S MAGAZINES

It's about time we gals figure out what's up with the vanity craze

Editor,

At last! A real insight into the true purpose of women's magazines. They are not designed for women's lives and needs, but for the pockets of big money advertisers of cosmetics and diet plans.

They are geared to tie the female gender to an endless regime of chasing hopelessly for the "right look" (they'll change it as soon as you get it), the "proper attitude" (demure and stupid are always in) and the correct "worries" (my makeup will smear!). Get it, ladies? It's the new way of saying be pretty, quiet and petty, and you'll be loved for the sweet little girls you should always stay.

Come on, this is the 1990s already! Get out of the slavery of "beauty parlors," out of the torture chamber of diet and aerobics frenzied health clubs, away from the cruel lights of make-up mirrors and those vicious bathroom scales. It's okay to be you. Just add up how much time, let alone money, you've been conned into spending, and you'll see that it's all a scam to keep you worried that you're never good enough, scared you'll be alone because you can't be good enough and too busy to do anything and be anything that you want to be.

Define your values! Set your goals. If you really are afraid of being so lonely, buy a dog instead. Just don't keep letting society or some magazine tell you step-by-step how to be a faithful, uncomplaining, obedient pet.

▶ GOD AND GAYS

It was mankind, not Bible, that made homosexuality wrong

Editor,

I am writing in response to the recent articles written regarding the nature of God and homosexuality.

It amazes me there are still people who perceive the exact mind and word of God to be revealed in the Bible.

In pursuit of my degree and my own faith, I have done considerable study in thought development, including theology.

Scholars believe the Old Testament to have been bound around the 10th Century B.C. This was about 900 years after Abraham lived and 4 billion years following the primordial earth. In the New Testament, Christ's life is reiterated in the Gospel Mark. Mark was about 40 years after Christ's death and is the basis for Matthew, Luke and John.

If the Bible were exact, nowhere in the literature of Christ does he impose rules or regulations regarding sexuality. His message was one of love, respect and self-discipline.

Biblical authors and early church leaders, out of ignorance, have imposed many regulations. These have condemned marriage, sexual positions, heterosexual intercourse, bacon consumption and nocturnal emissions.

They also disagreed with evolution and heliocentric (solar system) principles.

According to Time and Newsweek, recent studies suggest some homosexuality to be biological and of maternal origin.

I am a heterosexual who believes in individuality, a complex divine force and the principles of Christ. I may not be completely comfortable with homosexuality, yet I refuse to justify this through the belief that I am God or know of his or her precise desires.

▶ GAYS AND GOD

It may not be written, but being gay just isn't a natural thing

Editor,

As long as everyone is quoting the Bible, I would like to put in my cents. I think we need to sit back and take a look at exactly what the Bible is.

While I do believe most of the scriptures contained in the Holy Bible, I still remind myself of its origin — man, not God himself. Regardless of what inspired King James to form a committee to write down God's word, the fact still remains that it is man's interpretation. God himself may have given King James' men the ideas, but they were the ones who translated these ideas to scripture.

As for homosexuality itself, I have no question. It simply is not biologically correct, and I find it physically and morally repulsive. No laws banning discrimination due to sexual orientation will ever change this.

▶ SMOKING

Just keep the cancer sticks away from my lungs, if you please

Editor,

It is interesting to hear smokers always complaining that their rights are being violated because they aren't allowed to smoke in public buildings. I guess they don't consider the rights of non-smokers when they say this.

I am a non-smoker and I happen to believe that smokers do have the right to smoke if they wish. However, this does not give them the right to leave cancer-causing smoke in the air. I have to breathe.

The only time I think smoking should be allowed in a public building is if the area is enclosed and ventilated to the outside. If Ed Skoog wants to have this done in the Union, fine. But the smokers should pay for it. If not, smoke outside or at home.

If we could teach them

Witnessing a shooting turns violence into reality

Nothing in my student teaching handbook had prepared me for this. As I rushed to dive under the lunch table, all I could think was, "This can't be real."

But the gunshots I had heard were real. The girl lying on the floor was a very real confirmation that a shooting had taken place at Junction City High School. Luckily, the shooting was not lethal. Shannon Ingle, 14, the Junction City High School student who was shot Sept. 1, is in fair condition at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center, Sally Gast, evening nursing supervisor, said Wednesday.

The fact is that shootings, like the one in Junction City, are happening all over the country and not just in high schools. Elementary and middle schools are having problems with students taking weapons to school. The fact is something needs to be done.

Parents at the public forum that took place last Thursday in Junction City High's auditorium expect the schools to solve the problem single-handedly. The schools are, after all, the primary agents of socialization. But, wait, didn't that used to be the job of the parents?

It has become the job of the schools to be the students' primary care givers, along with educating students to be knowledgeable citizens. The schools have readily accepted the job of being the primary agent of socialization, but they can only go so far.

Parents need to take on the responsibility of being parents once again. Parents need to take responsibility for their children's actions, whether it's getting straight A's or taking a gun to school.

REBECCA OLIVAS
GUEST COLUMNIST

Parents have relied on the system to take care of their children for so long now. When the children develop problems, parents simply rely on the system to solve those problems.

But, the system cannot solve those problems alone.

Parents need to take an active interest in what their children are doing, inside and out of school. Gangs are blamed for part of the problem of violence in school and on the streets. If parents were aware of what their children were doing, perhaps gang activity would not be so prevalent.

Parent interest in student success is a time-honored tradition. That is why the schools have parent-teacher conferences and open houses. Schools want to have accessibility to parents.

In addition to parent action, legal action needs to take place to prevent students from bringing weapons to school. Metal detectors are not the answer. Bob Hertzel, director of the Fort Riley Counseling Center, said as much in the Sept. 3 issue of the Collegian. Something more needs to be done.

Stricter enforcement of gun control laws would be a start. If guns were not as accessible to youths on the street, perhaps there would be fewer guns in the schools. Parents can take the initiative to write their congressmen to require stricter gun control laws in their state and in the country. According to the Aug. 2 issue of Newsweek, more than 1,600 people were killed with guns by juveniles under the age of 18 in 1991, and three of every 10 juvenile murder arrests involved a victim below the age of 18 in 1991.

The schools cannot solve the problem alone, and they should not be expected to. Parents and concerned citizens can contribute, and maybe our schools will once again be the "halls of education."

I think that the large turnout at the public forum last week is a good indication that Junction City can get its school back on track. The parents' comments made it seem possible that they are willing to take responsibility for their children and perhaps prevent this type of violence from occurring again. At least, I hope so. I want the opportunity to teach the children.

Kile tosses no-hitter against hapless Mets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON (AP) — A season that began with the most personal of losses for Darryl Kile peaked Wednesday night with the most professional of victories.

Kile, a low-budget starter on a multimillion-dollar staff, pitched baseball's second no-hitter in five days, leading the Houston Astros to a 7-1 victory over the New York Mets.

"The only thing I can think of that would be more exciting would be to win the seventh game of the World Series," said Kile, his hair matted from a post-game champagne dousing.

"I thought I'd be nervous in the ninth, but I just wanted to make certain I kept doing the things that got me that far."

Despite the jubilation, it didn't take Kile long to recall the first day of spring training, when he was told his father had developed a blood clot in the brain. Five days later, David Kile died.

"It's something I wish he could have been here to see and be a part of, and who knows, maybe he did," Kile said.

Kile, backed by excellent plays from third baseman Ken Caminiti and shortstop Andujar Cedeno in the seventh inning, threw Houston's first no-hitter since Mike Scott clinched the National League West championship with a 2-0 victory over San Francisco on Sept. 25, 1986.

"To tell the truth, he's had better stuff two or three times this year, but location-wise and curveball-wise, it was one of his top games," catcher Scott Servais said.

Kile (15-6) struck out nine and walked one. His gem came after Jim Abbott pitched a no-hitter for the New York Yankees against Cleveland on Saturday.

'93 NO-HITTERS

Sept. 4	New York Yankee Jim Abbott against Cleveland Indians
Sept. 8	Houston Astro Darryl Kile against New York Mets

"He's had that kind of stuff several times this season, but you have to be very lucky to throw a no-hitter," pitching coach Bob Cluck said. "It certainly wasn't me. I didn't say a word to him after the fourth."

Seattle's Chris Bosio pitched the other no-hitter in the majors this year, against Boston on April 22. The last NL no-hitter was by Los Angeles' Kevin Gross on Aug. 17, 1992.

An Astrodome crowd of 15,684 stood as Kile finished it off in the ninth by retiring Todd Hundley on a routine grounder and striking out pinch-hitters Tito Navarro and Chico Walker.

"You won't see a better breaking ball than that, and you won't see a better-pitched game than that," Mets manager Dallas Green said. "That's not a cheap fastball he's got, either.

"You could have put a lot of clubs up there against Darryl Kile tonight, and he still would have thrown a no-hitter. They made three great plays behind him," Green said.

It was the sixth no-hitter against the Mets and the first since San Francisco's Ed Halicki did it in 1975.

The loss was yet another indignity for the Mets, who have the worst record in the major leagues since their expansion season of 1962.

But while Drabek ($4.25 million) and Swindell ($3.75 million) have struggled this season, going a combined 18-26, Kile ($247,500) has emerged as the Astros' best pitcher.

Kile pitched himself onto the All-Star team, going 10-1.

thinking POSITIVE

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Stephanie Liester has an attitude.

A positive attitude, that is.

"A positive attitude is very important to me," said Liester, a senior outside hitter on the Wildcat volleyball team. "You can't get down, and everything has to be positive."

Liester came to K-State as a sophomore after starting her career at Southern Illinois with Patti Hagemeyer, who is now K-State's volleyball coach.

"I knew it wouldn't be easy," Liester said. "I believed in Patti and the long-term goals. At times, it did get hard, but I don't see myself as a quitter."

Liester said a big part of her positive attitude came from her parents, and they allowed her to make her own decision about sticking with the program.

"My parents are very supportive," she said. "When I had to make the decision about quitting the team, my parents were there for me. But, they still allowed me to make my own decision."

Now, two years after having to make that decision, Liester said she is glad she stayed with the program.

"I know that I'm going to have to be a larger part of the offense this season," Liester said.

"I believe my knowledge of the game is going to help me be a good player this year."

Liester's expanded role in the offense was seen right away this past weekend as she led the Cats to two wins at the Kansas State Invitational. In matches against Tulsa and Oregon State, Liester led the team in kills. At the end of the tournament, Liester was the only Wildcat to be selected to the all-tournament team.

In her first season with the team, six players quit, and the team suffered with a 10-19 record.

The Cats' record dropped to 7-22 last season, including a last-place finish in the Big Eight.

She said she hopes to change the attitude of how the volleyball program is viewed.

"Our record over the past hasn't given us any respect around the Big Eight," Liester said. "We are now out to change that image."

A year ago, Liester was not known for her offensive play but for her defensive play. She entered the season as No. 10 on K-State's career digs chart.

"Defense is important to me," Liester said.

"I want to be the conference leader in digs, and I want to break the school record, also."

Liester spent the entire summer working on improving all aspects of her game here in Manhattan instead of going home for vacation.

"I spent a lot of time getting ready for this season during the summer," she said. "Several other players stayed here at school. We ran and lifted weights at least four times a week."

Hagemeyer said Liester has worked hard on her hitting.

"Stephanie has really concentrated on developing her shots," Hagemeyer said. "She is now able to mix up her shots, and she now has the ability to not be predictable."

"In junior high school, I was kind of awkward," she said.

"Then in my freshman and sophomore years of high school, I suddenly realized that I could hit the ball."

With this being her last year of eligibility, Liester said she has to set a good example for the other players.

"It all goes back to a positive attitude," she said. "I have to set an example of how hard to work and how to be a good person. This is my last year here, and I want to leave with the other players that they can accomplish whatever they want."

▶CATS SIGN AGGIE QUARTERBACK

Matt Miller, a 6-foot-2, 195-pound quarterback from Texas A&M, has transferred to K-State, football coach Bill Snyder announced Wednesday.

Miller spent the past two seasons at Texas A&M. He will have two years of eligibility remaining next year after he sits out this season, fulfilling NCAA guidelines.

He redshirted with the Aggies in 1991 and played in two contests as a redshirt freshman last year — against Stanford and Southern Methodist — but did not attempt a pass.

The San Diego Union listed Miller among the top three quarterbacks in California when he was a senior at San Diego's Mt. Carmel High School. He was named the California High School Amateur Athlete of the Year in 1990 after passing for more than 2,300 yards and 15 touchdowns.

In addition to Miller, Snyder announced freshman walk-on J.W. Wright would join the Wildcat roster. The 6'3", 190-pound quarterback was the all-time leading passer at Burlingame High School. He was named to the Class 2A first-team all-state squad last fall.

▶BREWERS SLIP PAST ROYALS 2-1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Ricky Bones pitched a two-hitter, and John Jaha hit his 15th homer as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the struggling Kansas City Royals 2-1 Wednesday night.

The third-place Royals, who lost to the last-place Brewers in their last game of the series, fell seven games behind American League-leading Chicago.

Bones (10-9) retired the last 21 batters. He set a career-high for victories and pitched the best low-hit game in his career.

Hipolito Pichardo started for Kansas City and left with a 1-1 tie after five innings. It was Pichardo's first start after a stint on the 15-day disabled list.

Crudup suspended after DWI charge

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — A second brush with the law has resulted in a one-semester suspension for Jevon Crudup, a senior forward on the Missouri basketball team.

Crudup, a 6-foot-9 starting forward, was suspended after his arrest by the Missouri State Highway Patrol early Tuesday for driving while intoxicated and failing to drive on the right side of the road.

On Aug. 29, he and teammate Melvin Booker were given municipal summonses for disturbing the peace after a fight at the university's Memorial Union.

Coach Norm Stewart said after the first incident that he was considering a one-game suspension for each player. After the arrest Tuesday, Stewart said he would suspend Crudup from the team this semester but could change the punishment when the cases are cleared.

"I just feel that at the time, with everything going on, that we need to do something, and we're going to do it," Stewart said. "I'm going to try to do it in Jevon's best interest, but we've got the ballclub to think about and all the other things that are going on."

If Crudup is kept out until the end of the first semester, he would miss four regular-season games and two exhibitions. If he is held out until the next term, he would miss 12 regular-season games, including conference games against K-State and Colorado.

REVIEW

"Bottom's Up" goes belly-up; lacks character depth, storyline

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Gordon Bancroft is an empty bottle of a human being, drinking his way into complete oblivion. "I tore everything to pieces — not to see how it worked, but how it came apart."

Jeff Putnam's "Bottoms Up" takes the reader through the sewer of alcoholism, irresponsibility and into Gordon's deep lack of consciousness. This is a tale of his incessant drunkenness, on wine brandy, whiskey, beer, copulation and cooking sherry.

Alcohol is the religion of the jobless Gordon's life; every person is merely a vehicle to obtain the beloved bottle.

The characters Putnam attempts to create lack depth and individuality.

The story also draws the reader into Bancroft's extremely demented and never-ending sexual exploits. He manages to draw seven women into the web of his twisted, meaningless life.

Gordon is forever promising to hop on the wagon. He begins by entering the Serenity Workshop at the urging of Jan, a loving, store security guard with the heart of a social worker.

Once away from the hospital, he can't seem to find the gumption to save himself.

Putnam unsuccessfully attempts to blame the unfeeling American society for Gordon's woes. He is simply unmotivated, disgusting, repulsive and drank himself into the sewer of society.

His jobs, which never last for long, range from retrieving and selling golf balls to acting as a transvestite servant for the Countess, to sorting garbage at a halfway house, to transcribing doctors notes.

"Bottoms Up" reads almost as interestingly as a simpleton's daily journal. This is not the type of book one simply can't put down — this is the kind of book one could put down somewhere near 27 times in one week.

The characters Putnam attempts to create lack depth and individuality. The sole intriguing character, the countess who has poetry written for her late husband's 107th birthday and insists all of her servants dress in drag, graces a mere 20 pages of the novel.

Putnam's use of the English language is abominable. His use of the metaphor is bland and sophomoric, with uses such as "apparently his life had come apart in the manner of a dandelion or a milkweed."

The plot is completely nonexistent. A well-supported thematic purpose is not to be found. It is simply 320 pages of vile, repulsive, disgusting, purposeless literary trash.

Fishheads open at free FallFest '93

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

This might sound fishy, but K-State is invited to a free concert Saturday afternoon.

FallFest '93 is scheduled at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex West Lawns and will immediately follow the K-State football game.

FallFest '93 replaces the Welcome Back concert sponsored by Union Program Council in previous years. Headliners for the event are The Fishheads from Omaha, Neb.

Sponsored by the Union Program Council, FallFest '93 will also feature Truck Stop Love, entertainer Ron Alexander and comedian David Naster.

Charla Bailey, UPC program advisor, said The Fishheads will be performing three different types of music: reggae, ska and classic rock.

"They really pump you up, and that's great for the outdoor show," she said.

Verne Claussen, UPC special events chair, said the band is quite interactive with the audience.

"They love to get the crowd involved and have fun with the music," he said.

Opening the show at 4 p.m. is Manhattan's own Truck Stop Love, playing new material and promoting an upcoming album release.

At 5 p.m., Alexander will fire up the crowd with games and fun activities.

Naster will entertain the audience with comedy during The Fishheads' break.

"This concert is to help students and give them some free entertainment," Bailey said.

Because previous Welcome Back concerts have drawn small crowds, Bailey said UPC wanted to try a different approach this year. She said a recent face-lift, along with a delayed concert date, should help with the crowd size.

"Being three weeks into the semester, we moved the date back to give students a chance to get the details (of school) ironed out," Bailey said.

Claussen said although less money had been allocated for the event this year, a different location should help with attendance.

"We're hoping we can help them after the game, " Claussen said. "They don't have to get in the rush to leave the stadium."

In case of bad weather, FallFest '93 will be moved to the K-StateUnion Courtyard and Union Station.

FALLFEST '93 PLAYS FREE FOR K-STATE

All of K-State has been invited to a free, yes, free concert this Saturday. Here's everything you need to know about FallFest '93.

WHO'LL BE THERE: Omaha band The Fishheads are scheduled to headline with their own interactive brand of music, and local band Truck Stop Love will also perform. Entertainer Ron Alexander and comedian David Naster will also be there to provide some free diversion.

WHEN: Immediately following the K-State vs. Western Kentucky football game on Saturday.

WHERE: Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex west lawns. In case of bad weather, FallFest will be moved to the Union Courtyard and Union Station.

WHO'S INVITED: Everybody.

Triathlon canceled because of flooding

DERYL CUNNINGHAM
Collegian

The Wildcat Triathlon on Sept. 11 has been canceled because of summer flood waters.

The triathlon is a race that has three events: swimming, biking and running. The swimming event was to be .3 miles, biking 9.9 miles and the final event, running, 3.1 miles.

"We were expecting over 200 entries from all over the country," Alberto Delgado, associate professor of mathematics, said.

Contestants usually range in age from 16-60 years old. Most contestants complete the race between an hour and an hour and 40 minutes.

"It is a good race for people to participate in," Delgado said.

Delgado was in the race six years ago.

Delgado was in the race six years ago.

"We were really looking forward to it this year," Tracy Anderson, K-State graduate, said.

The Tuttle Creek river pond area and the swimming pond no longer exist because of flooding this summer. The triathalon's events were to take place in these areas.

"We tried looking for an alternate location for the race at CiCo park, but the swim would have been shortened," Anderson said. "The triathlon club was also thinking about changing the race to a biathlon but did not think the event would be as good."

Contestants who entered the race will be refunded any money they had paid, Delgado said.

The Wildcat Triathlon Club was sponsoring the event this year and also sponsored the event last year. In past years, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex sponsored the triathlon.

New bar to focus on live music

DowBows promises variety of entertainment

MATT BECHTOLD
Collegian

REVIEW

The opening of a new Aggieville bar should bring a boost to the Manhattan entertainment scene.

Dave Streeter, owner of DowBows, said the bar is making a commitment to bring in the best acts that people will want to see.

DowBows, located at 1120 Moro St., has had quite a history. In the past, the bar served as a location for the bars Brothers and Study Hall. Last semester, it was Rhythm and Brews.

Original owner, Ken Snook, who owns Snookies Bar, said he wanted to re-establish live entertainment in Manhattan.

DowBows was created to do just that, Streeter said.

"I want to make DowBows a place where everyone is going to have a good time and will want to come back," Streeter said.

Renovations should make the location more inviting to all crowds. The current decor is dark with black painted walls and ceilings.

Plenty of tables and chairs give everyone the opportunity to relax and enjoy the music and comedy there. However, this results in a smaller stage area, something that may hurt DowBows' long-run ability to get national music acts.

DowBows has a good sound system as everyone should be able to tell even from outside the club. Although volume preference is a personal decision, DowBows is definitely not a place for visiting with your friends or dates.

Other renovations included a new pool table in the back. Unfortunately, there's just the one, so it's almost always occupied.

Live music makes up most of DowBows line-up, as will be the case every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night. Streeter said DowBows will present mainly rock and alternative bands. However, DowBows will also be host to other styles of music, such as jazz and reggae, on Thursdays.

The bar will also boast of one of Aggieville's best comedy schedules on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Streeter said the comedy schedule includes top names, the same stature as those seen on HBO and other national comedy shows.

Streeter said DowBows will always have live entertainment of the highest caliber, whether it be local cover-bands, national music acts or a nationally known comedians. He said he wanted to make DowBows comparable to Lawrence's Bottleneck with its live music and comparable to the late Bushwhackers with its comedy.

With the completion of renovations, some quality acts and a bit of good business, DowBows could become a great addition to Aggieville's entertainment scene.

Governor hopefuls seek state support

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., already a target of choice in the race for the Democratic nomination for governor, came much closer to announcing his candidacy for the office Wednesday.

Slattery issued a statement saying he does not plan to run for re-election to the congressional seat he has occupied since 1983. The announcement appears to be a sign Slattery will enter the governor's race.

However, his press secretary, Jim McLean, would only say, "It means what it says."

The governor's race's two declared candidates, former House Speaker Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg, and state Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, outlined publicly Tuesday what they see as Slattery's weaknesses.

Both said his service in Congress will hurt him.

Barkis suggested Slattery is considering the race because he sees the governor's office as a base from which to run for the U.S. Senate. Wagnon suggested Slattery might be Gov. Joan Finney's designated successor.

Finney announced Friday she will not seek another four-year term, and attention focused immediately on Slattery as a possible candidate. McLean said Barkis and Wagnon are responding to the enthusiasm among Democrats for a Slattery candidacy.

Barkis called a news conference to tell reporters he has no intention of dropping out of the race, and he believes his support is broad and growing. He also said a Slattery candidacy would make it tougher for Wagnon to get elected.

When Finney announced her decision not to seek re-election, Wagnon portrayed herself as the front-runner.

"Marvin may have been holding a news conference because all of the speculation has been that he is fading out of the race," Wagnon said.

McLean declined to answer the criticisms of Barkis and Wagnon, saying a response doesn't serve any purpose unless Slattery enters the race.

Gore a hit with Letterman audience

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — He wowed the "Late Show" audience. He had the band eating out of his hand, the drummer hitting his punch lines with rimshots and riffs. And his Top Top 10 list lampooned the vice presidency.

A big hand, please, ladies and gentlemen, for Al Gore.

Yes, it was the vice president who poked fun at himself Wednesday night on CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman," using the time to push President Clinton's plans to streamline government.

"What do I call you?" Letterman asked, welcoming Gore onstage. "Do I call you Mr. Vice President? Do I call you Al? Do I call you Mr. Gore? Do I call you senator?"

Gore waited a half-beat and replied, "Your Adequacy will do."

Barrump-bump!

Gore, relaxed by a standing ovation and Letterman's welcome, went on to smash government-issue ashtrays and recited his own Top 10 list of Good Things About Being Vice President. (No. 5: Dan Quayle and Gerald Ford are pretty easy to beat during Vice Presidents' Week on "Jeopardy!")

Friend knows too much

Dear Cassandra,

I am really in trouble because I just know too much.

About a week ago, on a Friday night, some friends and I got really drunk — so drunk, in fact, that we all slept on my friend's floor. We didn't figure DUIs for all of us would be very cool.

Anyway, at about 3 a.m. I woke up to see "David" going at it with "Nancy." Kissing and much, much more. Normally that would be pretty OK, but David is my friend "Allison's" boyfriend!

I couldn't believe he would cheat on her like that, and now I don't know what to do. Like I said, I just know too much.

Should I tell Allison about what David did? I mean, she has a right to know if her boyfriend is screwing around on her, right? Or should I just keep my mouth shut?

Signed,
Trying to Do the Right Thing

Dear Spike Lee,

Yep, that's a doozie of a situation to be caught in.

I certainly don't envy you, but I think I have a word or two of advice for ya.

First, don't immediately run to Allison and tell her what David did. This isn't fourth grade anymore, and no one likes a tattle tale.

I suggest you approach David and tell him you're concerned about Allison because she's your friend. Explain how you feel she has a right to know about his apparent "cuddle-confusion."

Tell him you'd prefer it if he'd talk to her since this concerns the two of them . But insist that he tell her or you'll probably step in.

I think he'll get the hint.

Students tried to kill mold

any complaints from students who were having allergies because of the mold.

The basement walls were painted a couple of years ago, but after six months, they looked like they did before, Gibson said. The students tried killing the mold with Lysol but were unsuccessful.

Fixing the molded walls will require more than a coat of paint, Randy Slover, director of maintenance, said.

The shrubs around the building are holding in water, he said. They would have to be removed. The dirt next to the building on the west side would have to be dug out and the walls treated. The dirt would then have to be replaced and the interior walls repaired.

Slover said the University has mold problems in other buildings, too. He said the mold is especially bad this year because of all the moisture.

"This is not a problem we can fix overnight," Slover said. "It is a labor-intensive, ongoing problem," Slover said.

The project to clean up the mold has been in the maintenance budget for five years, but it has been delayed because of more immediate problems, Slover said.

"I sympathize with them," Slover said. "But we only have so many people and so much money. This is nothing compared to the devastation done to Anderson Hall by the lightning. We are concentrating our efforts there now."

"Realistically, we know the walls probably won't get fixed before we leave," Gibson said. "It's just frustrating. We called the health department, maintenance and the sanitary departments, and we couldn't even get anybody to come look at it."

Slover said there is a possibility the walls could get fixed this spring if nothing else comes up.

Until then, the students said they are considering taking a sample of their mold to a biology lab to be analyzed.

REVIEW

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Vincent J. Cardinal, author of the play "Colorado Catechism," came to Manhattan to watch a performance of his play by the KSU Theatre on Wednesday in Nichols Theatre. Cardinal based his characters on high school theater students he taught in New York City.

Play blends humor, tragedy

"Colorado Catechism" has dark tones

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

"Colorado Catechism" is a romantic comedy tainted with tragedy.

It is a play that delivers a message, over and over again.

Ty Wain, played by Tim Aumiller, senior in theater, is a New York painter struggling to overcome addictions, fill the emptiness in his life and to paint again.

His last hope lies within a portrait of Donna, the woman he met while drying out at a rehab center in Cripple Creek, Colo. Donna is played by Laura Camien, senior in theater.

The story is told through flashbacks as Ty struggles to envision what should appear on his canvas.

The audience is drawn into the drama of the entrapment of addictions and sees the characters struggle to define and live with love, while trying to keep one another's best interests at heart.

The production was effective, drawing the audience into the tragedy that underlies every action as the characters break the bonds of addiction and elevate themselves to a higher plane.

Ever-present humor lightens the dark tones, but the sadness and regret is always there, gnawing at the audience.

Camien was the highlight of the show, bringing her character to an extremely elevated level of being.

Camien also brought some incredibly humorous lines to life.

The line "You are bent over with the weight of your own ego," came across hysterically. Her performance was extraordinary.

Aumiller's characterization was also superb, but Ty lacked the zest that entertains.

He was correctly portrayed as the brooding, whiny artist. He drew the audience into the emptiness inside his soul and brought them through revelations.

A flaw is the fact that the theme of the play is reiterated repeatedly. It is driven into the ground.

This production makes one dig deep inside one's self to the emotions repressed within the soul.

It offers one the chance to learn from lost souls.

Overall, "Colorado Catechism" is well worth one's time.

Playwright drew from teaching experience

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Vincent J. Cardinal's inspiration for the play "Colorado Catechism" was the students with drug and alcohol problems he encountered as a high-school theater teacher.

"My students weren't learning, and I wanted to know why. So, I started learning about drug and alcohol abuse," Cardinal said.

"If you are drunk through adolescence, you never fully grow," Cardinal said. "If you have the maturing experiences without feeling anything, you don't mature."

Cardinal, who was in Manhattan to see KSU Theatre's production of "Colorado Catechism," said this contributed heavily to the characters' development.

He said the play's characters are very adolescent.

The character Ty was based on a student of Cardinal's who ended up living near him in New York City.

"The authenticity of the experience came from the fact that I've been through so much that has happened to Ty and Donna through my students," Cardinal said. "It's hard to have a relationship and be responsible to the other person's needs."

Cardinal said he wrote "Colorado Catechism" in 1989 while completing graduate school at Yale University.

"The play was first produced on a budget of $15 at Yale," Cardinal said. "I found out on graduation day that Circle Repertory Theatre had accepted it for production."

Later, the play made it to the West Coast.

Cardinal said actor Timothy Daly's wife, Amy VonNostrand, had auditioned for the play but wasn't cast.

However, Cardinal said, she loved the play. Cardinal said Daly, who is a cast member on the NBC show "Wings," and VonNostrand bought the production rights and then produced it in Los Angeles.

Cardinal said Daly's production company is looking into the possibility of a movie.

"We'll see what happens," he said.

The play is scheduled to open this spring in London, he said.

Cardinal said his theater experience began at an early age.

"I lived near Kent State University, and when I was eight I was riding my bike by the place where auditions were taking place," he said. "I walked in and auditioned without realizing it. I have worked in theater nonstop since then."

Cardinal has guided more than 50 plays from coast to coast.

He is also an invited member of Circle Repertory's Master Playwrights' and Theatre Lab, the resident playwright/director for Street Theatre Inc. and the literary adviser for off-Broadway's WPA Theatre.

In addition, Cardinal is an assistant professor at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

He said that by coming to K-State, he hopes he can inspire and teach budding playwrights and contribute to the students' working production.

"Perhaps, I can be a resource to the students of what the theater world is like," he said.

NOW PLAYING

The play "Colorado Cathechism" will be performed through Sept. 11 at 8 p.m. at the Nichols Theatre.

"My students weren't learning, and I wanted to know why. So, I started learning about drug and alcohol abuse."

1993 ROYAL PURPLE (from the 1992-93 school year) Stop by and pick yours up today!! 103 Kedzie Hall, or purchase one today $20 with a student ID, $25 without.

CAN YOU help? I am a sophomore veterinary student, who just lost a mortgage application decision (simply because I moved here from out of state). I also have three dogs (each less than 15 pounds) who are now out of a home. The four of us desperately need a place to live together. If you can be of assistance in providing or recommending a place for us to live in the Manhattan area, please call Jim Laessig at 539-4247. The important thing is living with my dogs, if possible; so where and/ or with whom I live is relatively unimportant.

COME FLY with us, K-State Flying Club has four airplanes. For best prices call Sam Knipp, 539-6193 after 5:30p.m.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

K-State interns hit the coasts

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Two K-State students worked over the summer with some of the top contenders in the late-night talk show wars.

Luke Ellis, senior in radio-television, served as a nine-week production intern for Jay Leno in Burbank, Calif.

Ellis, who had to complete an application and three phone interviews, said the internship was not a requirement for graduation, but he did it for additional experience.

Ellis said he viewed all aspects of television production.

"I did something different every day. Either I worked behind the scenes with props, wardrobe and the control booth or helped with the talent coordinator or the writers who wrote the skits and jokes for Jay," he said.

In addition, Ellis met several famous people, including Arnold Schwarzenegger, Wynonna Judd, Harrison Ford, Richard Simmons and Ed McMahon.

"The day I met Harrison Ford, I was in a sketch to be on TV for a funny skit," Ellis said.

"I was dressed up in a grape uniform like the grape Fruit of the Loom. Harrison Ford said to me 'I'm glad I didn't wear my matching suit or people would've made fun of me.' He was so nice. Meeting him was the biggest thrill of the trip."

Ellis described Leno as a man who is aware of every detail.

"I was nervous to meet Jay, but after seeing those stars every day, it got to where I tried not to notice them because they don't want special treatment," he said.

After completing his internship, Ellis expressed excitement for the experience.

"The L.A. experience was incredible. It was so exciting meeting people, but that's not the reason I was there. I really wanted to see how network production works," he said.

"Internships are very important. It's just like having an education major student teaching. This is the real life experience before going into the real world."

Sigg was selected last April out of 300 applicants after flying to New York for an interview.

She assisted a scenic designer to complete research for the show's new set at the historic Ed Sullivan Theatre.

Sigg worked in collaboration with the office of architect James Stewart Polshek for the selection of furnishings and fabrics.

Sigg said she met celebrities Donald Trump, Cindy Crawford, Bill Murray, Demi Moore and David Letterman.

She also said she enjoyed working with Letterman.

"He is very nice and sincere as well as great and funny," she said. "When I saw him on the elevator, he'd tell a joke. He's like a dad, only more hip."

Besides working on the set, Sigg said she played softball every Friday with the staff against other networks such as members from Today or NBC Nightly News.

"The staff was wonderful once I got to know everyone, almost like a close-knit family," she said.

"They were also very professional. But, playing softball together shows they're just like everyday average people which means celebrities are people, too."

Sigg said she met many wonderful people and will return to New York in December to visit.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1993 A COLLEGIAN SPECIAL SECTION ABOUT K-STATE FACULTY AND STAFF KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

PEOPLE & PROJECTS

■ K-State gets new coordinator of student activities

A new face has moved into the student government office.

Tricia Nolfi

Nolfi's job will entail working with the student government in a variety of ways.

Some of her duties will include advising and aiding student leaders such as Ed Skoog and Eric Henry, student body president and vice president.

She also will be putting together a new booklet for K-State students. It will be filled with policies, rules and ideas that will help students better understand their position and responsibility at K-State.

"Tricia's recommendations were outstanding. I knew she would be wonderful for K-State just by hearing her past employers rave about her. I knew we had to have her here," Franklin said.

Nolfi stressed her desire to improve upon K-State's student government. Although it is a solid structure, she said she believes a larger student representation should be reflected from campus.

K-State stands out from other universities, Nolfi said.

"It was the best I've ever been treated. The people were so nice and sincere. Plus, knowing I'd be working with Bernard Franklin helped me make my final decision," she said.

Changes from Nolfi can already be seen. The student government office changed its name to the Office of Student Activities and Services.

"Tricia wants to make every student, of any color or creed, feel comfortable. The final word is that we have a true talent working to help improve K-State," Franklin said.

While attending WIU, she served as program coordinator of student activities.

Her experiences include being the primary adviser and fiscal agent for the campus programming board, and coordinating various leadership and peer-education programs.

Before WIU she worked at Tulane University in New Orleans and at Baker University Center in Athens, Ohio.

A graduate from Ohio University, Nolfi holds a master's degree in education and a bachelor's degree in science of communication.

■ Psychology professor vice provost of research

A K-State psychology professor has begun his term as the new interim associate vice provost for research.

James Shanteau, who will be the interim position for one year, is continuing to teach in the psychology department while assuming the responsibilities of his new position.

James Shanteau

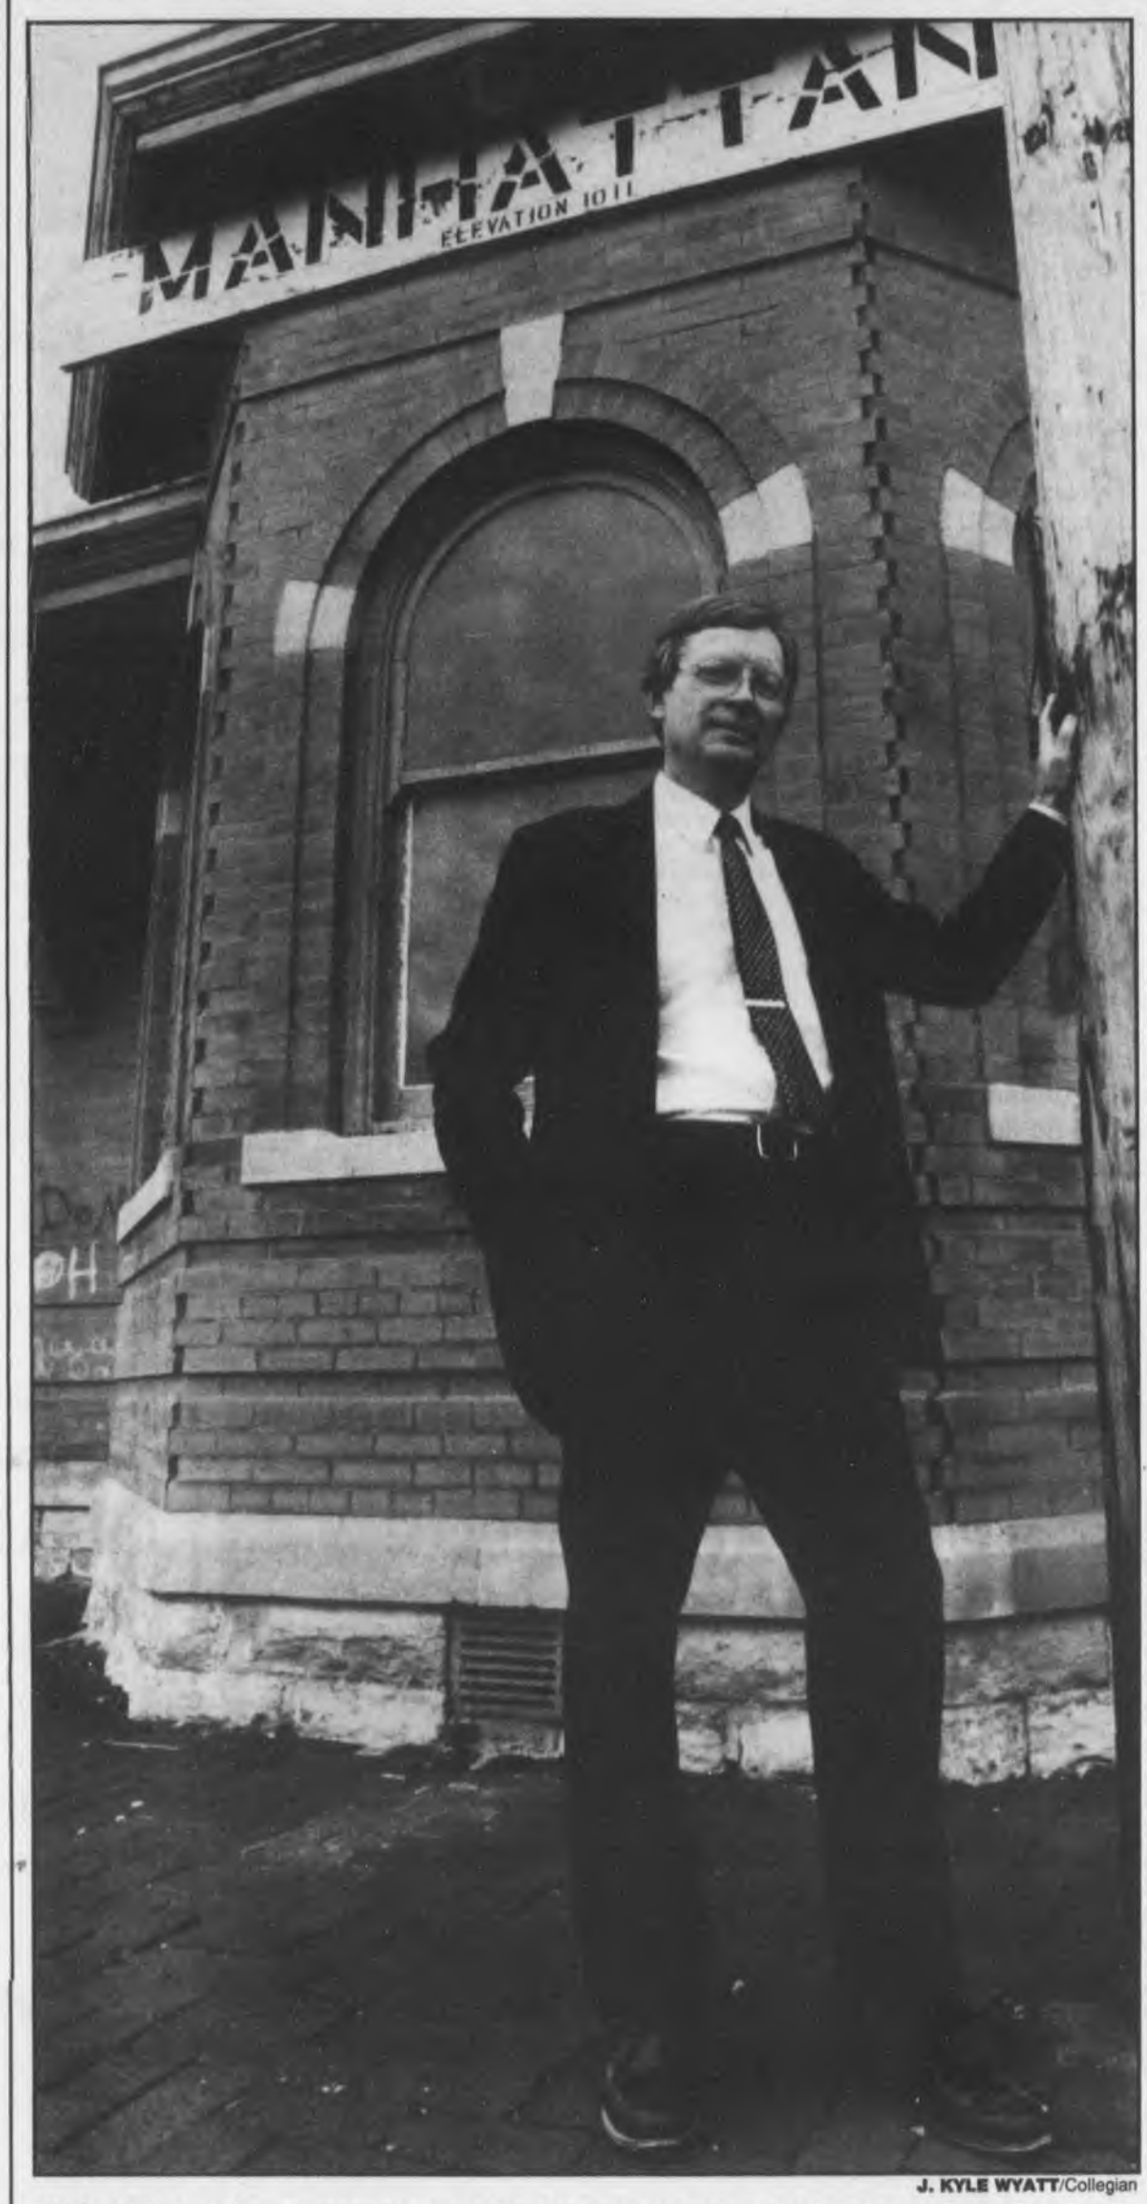
Shanteau will also serve as interim director for the office of research and sponsored programs.

As associate vice provost for research, Shanteau is responsible for ensuring University research projects are in compliance with research rules.

"We establish that Kansas State University is following appropriate procedures, and all projects here have been approved in the appropriate way," he said.

Shanteau also helps select faculty members who will receive funding for their research projects and travel.

He said he would also like to see other parts of the K-State campus involved in research.



"I've always felt that if you are active, you can be good in both teaching and researching," Shanteau said. "We want to provide the opportunity for people to be as active as they can be."

Shanteau's qualifications include working as a program officer for the National Science Foundation from 1989 to 1990. He has also obtained 16 grants for research work.

"I think he is extremely well-qualified, especially with his experience in getting grants and serving as a program officer," Tim Donoghue, vice provost for research, said. "I'm delighted he's agreed to do this on an interim basis."

The search for a permanent associate vice provost for research will begin as soon as possible, Donoghue said.

Michael Babcock, professor of economics, has researched the benefits of short line railroads. His study shows that short lines are good options for small Midwestern communities.

Railroad research benefits Midwest

Short-line railroads are becoming as common as large-rail lines, study shows

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Efficient rail transportation is a key factor in the economic viability of the Midwest.

Michael Babcock, professor of economics, upholds this view in his study "State Short Line Railroads and the Rural Economy."

The study was conducted by Babcock with Eugene Russell, professor of civil engineering, and Marvin Prater and John Morrill, graduate students in economics.

Short-line railroads are becoming as prominent as large Class I railroads like the Santa Fe and the Union Pacific cut back, Babcock said.

"The Santa Fe and the Union Pacific, as well as other large Class I railroads, are moving to core systems. They're more concerned with the long hauls between major markets," Babcock said.

Short-line railroad companies have purchased some of the tracks abandoned by the Class I railways.

There are 12 short lines in Kansas, said John Rosacker, research analyst at the Kansas Department of Transportation.

"Short lines keep rural communities' economic development options open. If a town wanted a company to move in, it'd have a better chance with rail service as a possible transportation option," Babcock said.

One of the Kansas short lines is the Kyle Railroad.

"Short lines are the retail end of the railroad transportation industry. We provide the shipper with access to large lines. The short-line service keeps the rail alternative alive. The short line's future has the potential of being bright," Rick Cecil, president of Kyle, said.

Babcock said he found shippers were generally satisfied with the short-line service.

"Shippers said the short line gives highly personalized service. With the smaller number of shippers, they can do the little things to make life easier," Babcock said.

"Rail service can transport more grain efficiently and with much less energy than trucks. It's good for the state to maintain rail systems."
MICHAEL BABCOCK
PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS

A majority of the shippers that use short lines are in the agriculture business.

The Farmer's Co-op in Isabel, southwest of Wichita, is one of those shippers.

The co-op appreciates the rail service, especially at harvest time, Charlie Swayze, general manager, said.

"We like to go by rail, particularly during harvest season. We ship out a lot of wheat by rail. The railways can carry large volumes of grain at a time. But, we don't get the service as much as we'd like, only about once a week," he said.

There are several reasons why the short lines are valuable.

The study cites lower labor costs, providing superior shipping service due to closer work with customers and reduction of truck shipment.

"Rail service can transport more grain efficiently and with much less energy than trucks. It's good for the state to maintain rail systems. Increased rail use would mean less truck traffic and less road damage. It also allows rural communities to attract more benefits," Babcock said.

Short lines are not without their problems.

"They are less able to financially comply with large train requirements. This makes it harder to establish a competitive price. The short lines are highly dependent on large railroads for equipment and market access. Their financial survivability depends on the Class Is," Babcock said.

Smaller railroads have some obstacles to overcome, but their success will help communities and businesses.

"The rural community can use all the positives they can get. The short line is one of them. Small towns and businesses are high risk operations, and they can't risk losing anything," Babcock said.

AWARD

Economics professor honored with University research award

A K-State economics professor received an award with a $3,000 cash payment for his research.

Michael Babcock, professor of economics, was named the recipient of this year's Edgar S. Bagley Research award.

The award was established to recognize the contributions made by Professor Bagley during his 43 years at K-State as a teacher, researcher and administrator.

The award is given each year to professors who have done outstanding research.

"The award serves as a way of honoring faculty members who have had a long and illustrious career at K-State. It motivates and rewards their research," Jim Ragan, professor in economics, said.

Babcock said he was pleased to have been chosen for the award.

"I was very proud. It raises faculty morale. The award is a good thing to have," Babcock said.

Babcock's nomination was justified, Ragan said.

"He's been very active over the last four years. His research is providing guidance to policy makers. He's had a great deal of success in what he's doing," Ragan said.

Ragan said he was impressed by Babcock's lifetime record and his commitment to furthering research.

"He has received considerable national recognition for his research," Ragan said.

Babcock has been at K-State for the last 20 years. He has worked on 14 federal and state research projects, generally in the field of agriculture transportation.

The research has led to 40 published articles in professional journals and a transportation reference text he co-authored called "Freight Transportation Market Shares."

While this is the second time Babcock's research on transportation has been recognized on campus, it has also gained national attention.

The Transportation Research Forum presented him with the A.T. Kearney prize in 1987 and in 1989.

He also received the United Parcel Service Foundation Award in 1990.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Bill McNally, junior in public relations and assistant director of athletic facilities, paints one of three recently built disability-seating facilities at KSU Stadium Wednesday afternoon. The facilities are a new addition to the stadium, constructed as part of the new Dev Nelson Press Box.

Stadium Upkeep

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Many people do not realize how much work goes into maintaining KSU Stadium and Wagner Field throughout the year — especially during football season.

"It amazes the workers how much it takes," Bill McNally, junior in public relations and assistant director of athletic facilities, said.

Preparations at the beginning of the season entail cleaning the turf, picking up trash and cleaning the stadium.

The turf is cleaned by a large vacuum-like machine called a turf sweeper, McNally said.

The turf was laid by a company called AstroTurf and the painting is done by them.

"It takes about three to four days to paint the turf," McNally said.

It is usually painted once a year, but last year, painting was done two to three times due to the weather, McNally said.

Painting the wall surrounding the field, the railings and steps is done at the beginning of the semester.

"We try to have the painting done before the first game," McNally said.

Preparations for a game include making sure everything is clean and well-maintained, said Mark Bonjour, director of athletic facilities and assistant director of athletics.

Checking the bleachers for safety, setting out tables and chairs, sweeping the turf and basic touch-up are a few of the duties performed before the game, he said.

After games, the stadium clean-up crew locks the gate and makes sure everything is secure, McNally said.

ROTC usually comes out on Sundays and cleans the entire stadium and parking lots, Bonjour said.

Gas-powered blowers are used to move all the trash to one side of the stadium. It is picked up and hauled away, he said.

"These look like backpacks, but they have a wand which blows air," Bonjour said.

Stadium clean-up takes about five hours.

Field maintenance is also done during the winter months.

"We try and leave the field alone until spring practice, but is is occasionally cleared of snow and ice during the year," Bonjour said.

"It's tough because we have to make sure we don't damage the turf," Bonjour said.
